A monster meeting in favor of "Sunday-closing" was held in Central Music Hall, Chicago, September 22. The hall was literally packed with all kinds of people, three-fourths of them being voters. More than a dozen speeches were made, all heartily cheered by the audience. The popular sentiment is undoubtedly in favor of this movement.

Marion Harland, in speaking of the various phases of woman's philanthropic activity, beautifully says: "Under whatever name we may be working, our end is the same. It needs only that good women and true look into each other's faces and talk together to make sure of this. 'The way is narrow; can we then, far sparate, reach our heavenly home?'"

Miss Sallie A. Moore, of Philadelphia, president of St. Malachy's ladies' total abstinence society, has the honor of being the first Catholic woman to address a public assembly in the presence of a bishop and priests. This was at the last annual convention of the Catholic Total Abstinence Union held in August at Cleveland, Ohio. Miss Moore sends this assurance to Miss Willard: "I am with you heart and soul in the grand motto, 'No sectarianism in religion, no sectionalism in politics, no sex in citizenship; but each and all of us for God and home and native land.'"

The World's Fair committee has named the brewing "industry" and the wine and spirit "trade" as branches of commercial enterprise entitled to prominent representation at the great exposition of 1892. An exchange suggests that in view of this fact the idea of locating the exposition buildings on Blackwell's, Ward's and Randall's islands may not be inappropriate after all, since the city's penal, insane and charitable institutions situated on these islands would form a fine background for the beer and liquor exhibits.

William Gooderham, of Toronto, Canada, died Saturday, September 14, just as he was closing a prayer in the Haven for fallen women, established through his munificence. He was one of the most celebrated millionaires and philanthropists in the Dominion and a warm friend of the W. C. T. U. The immense property that he gave without stint to every good cause was accumulated by his father in the brewing business, but the son used it to raise a revenue for Christ and his cause. At the time of his death he was maintaining seven men in mission fields, and this was but an item among his constant and varied gifts.

Many people neglect a cold, thinking it will go as it came. Frequently, with serious results, the cold of to-day may be the pneumonia of to-morrow. Nothing will cure a cough or cold so rapidly as Dr. Davis' Compound Syrup of Wild Cherry and Tar. Its reputation has been established for over fifty years as the best remedy for coughs, colds, bronchitis, asthma, all throat and lung troubles. For croup and whooping-cough it is invaluable. Mothers will be saved much anxiety and loss of children by having Davis' Wild Cherry and Tar always on hand. Consumption has been cured many times by its use. One dollar bottles hold two and a half times as much as a 50c. bottle.

Christ did not say: "Come and see our grand church, come and hear our eloquent pastor, come and hear our splendid choir, come and see our elegant people, come and see what a good time we have, come to our festival, but don't forget to bring a 'quarter' with you;" but he said: "Go—into all the world."—Christian Leader.

Briefs.

Chauncey M. Depew gives a recipe for success in these words: "The main elements of success in this world are good sense, good temper, and minding your own business."

Last week, some fiend fired a load of buckshot into the Presbyterian prayer meeting at Moss Point, Miss., killing a man and severely wounding his daughter and seriously wounding another man. Wanton, willful wickedness! And yet some people pretend to believe there is no devil!

The four new States—North Dakota, South Dakota, Washington and Montana—have held elections to send representatives to the National Legislature. The three former are Republican, and the last Democratic. The Republicans gain six Senators and four Congressmen, while the Democrats gain two Senators and one Congressman.

Another steamboat disaster has been added to the dreadful list of calamities for the year. The Steamer Corona, on her first trip for the season to the Ouachita river, exploded her boilers, when near Port Hudson, La., and almost immediately went down. The loss of life was very great. Among the lost are Capt. J. W. Blanks and Mrs. Thomas Hough, of Opelousas, both of them well known to the readers of the ADVOCATE. The boat had been newly fitted up, and the cause of the disaster is among the inscrutable things.

Mayor Shakspeare, of our city, has given strict orders to the chief of police to "rigidly enforce the State laws against gambling." The gentlemen who carry on this nefarious business to the utter corruption of men, young and old, are now to be purged out. All kinds of gambling come under the ban, and it is hoped that the police will be efficient enough to clean out the Augean stable. And yet the most stupendous gambling institution the world ever saw is not only among us, but it is protected by Louisiana law!

This "Union of Lakes and Union of Lands" keeps growing. To give our readers some idea of the bigness of the four new States just admitted into the Union, we quote an exchange:

The four new States bring in an area about equal to that of all New England, New York, New Jersey, Pennsylvania, Delaware, Maryland, Virginia, West Virginia, Ohio, Kentucky and Indiana combined. It is an area three times as great as the British Isles.

Will we ever come to a proper conception of the size of the "Great West?"

Melville, Louisiana.

We visited this flourishing town (which is about to be incorporated) on Friday, September 26. Our object was to help Rev. C. R. Godfrey, the live pastor, in a meeting, and on Sunday to dedicate his new church. The audiences were large and among the most orderly and attentive we have ever addressed. The perfect church decorum at Melville is remarkable, as compared with what it used to be only a few years ago. The Rev. W. Wimberly, we learned, had on a certain occasion cut a stout stick and laid it on the desk beside the Bible, as preparatory to a proper hearing from the people. Now, you could find nowhere in the State people whose behavior in church is more commendable than these same Melville folks. We enjoyed all the services, held morning and night, and we rejoice that a goodly number found Christ, and some joined the church. The Sabbath-school is a large one for the community, there being upwards of eighty on the roll. Superintendent Jones has an able corps of teachers, and an especial feature of the school is the adult Bible class, taught by Sister B. F. Alexander, the accomplished wife of the presiding elder of the Alexandria district. She also presides at the organ, and under her leadership the singing was of a high order, and hearty. After the eleven o'clock sermon, the very neat and commodious church was dedicated to the service of God. It will very comfortably seat upwards of two hundred persons; and, painted white, with green blinds at the windows, and a graceful spire, it presents a beautiful appearance and is easily seen from the cars. Its new bell can be distinctly heard throughout the neighborhood; and we noted with pleasure that the hanging and bracket lamps give a steady, clear light for night worship. The church and people of Melville have done well in putting up so tasteful a building; and may the last one of them be soundly converted to God! I ought to state, that, though nothing was owing on the structure, still at the pastor's request, a big collection for Conference assessments was easily raised—all of which is truly Methodistic and thoroughly Christian. A genuine Methodist can hardly feel right unless a rousing collection be taken on that most appropriate of days for such an act of worship, dedication day. If the church is all paid for, why, then, let missions or the superannuates or church extension have the benefit of the occasion. In the afternoon, we were called upon to address the Woman's Missionary Society, presided over with becoming grace by Sister Peyton, the president. Mrs. Dodd, the secretary, read her reports and others read and talked, and the occasion was a very enjoyable one. There are about fifty of these ladies at work in the good cause, and, besides, an equally large juvenile society is in the field there, headed as president by that very zealous young lady of thirteen, perhaps, Miss Jennie Faulkner. Melville's report for missions was very good last Conference, and Bro. Godfrey, with his able helpers, will likely do still better when he reports at Baton Rouge. There was a grand time had in the Lord on Sunday night, and on Monday, at eleven, the pastor administered the ordinance of baptism to some adults and received them into the church. We bid the people of Melville good-bye with regret, wishing our engagements at home could have permitted a longer stay. We visited the grave of Bro. Jeptha Landrum, whose form was the first to be laid in the Methodist graveyard. There is above his sleeping dust a beautiful stone appropriately marked. We were told that he was the first to preach Christ in Melville, and as he was with those people in their wildest days, it is well that, after all conflicts, he should be quietly resting in their midst. If the history of the Melville Church could be written up and published, or, rather, the biographies of its leading members, the record would show the wonderful transforming power of divine grace. "Wild" is almost a tame word to have been applied to some of those who are now the strong pillars of Melville Methodism. And, best of all, the work of growth and development in them is going steadily on.

Texas Notes.

The many gracious revivals that have followed the faithful preaching of the Word during the past few months in Texas attest the power of the gospel to melt and renew the heart of man. The promise of the Savior, that he would be with his ministering servants "alway, even unto the end of the world," has been truly and wondrously fulfilled. The real, spiritual presence of Christ does abide with his church as the source of her vitality and power.

A presiding elder, writing from a western district to the Texas Christian Advocate, a short time ago, said: "Camp and protracted meetings have been going on since the middle of July, and the Lord is blessing his people wonderfully. I never saw preachers work more earnestly and faithfully. Conversions are reported by the twenties, thirties and fifties. Old church letters gathered in and the members put to work. New churches have been organized in the mission fields, so that there must be five or six new pastoral charges wrought out within and adjacent to the limits of this district."

The new scholastic year began very auspiciously. Most of our church schools started off with increased and liberal patronage. The Southwestern University, at Georgetown, opened on September 16, with 239 students. The North Texas Female College, at Sherman, opened September 4, with one hundred and twenty pupils. Weatherford College opened on September 4, also, and over a hundred pupils were enrolled the first day. Waco Female College opened with a good attendance, with a corps of well-equipped teachers, and with a hopeful outlook.

The Texas Synod of the Cumberland Presbyterian Church met at Fort Worth on September 12, and continued in session five days. About one hundred and twenty ministers and elders were present, representing a membership of more than twenty thousand. The various interests of the church were carefully looked after, and the subjects of temperance, education, Sabbath observance, etc., were considered by special committees, whose reports were generally very encouraging. Their university at Tehuacana was represented as being in a flourishing condition. They decided to locate their proposed female seminary in Weatherford.

I watch with much interest the progress of temperance reform in every section. I believe it to be the right and duty of ministers of the gospel to labor aggressively for prohibition. The liquor traffic is certainly one of the greatest barriers to religious progress. The church, therefore, ought to bear a leading part in temperance reform work. This should be done in agitation, in constant aggression, in the organization of its forces, and in unrelenting warfare against the drink evil. Entire prohibition throughout the nation can never be secured until a public sentiment is created that will imperatively demand it.

This irresistible conviction in favor of prohibition can be brought about only by a process of education. I mean not the education of the schools alone, but that which is accomplished on the forum, in the pulpit, and through the public press. The church and ministry must necessarily be potent factors in effecting this result. We need to wake up to a due sense of our responsibility to God for the efforts made to suppress the greatest evil which now threatens our social fabric. When the whole body of professing Christians in the United States say that the saloon must go, that blessed consummation will be realized.

WEATHERFORD, Texas.

The Quarterly Review.

The October number of our Review, in our estimation, surpasses all preceding numbers. The table of contents is varied enough to suit any taste, and the character of the papers of a most interesting and edifying kind. The first article is on that ever fresh and inviting subject, the resurrection of the human body. There is a peculiar fascination about this subject which attracts our thoughts, and Rev. B. Hawley has discoursed attractively on it, under the title, The Body Sown—The Body Raised. Our good friend and brother, Dr. Mahon, of the Memphis Conference, gives us a clear-cut statement of his views of The Nature of Sin and Holiness. Dr. R. N. Sledd, of Virginia, has a thoughtful paper on the timely topic, The Law of the Sabbath. Paul Whitehead, D. D., another Virginian, writes a very pleasing article on Bishop Pierce. Our own correspondent, Prof. R. S. Ricketts, of Whitworth College, contributes a Biographical Sketch of Rev. H. F. Johnson, D. D., A Southern Methodist Teacher. The Professor had a fine subject, and his easy pen has given a charming bit of biography which will be read with great pleasure by all of Dr. Johnson's friends. John Milton, as a theme for thoughtful minds, will never wear out, and Dr. H. W. Hilliard has brought "the blind old bard" again before us in all the grandeur of his character. Prof. Tigert writes on Theism; Prof. C. J. Smith, on Honorary Degrees; J. N. Baskett on, Christian Growth and Culture; A. G. West on, The Charm of Our Southern Story-Writers; while that old, but now new, subject, Hayti and Santo Domingo, receives elaboration from J. R. G., whoever he may be. Now, in addition to all this, Dr. Harrison, the editor, discourses on seven different themes, covering forty-four pages of the Review. Here are 216 pages of reading matter of the best kind given four times a year for the pittance of $2 50. Address J. D. Barbee, agent, Nashville, Tenn.

A Visit to the Capital.

The editor was called to Baton Rouge, last Sunday, to occupy the pulpit, in place of the pastor, Rev. J. A. Parker, who has been confined to his room with a serious and painful disorder for about four weeks. It is always a pleasure to visit an old pastorate. Wherever a preacher goes he makes friends, and a visit in after-time always calls up pleasant memories. The meeting with old friends, some of whom were led to Christ through his ministrations, invariably gives pleasure. On this visit, we met many with whom we walked and talked together in bygone days. But we found the links growing fewer. Many have passed over to the other shore. Some have removed to other places, and the larger number of the large congregations, to whom we had the pleasure of preaching morning and night, were entire strangers. We had a delightful communion service in the morning, and at the close of the evening service a collection was taken for the domestic mission and church extension fund. The pastor has been prohibited by his physicians from pulpit work for several weeks. So the editor thinks that he will have the pleasure of another visit to the capital city next Sabbath.

Sunday Law Convention.

A convention of the friends of Sabbath rest will be held in Grunewald Hall, in this city, on Thursday and Friday, November 28 and 29, with a view to organize a Louisiana State Society. The object is to secure protection of our citizens by law in freedom from compulsory labor on the Sabbath. Churches, benevolent societies, labor, and other organizations, friendly to this cause, are respectfully invited to send delegates. Eminent speakers will address the meetings. Topics of great interest will be discussed.

Reduced railroad rates are expected for visitors.

By order of the committee.

C. W. CARTER, Chair'n.

Among the Papers.

In a beautiful article, on "She Gave Her Mite," Dr. McCoy, of the Alabama Advocate, opens the subject thus:

It is a blessed fact that in the economy of grace responsibility is graduated by the ability with which we have been endowed.

It is impossible to obtain the blessing attached to the widow's mite, unless it be a fact that you are a widow, and have only one mite to give, and even then, it must be given in the same spirit, and with the same degree of faith. If the widows in the church are to be numbered by the mites given to carry on the work of the Lord, we might readily conclude that the church should at once go into mourning for the loss of all her men. Think of a great, stalwart man, well equipped for a journey through life, proposing to give the widow's mite and then claiming the widow's blessing!

In an article, on "Boldness As a Necessary Qualification for the Preacher," the St. Louis Advocate says:

There are chains that enslave the preacher. His tenderness makes him weak. His attachments bring him in bondage. His personal intercourse, his obligations to his people, all tend to hamper his freedom and restrain his deliverances. The prophets were charged not to be afraid of their faces. Unawed they were to declare God's truth without apology, timidity, hesitancy or compromise. The warmth and freedom of conviction and sincerity, the fearlessness of a vigorous faith, above all the power of the Holy Ghost are helpers and elements in boldness. Meekness and humility are virtues of the first importance in the preacher, but these do not militate against boldness. This boldness is not the freedom of passionate utterances. It is not scolding. It speaks the truth in love. Boldness is not rudeness; roughness dishonors it. It is as gentle as a mother with her babe. Fear, in the mild and innocent form of timidity, or in the criminal form of cowardice, has no place in the true ministry; humble, but holy boldness, is of first importance.

The Florida Christian Advocate publishes the following "Caution," and we print it in our columns because the evil which it touches upon is more widespread than is thought:

Private correspondence gives information that some, who profess to be Methodist preachers, are setting forth strange doctrines in our churches. They are teaching materialism, denying spiritual regeneration, the immortality of the soul, and the future misery of the wicked, and holding the absurd doctrine of the annihilation of the wicked. This is sheer materialism, infidelity of a gross kind, and its influence is against true religion. Let these men take warning in time. That stuff is not Methodism nor Methodistic, and if they persist in holding that, they will have to give up Methodism. They had better give up these crude materialistic notions. They rise once in a while to the surface and give trouble, but soon die down. There is no life in materialism, because there is no soul in it. Anything must die that has no immortal soul in it, and a soulless religion is a poor thing, not worth having.

Dr. Lafferty exposes a pretty widespread sham in this way:

When you open a daily of Monday morning, you see Dr. Talmage's sermon of the day before. You think what a value the journal puts on that preacher to pay for reporting and telegraphing of the discourse. You don't know that the sermon is sent stereotyped days before it is delivered with enough other reading matter to make a page of a newspaper—all for one dollar and a-half! It would cost that sum to put in type a single column if done by printers in the office. The newspaper saves several dollars by giving Talmage a good send-off.

When you see a letter from "our own correspondent" in Washington or New York, remember that the ordinary newspaper pays twenty-five cents for that entire letter, and doesn't know the man who writes it.

And when you see a column of literary news about coming books, and items about authors, you must not suppose that is prepared in the office. It is sent in print from the North.

There are ways to make a paper seem enterprising and liberal in getting prime matter, when, in fact, it is a picayune deception.

Notes.

The Presbytery of New Brunswick, which embraces Princeton College and Seminary in its bounds, has voted against a revision of the Confession of Faith, the vote standing, sixteen for and thirty-four against. Dr. McCosh favors the revision.

Cardinal Gibbons, in his last pastoral letter, gives the following figures in regard to the Catholic Church in the United States: Catholic population, 9,000,000; priests, 8,000; churches and chapels, 10,000; colleges, 650; parish schools, 3,400; hospitals and orphan asylums, 520; theological seminaries, 27; bishops, 71; archbishops, 13.

The wonder about the fraud in the Louisiana bonds matter is that it should have been carried on for years and only be detected within the last few weeks. That a great wickedness has been perpetrated, a great wrong practiced upon innocent parties, is now plain to everybody, but that it should have been carried on for years without detection is what plain people can not so easily see. Something wrong somewhere in the conduct of State business!

Iowa has had prohibition five years. In 1882, the expenditures for criminal prosecutions amounted to $401,431; in 1888 they aggregated $300,424. To-day the school population is 10,000 greater than two years ago, and the number of teachers 500 greater. The total assets in the savings banks in 1883 were $8,419,739; in June, 1888, they had risen to $14,625,021. That is, the surplus earnings have increased under prohibition rule over seventy-three per cent. And yet it is said by some that prohibition is the ruination of the State.

The Presbyterian says:

Here is a fact worth pondering. In the cities where the saloons have been closed on Sunday there has been a decrease in crime from fifty to eighty per cent. Along with this there has been a more quiet and orderly observance of God's holy day. Public morals, on the one hand, have been conserved, and the tax-payers' pocket has been eased on the other. If the closing of the saloon on one day in the week makes so telling an exhibit in the way of public morals and economy, what a blessing for the community it would be if they were closed the entire seven days? This is the end for which all should work. Some will do so mainly from moral considerations, and others from pecuniary; whatever the motive, let there be a combination of effort. The rum-power wars against good citizenship and must be overthrown.

The New York Sun, in an article on "The Clergy of To-day," says:

The minister can not be a cloistered student. He must be a man of affairs, of ideas, and of a broad and comprehensive mind to fulfill all the requirements of his place. His large and varied work bringing him into contact with so many people and so many views, opinions, necessities, and phases of life, must tend to enlarge his intellectual scope and broaden his sympathies. He has no time for nonsense, for mere parade, and for cultivating the show of dignity at the expense of the substance. Hence he becomes a natural and an earnest man, and, as such, is more powerful to influence his fellows. The ministers are becoming more practical men, more in touch with humanity, more tolerant of its weaknesses, and more respectful of its varying opinions. They are more like human beings than the clergy of the past, better companions, and wiser and more fully equipped teachers.

Personal and Otherwise.

It is said that one-fourth of the population of Richmond, Va., belong to the Baptist Church. There are twenty-four Baptist Churches.

More than half the preachers in the Kentucky Conference are bald-headed.

The Evangelical Alliance, for the United States, will hold a national meeting in Tremont Temple, Boston, on December 4, 5 and 6. A most attractive programme has been prepared, including the names of many eminent clergymen and laymen.

William Gooderham, a Canadian Methodist, died recently, and left by his will, besides many other bequests, $10,000 to the Superannuation Fund; $30,000 to the Canadian Methodist Foreign Mission Fund, and $200,000 to Victoria College, on condition of its removal to Toronto.

On the first of September the Missionary Society of the Methodist Episcopal Church had received $85,000 more than was ever received in the same length of time, in any year, during the history of the society.

The whole amount said to have been afforded to the relief of the Conemaugh sufferers reached the sum of $2,200,000.

There are 345,000 persons drawing pensions from the government, and last year $88,000,000 were paid out, and yet the clamor is for more. Solomon said some people reminded him of the "horse-leech."

The bane of our civilization is the fact that the best elements are so absorbed in money-getting that they can not attend to public affairs. Hence, once in a while, a discovery of "crookedness" is made which startles everybody.

The latest Sunday-school statistics are these: Schools, 101.32t; teachers, 1,100,104; scholars, 8,345,431; total in Sunday-schools in this country, 9,445,535 persons—one-seventh of the population.

A brother in Mississippi writes: "The ADVOCATE is taken by nearly every Methodist family on my work." How many more preachers can say that? Ought not every one to be able to say the same?

Bishop Keener dedicated a new church in Louisville, Ky., recently. He preached a grand sermon on the occasion and lifted a collection of $4,000 to clear away the indebtedness.

Persons sending money for the Japan Mission will please not send ten-cent postage stamps. We can't use stamps of that denomination. If you must send stamps, send two-cent stamps, and be sure to oil them so they won't stick together.

A brother writes to know if we did not make a mistake in publishing that the Louisiana Conference will meet on December 12. Our usual time of meeting is on Wednesday, but the twelfth is Thursday. We have made no mistake. If the Bishop changes the time to Wednesday, we will notify the brethren in ample time.

Rev. John A. Miller, our pastor at Arcadia, La., has been suffering for several weeks with throat trouble and voice-failure, but the physicians think they will have him at work again soon. We hope so, for there is no better worker than Bro. Miller.

Bishop Galloway raised $1,000 in Holly Springs for the endowment fund of the new college.

The Convalescent Home, established many years ago, in New Orleans, by Rev. Robert Parker, at No. 29 Claiborne street, near the Charity Hospital, has proven an aid to many needy sick persons discharged from the latter institution. It is maintained by contributions of a few generous citizens and has the endorsement of Rev. Dr. B. Carradine, J. G. Richardson, Rev. C. Trawick, B. D. Wood, Breedlove Smith, John E. Rodd, Hon. Joseph A. Shakspeare, mayor; Dr. E. S. Lewis, and other prominent persons, familiar with Bro. Parker's good work. To carry on this philanthropic effort, money, in monthly instalments, is greatly needed, as the demands for help by the indigent convalescent is increasing at this season of the year. Names of those willing to subscribe to the support of the Convalescent's Home may be sent to D. L. Mitchel, NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE.

We grieve to record the death of the young wife of Dr. Tillett, of Vanderbilt University. She died of blood-poisoning at the home of her father, in Danville, Va.

We are much gratified and the church encouraged by the reports of revivals from all parts of our territory. Send on the reports, brethren, but you need not take up so much space in eulogy of the preachers who help you. Everybody who reads the Scriptures know they "are the messengers of the churches and the glory of Christ." Condensed, boiled-down reports is what the readers want.

—Rev. W. J. Porter writes from Vienna, La.: "We closed at Salem a glorious meeting last week; the first of the kind at that place for fifteen years. Ministerial aid as follows: Bros. L. S. Jones, of Mississippi; C. F. Staples and E. Walker, of Louisiana. Results: fourteen accessions, several conversions, churches strengthened, and a new subscriber for the ADVOCATE. I have received thirty-three, and have twelve applicants for reception."

—Rev. R. S. Isbell, writing from Opelousas, La., says: "Have an excellent meeting in progress here in Opelousas. Bro. Blocker is helping me and doing good work. Many of our number are wonderfully revived, and some are shouting happy. Our congregations increased gradually from the beginning. The interest grows with every meeting. No sensationalism at all; but the Spirit is drawing souls to God. Seven accessions and some bright conversions up to date. Some of our members who have been living in a cold, lukewarm condition, have gone actively to work for the Lord. Have organized an auxiliary woman's missionary society with good officers and an increasing membership. Will soon organize a juvenile missionary society. Meeting to continue several days. More anon."

—Rev. W. L. C. Hunnicutt writes: "A Christian layman who gives thousands for Christian education says: 'I feel more and more assured that Christian education is both the basis and superstructure, or, rather, is to furnish the whole material out of which Christ's temporal kingdom is to be solidly built. When we get Christ truly and effectually into all our educational forces the millennium is not far off.' This is both doctrine and prophecy. The greater the number of people who believe and act upon this doctrine, the sooner will the prophecy be fulfilled."

—Rev. N. M. Clark writes from Shuqualak, Miss.: "On the fifth Sunday in September I began a meeting at Frost Bridge, and continued it four days. The meeting resulted in reviving the church and awakening sinners. Fifteen professed conversion, seven persons joined the church, seven infants baptized, and four subscriptions to the ADVOCATE received. I was assisted by Rev. H. C. Brown, of Meridian."

—Rev. W. H. Sanders writes from Belzona circuit, North Mississippi Conference: "I have closed my last protracted meeting, and can say that I think the spiritual condition of the charge much improved. The people are much more interested, and the Sunday-schools are much better attended. The people are more prompt and congregations much larger. There have been between thirty and forty conversions in the bounds of the charge, and twenty-five have joined the church. Have baptized six children. I was assisted during the year by Bros. Gladney, Lagrone, Bachman and Bradley. The brethren gave me good help. All my collections will be full. Have several more to receive into the church. Bro. Bachman is with me doing good work in his business."

—Rev. J. F. Wynn writes from Montgomery, La., as follows: "Our meeting at Atlanta closed with an addition of ten members. In less than one week Bro. Crawford H. Hunt, after an illness of three days, was called away to his home on high. Bro. Hunt enjoyed our meeting so much. On the last night he seemed unusually filled with the Spirit of love. He was, perhaps, our most efficient steward. He was one of our sweetest singers. The community, yes, the entire circuit, will miss Crawford Hunt. While we bury the Lord's workmen, he will raise up others to carry on the work. Bro. Hunt leaves a faithful wife and five precious children to mourn his departure. God will take care of them, and, no doubt, they will, after a while, meet husband and father, where widows and orphans are left disconsolate no more. Yesterday, in this place, we buried Alice Pauline, youngest child of Maj. N. V. and Mrs. Lizzie McCain. She was a little ray of sunshine in the home for six months and fifteen days. To-day the home is sad. May father, mother, sisters and brothers meet her in that bright home above, where there shall be no sadness, and sorrow can never come!"

No Grumbling Here.

"Well, sir," said Mr. J. G. Grant, in reply to the reportorial inquiry about the furniture trade during the past year, "all I can say is that if business had not been satisfactory with me, I should not have felt justified in leasing this new store and putting in the largest and best stock I have ever handled. But come with me and let me show you what I have to sell and where I am going to sell it."

Under Mr. Grant's guidance a tour was made of the entire establishment, revealing furniture of so many different styles and at such varied prices that anyone who could not make a suitable selection from Mr. Grant's stock must indeed be hard to please. The new building, at 44 and 46 Baronne street, is very centrally located, being only one block from Canal street. It is 60 feet wide, running back a distance of 105 feet, and has a floor space of over 25,000 square feet. It has all the latest improvements, light and ventilation being perfect everywhere, and all the floors are made easily accessible by means of a hydraulic elevator. The second floor is one of the finest in the entire store, being devoted almost exclusively to the display of parlor furniture, and one can not help being struck by the handsome designs, the beauty and variety of the rich coverings, and the elegant appearance of these goods. The prices, too, will fit all purses, and the lady who only wishes to expend $30 or $40 on furnishing her parlor, and one who can afford to spend $700 or $800, or any price between these, can here alike be accommodated.

In the course of a pleasant conversation, Mr. Grant said business had been very satisfactory with him for the past twelve months, and there was every prospect that the coming season's trade would beat the record. He said that he had not only been selling more goods than formerly, but that the goods sold were of a better grade, which he was pleased to observe, as good furniture is really the cheaper in the end, and much more satisfactory to both buyer and seller. He, however, had a large stock of all grades, and, with the increased facilities which his new establishment afforded him, could and would place his furniture on the market at a lower price than had ever before been quoted in the South. Everyone should call and see the display at 44 and 46 Baronne street and get posted on prices, even if they do not intend to purchase just at present.

Country customers can have a fine illustrated catalogue mailed free to them on application, from which they can make their selections almost as well as if they were in the city.—Times-Democrat, Sept. Trade Edition.

WOULD YOU HAVE FRIENDS?—BE FRIENDLY.

BY S. V. D. MERRITT.

"I do not know how it can be,"
Said little Marie.
'But every one can easily see
How kind all the girls and boys are to me.
The rich and the poor, even cross Kate Lee
Seems quite pleased when I invite her to tea.
Really! I do not see just how it can be."

"I think I can tell just why it is so,"
Answered aged Jo.
"The rich and the poor, the high and low
Find in you a friend—not a foe
You are kind and good to all whom you know.
To serve them, out of your way you will go.
Really, that is just why it is so."

A Boy with Convictions.

BY FRANK H. STAUFFER.

"Here, Charlie," the clerk kindly said.

The elevator boy approached the desk, a pleased, expectant look upon his face.

"Here are three dollars for you to take home to your mother," the clerk said, as he laid three bright coins on the counter.

"I was to get but $2 50 a week," reminded Charlie.

"Oh, that's all right," rejoined the clerk. "The other half dollar is a donation. You are really the best elevator boy we've ever had."

"Oh, thank you," cried Charlie, his eyes shining.

"Now, be on hand bright and early to-morrow morning, so—"

"To-morrow!" repeated Charlie, a disappointed look on his face.

"Why not to-morrow?" asked the clerk.

"It is the Sabbath," stammered Charlie.

"I believe it is," said the clerk, with a grin. "But the elevator isn't suspended for that reason. We'd soon hear from our guests."

"But, sir, I wouldn't like to work on Sunday," Charlie said, in sincere distress.

"Oh, nonsense, boy! You're a little Puritan. You think it wrong, do you?"

"Yes sir. And—please, sir—I'd rather not come."

"Oh, well, suit yourself," growled the clerk. "If you don't come on Sunday morning you need not come on Monday."

Charlie sighed, picked up the money, and walked dejectedly away. A gentleman stepped into the office from the corridor.

"That elevator boy is a bright, polite little fellow," he said. "What is his name?"

"Charlie Benson," replied the clerk.

"What is his address?"

The clerk gave it, and the gentleman wrote it down in his pass-book.

"I think you made a mistake in discharging that boy," he said.

"I didn't discharge him," replied the clerk.

"Then he'll discharge himself. He has convictions and is not afraid to voice them. Isn't there a boy about the hotel who hasn't scruples against working on Sunday?"

"Yes."

"Then let him run the elevator to-morrow."

"I ain't bothering myself about it," retorted the clerk. "I told Charlie what he might expect. He is the one to feel worried, not me. All days are alike here."

Charlie Benson's mother was a poor widow who lived in a topmost flat. The room was cleanly kept, but that did not hide its meagreness. A look of surprise mingled with the pallor of her face when Charlie handed her his week's wages.

"You think you pleased them, dear?" she asked.

"The clerk said that I'm the best elevator boy they ever had," reported Charlie.

"Why, that's encouraging!"

"But——"

"But what," anxiously asked his mother, for he had paused, and a troubled expression rested on his face.

"I'm expected to work on Sunday," he said. "I'll not agree to that."

"Then you'll be dismissed, my boy."

"Yes, it resolves itself to that. If I do not go back to-morrow I'm not to go back at all."

The widow rocked herself to and fro, a vacant look on her face.

"And you are not going back?" she asked.

"No, mother," he resolutely said.

"All right," she replied, with a sigh. "I trained you up in that way, and though our distress is great, I'll not advise you to the contrary."

"I am doing right, mother, and the Lord will take care of us," Charlie solemnly said. "I am greatly disappointed, but something better will turn up—now see if there doesn't."

And there did, early on Monday morning. A portly, genial gentleman entered the room—the gentleman who had censured the clerk at the hotel.

"I wish to hire a boy," he said.

Mrs. Benson's face brightened.

"What did I tell you, mother?" whispered Charlie. Then he said aloud:

"I'll engage with you, sir. What am I expected to do?"

"I am a lawyer, and want an office boy. You can write, I suppose?"

"Oh, yes, sir. A good hand, others say."

"Then I'll put you to engrossing."

"What am I to get a week!" asked Charlie.

"Well, that's business! Five dollars a week."

"Oh, my!" exclaimed Charlie, unconsciously bringing his hands together. "When am I to begin?"

"That's business, too," said the visitor. "I expect to take you with me."

"You haven't asked for reference?"

"I don't intend to."

"Nor given me your name."

"My name is Gilbert Farnsworth. Here is my card." He did not give it to Charlie, but to his mother.

"One thing more," Charlie hesitatingly said. "Am I expected to work on Sunday?"

"No," replied the visitor, explosively. "If I thought you'd work on Sunday I wouldn't want you."

At the close of the week Charlie could not cease sounding his employer's praises.

"Mother, I told you that God would take care of us, and that something better would turn up. Well didn't he, and hasn't there? What do you think? He heard my talk with the hotel clerk and got our address from him. He's a kind, considerate, Christian gentleman. A handsome office, short hours, light work, good pay, and promotion just ahead. I copied one document and he declared that my work pleased him. 'A good engrossing hand, that,' he said. 'No mistakes, no blots, no erasures, no pig-ears.' I am glad I concluded not to go back to the hotel."

"I can see the Lord's hand in it all," his mother reverently said.—Christian at Work.

The truth of Wordsworth's saying, "The child is father of the man," is well illustrated in the case of George Kennan, the famous Russian traveler, whose thrilling stories of Russian prison life in the Century have interested young and old alike. When too young to read writing, he could understand the sound of the alphabet on the telegraph, and when only six years old he sent his first message over the wires, his father printing the sentence for him. Before reaching the age of twenty-one, he was sent to Siberia in the service of the Western Union Telegraph Company. At that time he was working in one of their offices at home, and when the question came to him over the wires, "Can you get ready to start for Siberia in two weeks?" He flashed back the reply, "I can get ready in two hours." It was this promptness and zeal for his work which gave him, as it will give to every boy, success in whatever he undertook.

MR. EDITOR: I am a little girl; will be seven years old in November. My papa takes the ADVOCATE, and I love to read the little letters. I have no pets; only a little black-eyed brother. I am a member of the Methodist Church, and go to Sunday-school every Sunday. Bro. Denson is our pastor; we love him very much. I will answer some of the little cousins' questions. Ida T. Davis, "razor" is found in Judges xiii, 5. Martha Denham, the answer to your question is found in Exodus xxxiv, 2. I will ask a question: Where in the Bible is the word "soap" found? I will close with much love to you. Mr. Editor, and the little cousins,

Your little friend.

Household.

Housekeeping in the Future.

Mrs. Helen E. Starrett, in an article on "Housekeeping in the Future," expresses the opinion that "in cities and villages the kitchen and cooking-stove and hired girl are all to be banished from the home. Clothes-making, soap-making, starch making, laundry work, coffee-browning, yeast-making, butter-making—all are gone. Send after them—or, rather say, that organized industry is already taking along with these—the remaining work of cooking and cleaning. This state of things is coming as sure as fate; and when it comes the deliverance will be so great that generations yet unborn shall rise up to bless the workings of this beneficent law. The city of the future will not build houses in squares, giving to every house an individual kitchen and prison-like back yard. It will rather build them all around an open square, and the part now disfigured with the kitchen will be given over for a household sitting-room or nursery, opening into a great, green space, where children shall play in safety, and through which the free air of heaven shall blow into the houses surrounding it. In every square will be found a scientifically constructed building, containing a laundry and a great kitchen, supplied with every modern appliance for skilled and scientific cookery, and also for sending into every dining-room any desired quantity or variety of food. The individuality of the home and the home-table will be preserved, and the kitchen smells and waste and 'hired girl' will all be banished."

For the Guest Chamber.

The physical comforts provided for a guest are not the only things which leave with him pleasant remembrances of the home that welcomes his visit. The highest hospitality is that which skillfully and unobtrusively ministers to his mind and spirit. The restful picture, the suggestive book, the evidences that the guest chamber is really a part of the home, always win at the first glance the grateful recognition of the guest. What more courteous "good-night" can be imagined than this poem in silk, which the writer recently found, delicately wrought, hanging on the gas-fixture of a room in a Chicago home, where he was made welcome for a night!

Sleep sweet within this quiet room,
O thou, who'ar thou art,
And let no mournful yesterdays
Disturb thy quiet heart.

Nor let to-morrow scare thy rest
With dreams of coming ill;
Thy Maker is thy changeless friend,
His love surrounds thee still.

Forget thyself and all the world,
Put out each feverish light,
The stars are watching overhead.
Sleep sweet. Good-night! Good-night!

Save Your Strength.

Young mothers, be as chary of your strength as a miser of his money. You will have abundant use for all at your command in the rearing of your children. All used unnecessarily is wasted, squandered. You have a certain life supply, and when this is exhausted you must fail, though that exhaustion may occur at forty years of age. Like the moments, never returning, the vital supply that was intended for the whole life can not return when once wasted. Let little feet run up and down stairs to do little errands; it will do the children no harm to do that part, and will favor you very much. Do not lift a whole tub, or even a pail of water, if it in any way over-exerts you. A little planning, a little time taken for a hard effort, a little rest taken when you are weary, will prove economy. Overwork is as disastrous as the payment of exorbitant interest.—Hall's Journal of Health.

People Wonder

WHEN they find how rapidly health is restored by taking Ayer's Sarsaparilla. The reason is that this preparation contains only the purest and most powerful alteratives and tonics. To thousands yearly it proves a veritable elixir of life.

Mrs. Jos. Lake, Brockway Centre, Mich., writes: "Liver complaint and indigestion made my life a burden and came near ending my existence. For more than four years I suffered untold agony. I was reduced almost to a skeleton, and hardly had strength to drag myself about. All kinds of food distressed me, and only the most delicate could be digested at all. Within the time mentioned several physicians treated me without giving relief. Nothing that I took seemed to do any permanent good until I began the use of Ayer's Sarsaparilla, which has produced wonderful results. Soon after commencing to take the Sarsaparilla I could see an in my condition, my appetite began to return and with it came the ability to digest all the food taken, my strength improved each day, and after a few months of faithful attention to your directions, I found myself a well woman, able to attend to all household duties. The medicine has given me a new lease of life, and I cannot thank you too much."

"We, the undersigned, citizens of Brockway Centre, Mich., hereby certify that the above statement, made by Mrs. Lake, is true in every particular and entitled to full credence."—O. P. Chamberlain, G. W. Waring, C. A. Wells, Druggist.

"My brother, in England, was, for a long time, unable to attend to his occupation, by reason of sores on his foot. I sent him Ayer's Almanac and the testimonials it contained induced him to try Ayer's Sarsaparilla. After using it a little while, he was cured, and is now a well man, working in a sugar mill at Bisbane, Queensland, Australia."—A. Attewell, Shrubt Lake, Ontario.

COMSTOCK—Died, at Slaughter, La., September 15, Mrs. ANNE ELIZA COMSTOCK (nee Farrar), and was buried from Jefferson Street Church, Natchez, Miss., September 16, aged sixty-two years. The years of her life were full of vicissitude. She was first married to Mr. Charles N. Vaughan in 1811, and, after seventeen years of happy life, he died in 1861, leaving her with one child, just at the time when she seemed to need him most. The great struggle had commenced which was destined to sweep away property and lives, and by the loss of her husband she was left to battle alone with calamity and misfortune until its close, when with the wreck of her fortune she commenced life over, the same true, faithful woman, only purified by affliction and trial. She was married the second time, in 1867, to Capt. G. C. Comstock, of Clinton, La., whither she moved and in which place she lived until the time of her death. Captain Comstock died in 1881, and left her a widow again, after seventeen years of useful, happy life.

Sister Comstock was converted and joined the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, in 1815, at Kingston, under the ministry of Rev. B. M. Drake, of precious memory. From the time of her espousal of the Master's cause she was a faithful soldier of the cross, a devout and useful Christian. Her life was a constant benediction to her neighborhood. She was a close friend to her pastor, thoughtful and considerate of his wants, a helper of the poor and distressed; wise, judicious and considerate of the feelings of her beneficiaries. Her constant endeavor was to be so unostentatious in the bestowment of her charities that her left hand knew not what her right hand did. Quiet and undemonstrative in expression of her religious feeling, she was equally reticent about the good she did, that she might have the reward of her heavenly Father. Her sense of honor was very acute, her ideals of true manhood and womanhood were grand, and she strove to realize them in herself and others. When her love and trust were given it was with the whole heart; so when that love and confidence were found to have been bestowed on objects unworthy, it was with a shock of acute and positive pain to her. Her confidence and esteem once lost was lost forever, yet her charity never failed. But her life is ended, she is gone from among us, but her example still lives. May her mantle fall on many of the rising generation of our Southern womanhood! May the Lord so guide and influence by his grace her children and relations that all may be gathered with her at home, in the house not made with hands, eternal in the heavens! Is the prayer of her friend and former pastor, W. E. HALLARD.

CAIN—AMANDA J. CAIN, after a brief illness and much suffering for twenty days, died in peace at her home, in Carroll county, Miss. Her maiden name was Shipp. She was born October 5, 1836; was married first to Frank Spencer, who died 1863, leaving her a widow with one child. On June 20, 1865, she was happily married to J. J. Cain. In 1864 she joined the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, in which she lived, adorning the church and exemplifying its virtues up to her death.

Her life was a beautiful comment upon that faith "which works by love and purifies the heart." She was true and faithful in all the relations of life; quick to respond, and liberal to sustain all the calls of her church. Her Bible was her daily companion. Besides special investigations, for some years past she had made it a rule to read her Bible through consecutively once a year. Doubtless from this infallible source she drew that abundance of sweetness of life and temper with which she was possessed; and these gave her a welcome in the hearts and affections of many. She leaves a heart-stricken husband, a son and several step-children to mourn her death, though they mourn not as those who have no hope. These alike delighted to honor her for her constant fidelity in all the relations of life. After her funeral (being assisted by Rev. W. S. Lagrone) at Valden, Miss., her remains were consigned to the house appointed for all living, to await the summons to come forth.

R. A. ELLIS.

DAVIS—Died in Lake City, Fla., September 24, 1889, ETTES DAVIS, a native of Louisiana. He was three years in Florida, two of which were spent in the office of the Tobacco Plant, of Lake City. He was twenty-six years old, and loved and respected by all who knew him. His parents reside at Lake Providence, and we tender them our sympathy in this great bereavement. EDITOR.

MASSEY—Died August 2, 1889, at Montrose, Miss., PROF. W. B. MASSEY, in the thirty-seventh year of his age. W. B. Massey was born in Leake county, Miss., February 25, 1852; professed religion when fourteen at a protracted meeting in Panola, since which time until his death he led the life of a consistent and an earnest Christian. Passing his youthful years on a farm in a period when school facilities were limited in the country, he found himself at manhood without that learning necessary to welfare in the world, and set about, with the strong perseverance which characterized him throughout his life, to secure the needed knowledge and culture. Having finished his education he resolved to adopt teaching as a profession. In 1874 he established the Montrose High School, of which he held the principalship at the time of his death. Chiefly by his individual efforts, and entirely under his skillful management, this has become one of the leading in a county noted for its educational institutions.

Of all the gracious attributes and elements of his character, which made it so distinct in its manliness, its nobleness, and its purity, it is impossible to speak. Firmness that knew no yielding, yet never descended into obstinacy; kindness and sympathy, that, extending to all, in return won from all love and esteem; frankness and honesty in word and act; moral courage to stand up for the right, regardless of consequence; integrity that no whispered story of personal benefit, though his dearest friend had told it, could warp from its unrighteous course; judgment free from the rule of passion, not swift, but sure—these combined to form the character of one who was a magnificent type of manhood—one who was "an honest man, the noblest work of God"—one of whom it could be truthfully written that "even his vices leaned to virtue's side." And over all a calm serenity of mind and temper which disappointment could not affect and success could not unduly stimulate.

As a scholar, his comprehension was quick, his researches deep, his attainments thorough, his knowledge extensive. As a teacher, he held the affection of his pupils, kept careful guard over their morals, directed them in godly ways, and so influenced and shaped their lives as to make them good men and women. As a Christian, he was a pillar of the church, ever ready to exert himself in any direction for the promotion of its cause and the advancement of its interests. As a man, his simple dignity, his unassuming manner, his conscientious discharge of duty, his untiring labors, his life's unsullied record, may well be an inspiration to those young men who have received instruction at his hands and who were his especial delight in the school room.

Let us hope that he only laid down the ceaseless cares and heavy burdens of earthly existence to enter upon the enjoyment of the ecstatic pleasure of Paradise—that his spirit free from sin and guile now has a home with God in that beautiful city "not built with hands eternal in the heavens."

STONE DEAVOURS.

PEARSON—Miss MARGARET E. PEARSON, daughter of S. H. and Mollie Pearson, was born March 8, 1845; joined the church, 1859, under the ministry of Rev. Daniel Wadsworth, and was converted soon after at Old Centre Church. She died August 16, 1889, at her brother-in-law's, W. T. Carruth, in St. Helena parish, La.

Miss Mardy, as she was familiarly called, was a great sufferer, but she bore her afflictions with Christian fortitude. It was the writer's privilege to visit her and pray with her a short time before she died. She expressed a desire to depart and be with Christ, but was willing to suffer on until God's will was accomplished in her. Mardy was an earnest, devoted Christian, ever ready to speak a word for the Master in due season. She leaves an aged mother, three brothers and one sister behind, but they mourn not as those without hope. Her father and two brothers had preceded her to the eternal world, whom she hoped to join on the sunny banks of sure deliverance, there to bask in the sunshine of God's glory forever and ever.

Speaks for Itself.

Hon. P. H. Jacobs, the well-known chemist, editor of the Poultry Keeper, Farmers' Magazine, and Agricultural Department of the Philadelphia Record, says:

"I have examined carefully the Compound Oxygen manufactured by DRS. STARKEY & PALEN; also their mode of treatment by inhalation, and have noted the great benefit to those who have used it among personal friends. That it will give to the exhausted system renewed and permanent vitality is beyond doubt."

We are in a position to endorse the above by many instances. We subjoin the sentiment of some of our patients who have been released from the clutch of that relentless ill, nervous prostration.

Scientific.

Science versus Crime.

Recent events make this a fit time for calling attention to the degree in which science has become an ally of society in the struggle of the latter to defend itself against crime. Chemical science has become so exact that when a human being has met his death by poison the deadly drug can be traced even in a single drop of blood. The microscope has increased manifoldly the difficulty of committing a forgery that shall escape discovery. The electric light flashes its intense brightness into unfrequented streets, into narrow alleys, and into regions of great cities where dangerous classes swarm; so that deeds of darkness can no longer be committed with the impunity of former times. While the absconding criminal is traveling by steam, the message asking for his apprehension is flying, literally, with lightning speed. Great as are the services now constantly rendered by science in the prevention, detection, and punishment of crime, those which seem likely to be rendered in the future will, if realized, be greater still. It may not be long ere the phonograph is brought into court as an unimpeachable witness, to repeat the exact words of conspirators guilty of planning bribery or burglary. It will be well if we bear in mind that in many ways, including such as have been hinted at above, the astounding progress made in this century toward unlocking the secrets of matter and mind, is tending not only to make men better acquainted with natural laws, but also to make them more obedient to civil laws.—Boston Advertiser.

The Sound of Thunder.

One of the most terse and succinct descriptions of a natural phenomenon is that recently given by M. Hirn, in which he says that the sound which is known as thunder is due simply to the fact that air traversed by an electric spark—that is, a flash of lightning—is suddenly raised to a very high temperature, and its volume, moreover, considerably increased. The column of gas thus suddenly heated and expanded is sometimes several miles long, and as the duration of the flash is not even a millionth of a second, it follows that the noise bursts forth at once from the whole column, though for an observer in any one place it commences where the lightning is at the least distance. In precise terms, according to M. Hirn, the beginning of the thunder-clap gives us the minimum distance of the lightning, and the length of the thunder-clap gives us the length of the column. He also remarks that when a flash of lightning strikes the ground it is not necessarily from the place struck that the first noise is heard. Again, he points out that a bullet whistles in traversing the air, so that we can, to a certain extent, follow its flight; the same thing also happening with a falling meteorite just before striking the earth. The noise actually heard has been compared to the sound produced when one tears linen. It is due really to the fact that the air rapidly pushed on one side in front of the projectile, whether bullet or meteorite, quickly rushes back to fill the gap left in the rear.—Scientific American.

The Metal of the Future

There is but little doubt that aluminum is destined to be the metal of the future, and will displace iron and steel as surely as electricity is displacing gas and steam. Aluminum exists wherever there is a clay bank. Formerly the cost of reducing it to metallic form was excessive, but now the electric current is utilized in its production, which is daily being effected at a cheaper rate. Aluminum is a soft white metal which never rusts. It is little more than one-third the weight of iron, and, combining well with other metals, it becomes when alloyed with copper, harder than steel.

A NEW TREATMENT.

Sufferers are not generally aware that these diseases are contagious, or that they are due to the presence of living parasites in the lining membrane of the nose and eustachian tubes. Microscopic research, however, has proved this to be a fact, and the result of this discovery is that a simple remedy has been discovered which permanently cures the most aggravated cases of these distressing diseases by a few simple applications made (two weeks apart) by the patient at home. A pamphlet explaining this new treatment is sent free by A. H. DIXON & SON, 305 West King Street, Toronto, Canada.

The clergy of America take kindly to Life Insurance, and have been its firmest champions. They fight for it and thoroughly believe in it. There are many splendid financiers in the Church; that they are intelligent and thoughtful for their future goes without saying. All denominations seek the protection of Life Insurance, and are careful to select the company offering the greatest security and the most advantageous terms to policy-holders. The Episcopal Diocese of New York has an Insurance Fund for all of its members, and The Mutual Life, which is the largest and strongest company in the world, with over $122,000,000 assets, has been officially selected by that body to issue all the insurance to these worthy people.

A Southern Department of this Company has been opened in New Orleans under the management of Mr. T. H. Bowles, with offices in Louisiana National Bank Building.

SYMPATHY.

JAMES BERRY BENSEL.

In sorrow once there came to me
Two friends to proffer sympathy.
One pressed warm, dewy lips on mine
And quoted from the Word Divine;
Wiped the hot tear-drops from my eye
And gave my sore heart sigh for sigh;
Told me of pain he had outgrown—
Pain that was equal to my own,
And left me with a tender touch
That should have comforted me much.
But still my sorrow was no less
For all his loving graciousness.
The other only pressed my hand;
Within his eyes the tears did stand.
He said no word, but laid a rare
Bunch of sweet flowers beside my chair;
And closely held my hand the while
He cheered my sad gloom with his smile.
And ere he went he sang a song
That I had known and loved fur long.
And then he clasped my hand again
With the same look that shares a pain.
So when he went I laid my head
Down, and was glad and comforted.
What was the difference, can you tell?
I had my friends, alive and well;
I loved them both alike, and yet
The one's warm kiss I could forget,
The other's hand-clasp I could feel
For hours through all my being steal.
Each shared my sorrow, yet to me
One brought but love, one sympathy.

Entire Sanctification.

BY B. CARRADINE, D. D.

A few more words given in negativo scription of the blessed life of sanctification, and the writer will take up rtain features, connected with the ssing promised in the first article. The blessing of entire sanctification not a recovery from backsliding. e supposition of many who have not alized this grace in the soul is, that is the recovery of the first love, or urn from a more or less backslidden ate.

The idea is urged again and again, different writers who are opposed to ctification, that the professed posors of the blessing had really drift- through unfaithfulness into a conion of darkness, fear, and even sin; d in looking for a second cleansing sanctification, have mistaken their very, or restoration of religious for the blessing of sanctification; thus deluded, proclaim the fact they have received the second sing, when they have only been vered from the life and course of backslider.

This is certainly very different from teaching of a famous little volume, led "Christian Perfection," written one of the most eminently pious n that ever lived, which says that re sanctification is preceded by a inal mortification of sin and ardent irations after holiness; in a word, conditions and experiences the opite of backsliding.

According to this definition of sanctication, that it is nothing but a rery from backsliding, we are necessily led to infer that the Thessalonis, whom Paul so highly commended his epistle, saying that they were samples" through their labor of e, patience of hope, and joy in the ly Ghost, that they were really a set backsliders! And when he wrote nd the very God of peace sanctify wholly," he meant that he hoped God of peace would recover them their present backslidden condi-. Truly this definition and explanation of entire sanctification, or the second blessing, as given by the doubters of the work, is enough to make Wesley turn over in his grave, and to cause the admirers of Fletcher and Carvosso and Clarke and Benson and McKendree to blush for those consecrated men of God.

So, according to this explanation, these holy men were backsliders. Who is ready to credit this? Who, after reading their lives, and their own statements and descriptions of the blessing of sanctification, can believe such a thing of them?

Read the Life of Fletcher, and see how the definition fails to agree with the facts. Open the Life of Carvosso, and see how, after his conversion, he pressed steadily on, living in prayer, and never resting until he obtained the blessing of sanctification. Now turn to Bishop McKendree—he is giving his experience: "Not long after my conversion Mr. Gibson preached a sermon on sanctification, and I felt its weight. When Mr. Easter came he enforced the same doctrine. This led me more minutely to examine the emotions of my heart. I found remaining corruption, embraced the doctrine of sanctification, and diligently sought the blessing it holds forth. The more I sought it, the more I felt the need of it, and the more important did that blessing appear. In its pursuit my soul grew in grace." Then he goes on to describe when and how the blessing of sanctification came upon him. Where does the backsliding come in here? When did he lose God? On the contrary, he tells us that as he sought the blessing, his soul grew in grace.

Now let the reader turn to Mr. Wesley's volume on "Christian Perfection," and read certain paragraphs on pages 37, 61, and 78, and he will find that the author calls the blessing a total death to sin, and an entire renewal in the love and image of God, obtained instantaneously, received by faith, and witnessed to by the Holy Ghost.

In none of these instances can you find anything favoring the idea of a recovery from backsliding! On the contrary, it is represented as a sudden uplift and deliverance granted a soul that had been previously growing in grace; that it is a second and distinct work done in and for, not a backslidden, but a consecrated life.

With great shrinking I mention my own experience in the same breath with such superior and holy men. But God calls upon me to witness here, and by my tongue and pen to protest humbly, but firmly, against this degrading definition of sanctification. God knows that I have not been a backslider. He knows that for over twelve years the rule of my life, rarely broken, has been never to lay my head upon my pillow until I felt a sense of acceptance with him; while every day I have felt his peace and presence in my soul. Evidently the blessing I received on June 1, of this year, was not a recovery from backsliding.

Again: the blessing of sanctification is not simply a great blessing. To call it that is to rob it of its distinctive qualities. It is something more than a blessing. It is a blessing after a different order. It is a second work wrought in the soul by the Holy Ghost.

Many people have grown merry over the word "second blessing." They say that they have gone much farther along in the spiritual numerals; that they have advanced into the hundreds and thousands. So has the writer. But these blessings were all in the regenerated life arising at moments of repentance, prayer, submission and Christian work, and touching not the life of which we are writing. There is another blessing so peculiar, so distinct, that when a man experiences it, although he had felt ten thousand blessings before, he would call this one ever after, the "second blessing." I am afraid that the laughter directed at the expression arises from the thoughtlessness of mirth, or the failure to recognize the real work and life covered by the words. It would be well for Methodist preachers, ere they laugh publicly over the expression, to turn to the works of the founder of our church, Mr. Wesley, and see how frequently and certainly he used it.

In writing to Mrs. Crosby in 1761, he says: "Within five weeks five in our band received the second blessing." In 1763 he writes: "This morning one found peace and one the second blessing." To Miss Jane Hilton, in 1774, he writes: "It is exceedingly certain that God did give you the second blessing, properly so called. He delivered you from the roots of bitterness, from inbred sin, as well as actual sin."

Nor is this all. The expression is not simply Wesleyan, but you might say scriptural; for Paul, in II. Cor. i, 15, says to the Christians whom he is addressing: "I was minded to come unto you before, that ye might have a second benefit." The proper translation of the last word should not be "benefit," but "grace;" and is so rendered in the marginal reading. The Greek word is charis, which is translated "grace" one hundred and fifty times in the New Testament. Thus properly translated, the verse reads: "I was minded to come unto you before, that ye might have a second grace."

The blessing of sanctification is evidently something more than a great blessing. As for great blessings, all of us have had them who are Christians; but not all have had the second blessing, for a great blessing is not necessarily the second blessing. My beloved brethren in the ministry, who differ with me, if you come to glorying in great blessings, so will I. Let me become a fool in such glorying. Have you had great blessings? So have I. Have you had a number? So have I. And yet not one of these was the second blessing. Some of them I received in company with ministers who read these lines; some in the presence of various congregations I have served, and still others alone. And yet not one of these was the second blessing. Certainly it seems that the writer might be able to speak intelligently and discriminatingly when he humbly, but firmly, asserts that there is a second blessing for the child of God altogether different from the multitude of gracious experiences that fill and glorify the Christian life.

The expression, "great blessing," in connection with the work of entire sanctification, is misleading. The attention of the seeker is thereby directed to an emotion instead of a work and final state. The feeling may be more or less intense according to temperament, condition, and other things I might mention. It is not a necessary feature of sanctification that a person should be overwhelmed. Some may be; but the majority are not. It is a purifying and filling rather than an overwhelming—a filling of the soul rather than the falling of the body. I grant that some have been perfectly prostrated for moments and minutes; but many have not this torrent-like baptism, and yet are as soundly sanctified as the other class. Some of whom I have read, and some whom I have known, in receiving the blessing suddenly became conscious of a profound, unearthly, immeasurable calm and sweetness of soul. In the very core and center and heart of the experience is heard the testimony of the Holy Ghost bearing witness to the fact that this is sanctification. Thus was it with Dr. Clarke, Benson, Carvosso, Lovick Pierce, and others. Dr. Pierce said that for minutes he felt that he could live without breathing, so unutterable was the calm in his soul. Dr. Thomas C. Upham, writing about it, says: "I was then redeemed by a mighty power, and filled with the blessing of perfect love. There was no intellectual excitement, no marked joys, when I reached this great rock of practical salvation; but I was distinctly conscious when I reached it."

This is the point I make: that to lay the emphasis upon the emotional feature is misleading. It is as unwise here as it is in conversion to demand certain exalted states as the criterion in such a case. The instant we make an overwhelming rapture the standard experience, that instant we grieve and discourage many, and make it difficult, if not impossible, for them to secure the longed-for blessing.

The writer can not but insist that it is not the great joy felt at the moment that should constitute the after rejoicing of the sanctified man, but the great work that was done in him at that time. The work is the wonderful thing; the work is the divine accomplishment to be rejoiced over. It may have for its proclaimer a great joy, or a great calm or peace; but that is a small matter compared to the work itself. The joy will subside, in a measure; the peace may have its variations; but the work done in sanctification remains! Glory to God for the work! Earthly conditions and experiences may beat like waves upon you; but, rock-like, the work itself abides, resisting every wave and outliving every storm. People and surroundings may change; failure and disappointment and loss may crowd into the life; but there enthroned in the heart is this perfect love to God and man that changes not, an inward calm and rest that never departs, and a faith in God that remains unshaken.

Yes, sanctification is a great blessing; but the greatness is not in the emotions which accompany it, but in the work of sanctification itself. And while the sanctified man can not but rejoice in the possession of a peace and rest that never leave him, yet his deepest joy is in the constant realization of the work itself; that he is crucified with Christ; that he is dead to the world, and alive to God as never before; that inward sin is dead; that love reigns supreme in the heart, and that Christ abides within in a fullness and with a constancy delightful and amazing.

If God's people, instead of doubting and denying, would humbly and prayerfully seek for sanctification as they did for conversion, then, in the language of the pastoral address of the General Conference of 1832, "our class meeting and love feasts would be cheered by the relation of the experiences of the higher character, as they now are with those which tell of justification and the new birth."

My beloved reader, why have you not this blessing? Have you sought it, or have you spoken and written against it? Have you believed or doubted?

Remember, it is obtained by earnest, humble seeking, with consecration of self and faith in the blessing. If you have not sought for it, and if you do not believe in it, who wonders that you have not obtained it?

Christ's words are as applicable to the converted man as they are to the man of the world: "If any man will do his will, he shall know of the doctrine."

Dr. Carradine on Entire Sanctification.

BY REV. JOSHUA H. HARRISON.

Dr. Carradine was my pastor for several years. I learned to love him as a man of pure, elevated purposes of life. His sermons were always good and forcible, and to me were continual appeals to holiness of life. I do not now recall an instant when I was not religiously benefited by his pulpit ministrations. There were keen, piercing thrusts at certain individuals in his congregation whom he regarded as needing Christian chastisement for the sake of piety. We all felt that his sermons were strong appeals to righteousness. He was always clear and pointed in his deliverances. His exegesis was always good and opened a way into truth. I do not mean that I never differed from him; but there was an energy of conviction and thought that was refreshing and ennobling. The man lives in my life and thoughts today. I always considered him a man of profound religious convictions and of an intense religious purpose. I knew all the time that but few men ever made the persistent effort to obtain unto the fullness of the blessing of God in Christ. Everything had a spiritual side to him. He was a lovable man, but a man of idioms, withal so marked that some could not enter into sympathy with him. I do not believe it was possible to question his integrity. The purity and sincerity of his purposes were unquestionable. He was a man of intense desire for truth, willing to undergo any mortification for its sake. I felt a devotion to him that was peculiar; so when I learned that he had "professed sanctification," I was strangely surprised. When his articles began to appear in the ADVOCATE, I read them with a strange mixture of interest and surprise. I do not esteem the man less, nor do I any more question the purity of his purpose, or the integrity of his experience. His deliverances are of a nature and on a subject I can not accept as implicitly as I did his former sermons. Nor can I grant the entire continuity of validity of evidence for truth offered in his deliverances. And this without any abatement of esteem for his integrity of purpose and logical accuracy.

I shall accept Dr. Carradine as a fair representative of the doctrine he advocates. His exposition will be accepted as a strong defense of the doctrine, as well as a fair statement of it. It is in essential accord with all authoritative expositions I have seen. Indeed, I must candidly accord to him a preeminence in the matter of clear, decisive and forcible exposition.

The doctrine may be briefly stated thus: Man was created pure, without sin and without "sinwardness;" free from all depravity that so pollutes humanity. This pure man, thus, without "sinwardness," without a "prone-to-wander feeling," did actually sin, which act of sin was to him personal, but, in consequence of his relations, became the condition of the total disruption of the relation to God in which was life and divine influence; hence death followed—death of righteousness and all tendency to it. His nature became corrupted permanently, so much so that he naturally communicated to his offspring this corruption of nature. Originating in the first man, and thus transmitted to all posterity by organic laws, it is pertinently denominated "original or birth sin." The salvation provided for man in Christ Jesus provides for the complete restoration of man to a life of holiness by the agency of the Holy Ghost. Man is thus born corrupted or depraved, with all tendencies to sin, but is responsible only for sin actually committed in person. Regeneration is the work of the Spirit in forgiving this personal sin, and cleansing the soul from the effects of such sin—saving the soul from a "personally sinful nature," but can not reach the inherent depravity accomplished in the individual through the laws of generation and inheritance from Adam. This "original sin," or "the effects of Adam's sin," transmitted from him, is beyond the sphere of responsibility in the individual. God can not and does not hold him responsible for such a thing. Yet, in order to complete the restoration, or "entire sanctification," this depravity must be "taken out," "removed," "eradicated," "destroyed;" and this work can not, of necessity, be accomplished by regeneration, but is accomplished by a separate, subsequent work of the Spirit, in every way distinct from regeneration. It is accomplished through "faith and consecration" "instantaneously." The taking out, or destroying, or consumption of that which is "naturally engendered in the offspring of Adam," as the effects of his sin in his own nature, is sanctification. This is done by the Holy Ghost. I think this is fair. Whatever relation exists between the act of sin and its personal effects in the agent must be held to be universal. The law of condemnation includes Adam with ourselves. He sinned personally. The effects followed regularly. We sin personally. Likewise the regularity of effects must be announced. Adam was responsible for his own sin just as we are. Repentance and faith in him would entitle him to the same spiritual cleansing that we obtain on like condition. His regeneration would have cleansed him from a "personally sinful nature" in precisely the way and to precisely the extent that it does in us. All the effects of his sin are attributable to a personal act of sin in him. Now, I submit that if he and Eve had been regenerated before the generation of children, they could not have communicated any depravity to their offspring; for regeneration would have saved them from all the effects of sin for which he was responsible. And this would have stopped the descent of depravity from Adam. If you consider that any relation Adam sustained to the race as its head, etc., conditioned the law of sin differently in him and in his posterity, there is no line of continuity upon which we may proceed. Sin in him was not what it is in us. There is really no principle upon which such a view can be justified or tenable. I can see no ground upon which I may grant that sin in Adam was different essentially from sin in us. Either he was not offered the privilege of "sanctification," by which he might have saved himself and his race from universal necessary depravity (because such a work of grace in him was impossible), or he failed to avail himself of such privilege, and thus precipitated all the darkness and death of sin upon an innocent posterity, since the universal testimony of the race is against such a salvation. If he was not offered such privilege, there must be some intrinsic reason for it, or we must revise our view of the humanity of our first parents. If this withholding of the privilege of sanctification was postponed until the inauguration of the Spirit at Pentecost, you must argue the essential incompetence of the system of Christian religion to accomplish in all antecedent humanity what it doctrinally accomplishes subsequently.

Now, if the ultimate sanctification of which Adam was capable, in consequence of any federal or other relation to his race, must have a residuum subject to transmission, the doctrine of an "entire sanctification" for him must be surrendered, for he could not himself be relieved of precisely what we have "taken out" of us and what we got from him. And if it "took out" of him what it eradicates from us, we could not have possessed it. And sanctification, in such a sense, would have been utterly impossible.

Suppose we grant, for argument's sake, that Adam was so related and conditioned that whatever sanctification may have been possible to him could not have prevented the descent of depravity. We are to claim that sanctification in us "takes out," "removes," "destroys," "eradicates," "consumes" "original sin;" that which we received from Adam by inheritance, and for which we are not responsible. Now, I submit that if we are thus relieved of the "effects of the Adamic sin" in us by sanctification, there is, therefore, no residuum capable of transmission to our individual posterity. So the children of sanctified parents are, of necessity, born without "original or birth sin," or "the effects of the Adamic sin in us." If anything remains after sanctification (which we are to understand as a "cleansing," "circumcising," "eradicating," "crucifying," "putting-off-the-old-man" process) that can be transmitted, we can not claim that sanctification saves us from the Adamic or original sin; for whatever lies in or beyond the circumference of responsibility, and is transmissible, belongs integrally to original sin—that which sanctification proposes to "take out" of the individual. The universal testimony of the race is that no cleansing so relieves the individual as to profit the offspring in holiness. I contend, therefore, that the doctrine of Adamic, or original, sin, as a residuum to be "taken out" by sanctification, is without objective validity, and negatived by the facts of human life.

Perhaps Enoch may be regarded as a sanctified man in every sense of the word, if anyone antecedent to Pentecost was so sanctified. But only Noah and his family were saved from the condemnation of the flood.

Let the sanctificationist define original sin as he may, his doctrine of "entire sanctification," of necessity, must be commensurate in its effects in the individual with the effects of the Adamic transgression in the individual. "Original or birth sin standeth not in the following of Adam, as the Pelagians do vainly talk; but it is the corruption of the nature of every man, that naturally is engendered of the offspring of Adam, whereby man is very far gone from original righteousness, and of his own nature inclined to evil, and that continually." Sanctification "removes" this "corruption of nature naturally engendered of the offspring of Adam," and the removal of the "corruption," as testified to by the sanctified, "removes" the tendency to sin. But the article to which we are called by the sanctificationists declares expressly that man, in consequence of "original sin," is "inclined to evil, and that continually." This word "continually" means all the time, and must include the entire life, unless we can give it a meaning suitable to the doctrine of "sanctification," equivalent to until sanctified.

But Article XX. declares: "The offering of Christ, once made, is that perfect redemption, propitiation, and satisfaction for all the sins of the whole world, both original and actual," etc. "Original sin" is interpreted to mean the "effects of the Adamic sin in us," "the corruption of nature naturally engendered," etc. Sanctificationists assert that the "perfect redemption, propitiation, and satisfaction" of our creed is to be interpreted in the sense of "taking out," "removing," "destroying" in us "the effects of the Adamic sin" in such a sense as to leave us without "tendency to sin;" so that the "warring of the flesh against the spirit" is no more.

THE PILGRIM'S LAMENT.

BY MRS. R.

"The Lord hath forgotten to call me home,"
Said a pilgrim, old and gray.
"To the eventide of life, yet here I roam,
Awaiting the dawn of day.

"The angel of harvest hath passed me by,
As he gathered the ripened grain;
The Autumn is over; yet here am I
Alone on the dreary plain.

"Two friends of my childhood have one by one
Passed on to the other side
Of the shaded bridge, where a golden sun
Illumines life's changing tide.

"Oh, when shall I follow the blessed train
And rest on yon shining shore?
When the harvest angel shall come again
Will he bear me gently o'er?"

Thou art not forgotten nor gone astray,
Nor left on the earth in vain.
The Lord of the vineyard will send some day
To gather his own again.

Thou art left so long in the olden place
As a record of love divine;
Fulfilling some promise of God's rich grace,
Some holy and wise design.

A little while longer to do his will,
A little while yet to stay:
Then thy soul shall ascend the heavenly hill
And rest in eternal day.

Those Old Letters.

Many thanks to you, dear ADVOCATE, for bringing back to life those old letters, in which every line wakes up the echoes of the long-buried past. The question is, Where have they been all these years, and who now brings them out just in time to be appreciated by the few who still linger on these mortal shores? How little our preachers of to-day can follow poor, sick "Lewis Hobbs" through his great wilderness circuit; often off some Indians trail, feeling his way through canebreak and thicket to the next meeting-house. If old Wilkinson circuit had a tongue, how it could thrill the church to-day with memories of those times! How sweetly it would dwell on that Mecca of Methodism, where over the door, in one of the best rooms in that grand old home, "Bishop McKendree" was written. Here, as many a wayworn preacher was ushered in, "Thank God!" came like breathing as he entered upon his rest. Soon the famous Charles, with kit, brush and duster, came in, and all his wants were supplied, for the servant loved the preacher next to his master. The library contained just the books for such a room; and so, refreshed in soul, mind and body, he was ready to mingle in social intercourse with the family of one of the noblest men the State has ever produced, so acknowledged and accepted from that day to this. No wonder the memory of such a home is all tangled up in the heart-strings of others beside the prophets and their sons. "Bro. Cosby (Judge McGehee's father-in-law) would buy my horse." Yes, of course, he would, if he thought the preacher wanted money, though he had no use for him—every boy in the neighborhood knew that.

"Dear Winnie" seems to us now something like sacrilege; but poor Hobbs meant no harm by it, and we must forgive him, for the venerable "D. D." was then just taking his first steps on the ladder of fame. 'Tis hard to tear myself away from these old sainted landmarks, but your space is precious and I must be prudent.

SPRINGFIELD, Missouri.

Grenada Collegiate Institute.

The school established by the Methodists of North Mississippi for the higher education of their daughters, the Grenada Collegiate Institute, opened up bravely this year, and its friends entertain very sanguine hopes of its future prosperity. Situated as Grenada is, at the junction of two lines of railroads, and accessible not only to all the hill-country of North Mississippi, but in easy distance of the magnificent bottom-country, which is opening up so rapidly, the location of the college is, indeed, a fortunate one.

The Board of Trustees, composed of some of the most prominent ministers and laymen of the Conference, are ever watchful of the interests of the college, and the president, Rev. T. J. Newell, than whom no one stands higher in educational circles, is tireless in his efforts to advance the material prosperity of the school.

The dormitories are rapidly filling up with boarders—many of them the daughters of ministers—and we hope by the holidays, at least, to have reached as high a number as has ever been attained in former years. That this institution offers superior advantages to young ladies wishing thorough training in the practical branches of an education, is shown by the fact that its graduates are in demand as teachers immediately after leaving its walls, and that county superintendents testify that the girls leaving here have no difficulty in passing the examinations required by the State. This is no insignificant thing in these days, when nine girls out of ten are preparing to teach in our public schools. The health of the college and, indeed, of Grenada is exceptionally good. During the whole of last session there was not a serious case of illness in the school, and it was a rare occurrence that a boarder was absent from her recitations through indisposition.

We were highly favored last week in having among us so many ministers of our much-loved Conference; the occasion being the visit of Bishop Galloway, accompanied by Dr. Wheat, in the interest of the college for boys. Dr. Wheat's address on education was considered one of the finest productions ever listened to in Grenada, and, of course, under the magnetism and eloquence of "our Bishop" the audience was swayed at will. A very liberal donation to the endowment fund was secured, and Grenada expects to speak very emphatically for herself when the question of the location comes to be considered. Among other visiting ministers present on that occasion were Rev. T. W. Dye, of Oxford, formerly a much-loved pastor at this place; Revs. Mr. Lewis, of Winona; Mr. Scruggs, of Abbeville, and Prof. Sims, of the University, formerly a member of the faculty at Vanderbilt.

On Sunday following we had the pleasure of hearing Prof. Sims preach two such sermons as we rarely have the opportunity of hearing. After the morning sermon a lady, who had followed the speaker attentively, said that she thought the church committed a grave error in allowing such men as Professor Sims to be immured within the walls of a class-room while the multitudes, who are hungering for the Word of Life, are, in many instances, forced to accept the miserable substitute thrown to them by some sensational imitator of Sam Jones' evangelism. Personal invective and amusing anecdotes, plentifully mixed with slang, draw many through Idle carelessly; but the seed that is sowed on good ground, and that brings forth abundant fruit, has been matured under different influences from these.

Our pastor, Rev. J. A. Thomas, has labored most efficiently with this church for nearly two years, and is greatly loved by all his people. He has succeeded in raising funds for repairs on the church, which will when completed render it "a thing of beauty" and, we hope, "a joy forever."

GRENADA, Mississippi.

Mansfield Female College.

This institution is flourishing under the popular, diligent, watchful Rev. A. D. McVoy, A. M., ably assisted by a corps of five capable, efficient teachers; all communicants in the church. There are more than thirty boarders in the college home, with more expected. Good health, peace and contentment reign. Have rarely looked at a finer and more promising body of girls and maidens to be developed and rounded into Christian womanhood. We must have pronounced Christian education for our boys and girls at any cost and sacrifice.

Lest erroneous impression shall go out detrimental to this honored school, we record the death, October 3, of a lovely girl aged fifteen—Miss Decia Rhodes, of the Island, Moorehouse parish, who was just convalescing from a spell of hematuria (swamp fever.) She came by advice of her physician, as I learn, seeking the hills, as she could not live in the swamp. Had had attacks of this dreaded disease for five consecutive summers. Surcharged with the swamp malaria, she came with five others from the same neighborhood. Never recited a lesson. She patiently suffered for about a month, tenderly nursed and cared for, not only by the excellent matron and college people, but our noble, Christian women, as angels of mercy, ministering and tenderly watching till the last. She had the best medical talent and skill; but her life, oscillating for weeks between life and death, finally yielded to the pressure, and the lovely girl passed into the spirit realm. Her father and mother were with her, and go from our midst with a tide of sympathy following them. A short, but impressive funeral service was conducted by President McVoy and the pastor in the presence of the school, and the body wreathed with flowers, in its narrow casket, was conveyed to the depot, and thence to the home burying-ground on the Island, there to rest beside her grandmother. I am thus specific in stating her case as she came here sick, and her death is in no sense to be attributed to the college or country. It only serves to prove, in cases of sickness, how many willing hands and hearts are ready to nurse and help.

Mansfield is a very healthy town. I learn from the oldest physician here that only one other death has occurred in the college during its existence—thirty-four years—and that one before the war, in the fifties.

Earnest good work, prayer, faith, and enthusiasm, and Mansfield College will be abreast of our leading schools.

From the Work.

JOE JONES AT AMITE CITY.

MR. EDITOR: Never was the religion of Christ so diffusively widespread and vividly felt among the people of our little city, than at the present time. Religious topics are being discussed in the home, in the saloon and in the different places of business. Ever and anon I meet with a group of men on the streets talking about the great meeting and the truly great man who conducted it. Bro. Jones arrived on Sunday, September 22, and spent nine days with us; and it is impossible for me to adequately describe the preacher or his preaching. Eternity alone can reveal all the great work he did at this place. One thing I know: his sermons took hold of the people. Of him it can be said, He came, he saw, he conquered. Sinners were converted, backsliders reclaimed and the walls of Zion built up and strengthened. Men who appeared to be hardened in sin and on whom, hitherto, the gospel appeared to have no effect whatever, came forward crying: "Men and brethren, what must I do to be saved?" The last night of the meeting I baptized twenty-five and received sixty-two into our church. That was one of the grandest sights I ever witnessed. I had received some members previously making in all, who joined our church during the meeting, seventy souls. About thirty joined the other churches. Unlike some other evangelists, Bro. Jones is a friend to the preacher; he says he does not want anyone to contribute toward his support who will not pay their preacher. The last Sabbath he was with us, he announced that he wanted twenty-five dollars as a thank-offering, stating that he would appropriate it as he thought best. I think every man, woman and child present must have given something. Not only the twenty-five dollars, but over twice that amount was secured. The congregation having expressed a willingness to let him apply it as he saw proper, he gave the twenty-five to the preacher in charge. Bro. Jones having expressed a desire to purchase a home at this place, our people are taking steps towards purchasing one for him and making him a present of it. One of our most prominent citizens, whose place of business is in New Orleans, having returned home and perceiving what a great change had been wrought in the men of this place, says if one man can be instrumental in doing so much good, that he was willing to assist in securing him a home our midst.

F. M. KEEN.

ST. TAMMANY CAMP MEETING.

MR. EDITOR: Our St. Tammany Camp Meeting, with all the good preaching that was done, its sweet songs and pathetic prayers, is a thing of the past; but I trust that the inexpressible joy that was felt through all the meeting by scores of precious souls may continue on till God says, "'Tis enough; come up higher." Pursuant to announcement, the meeting commenced Friday, September 27, and continued till Wednesday night, October 2. From the first service displays of the Divine Spirit were manifest. As the meeting progressed the influences of the Spirit were more pungently felt. Sinners were convicted, penitents converted, mourners comforted and Christians made to rejoice. Ministers present, and who preached in the power of the Spirit, were Revs. T. S. West, presiding elder of Seashore district; T. W. Adams, of Pearlington, Miss.; S. J. Davies, of Dryades Street Church, of New Orleans; G. T. Vickers and L. W. Wood, of Covington circuit. Nothing but eternity will reveal the good that was accomplished in this meeting. Old men, and men who before have taken no part in religion, were aroused and that mightily. The closing services were very touching, indeed. There were several hundred persons in attendance; and, after a sermon full of the fire of the Holy Ghost, delivered by Bro. Adams, and a general pleading for pardon from the penitents, and rejoicing of the Christians around the altar, a request was made to all those who would promise, by the grace of God, to meet the writer in heaven, to come up and give him their hand. In response to this request there was a general rush, as if every one wanted to get to their unworthy servant first. Catholics, Presbyterians, Lutherans' Episcopalians, Methodists and Baptists, —all irrespective of creed, and even the most obdurate—came and gave me a hearty shake of the hand. It is useless for me to say, Mr. Editor, that my heart was full to overflowing, for that would not express my feelings at such a scene; but one thing I can express, and that is, that God may ever keep me in the very dust of humility and help me to serve these dear, good people acceptably, and when the battle of life is over, may we all have a grand handshaking on the shining shores of eternal deliverance. Eighteen accessions, and about forty-five professed conversions during the meeting. With all the earnestness of my soul I say, Praise the Lord!—and may this grand and glorious work go on until the white light of God's infinite love floods this country as the "waters do the great deep!" Pray for us.

Yours in Christ,

G. R. ELLIS, P. C.

NATCHITOCHES, LA.

MR. EDITOR: In accordance with my wishes, I commenced my meeting here September 6. From the very first service the Holy Spirit descended upon the people, and seemed to arouse them to a higher life. The people proved that they were "hungering and thirsting after righteousness" by coming in crowds to almost every service. They would often come at night from points nine miles distant to church. I don't think Natchitoches was ever shaken by the power of God as during my recent meeting there. Nearly every night the large altar railing was filled with penitents seeking for life and light and liberty. And it was not infrequent that the light of Calvary broke upon their sin-darkened souls.

Bro. Wimberly, of Plaquemine, was with me; and under his strong, Holy Ghost, eloquent and touching sermons, sinners were aroused, backsliders reclaimed, and Christians were strengthened, confirmed and perfected in their hopes. This magnetic, God-fearing man did not let any of the so-called popular, yet damnable and ruinous, sins of the age go by uncondemned. The anathemas of God's wrath were powerfully hurled by this man against the ball room, the card table, the wine glass, the race track; and the very foundations upon which rested the mightiest structures of sin began to tremble and quake. We had nine adult accessions to our church. Glory be to God for our recent victory at Natchitoches! This old sin-cursed town can and will be brought to Christ. Pray on for us, brethren, and we will soon bear off the victor's palm. To God be all the praise!

A. H. M'VOY, JR., Pastor.

WATER VALLEY CIRCUIT, NORTH MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.

MR. EDITOR: I have had five meetings of my own—the camp meeting three and a half miles from Water Valley being a joint one. I closed a meeting a week ago ten miles east of Water Valley, in which seventeen professed faith in Christ. Also closed one this week three miles east of Water Valley, resulting in eight professions; had ten before at that point.

The camp meeting was a success—twenty-one families from the country, and eight or nine from Water Valley, tenting. We had a fine corps of preachers—sixteen. T. W. Dye, J. W. Price and O. L. Savage, of our church, and A. B. Fly, of the Methodist Free Church, did most of the preaching, and did it well, too. Bro. Wyatt—last, but not least, only like Zaccheus—did some fine sharpshooting and skirmishing; indeed, he has won much love from many of my people and myself for his valor. We claim thirty-five professions, at least; may have been more.

Since the camp meeting I organized a church of thirty-four members at the camp ground.

I have had fifty-eight professions of conversion and upwards of sixty accessions, the majority on profession of faith.

BIBLE BRILLIANTS, OR MOTHER'S HOME BIBLE STORIES. By Rev. George [illegible] Hammell. Sold only by subscription. Published by Cranston and Stowe, Cincinnati.

This is the most magnificently illustrated work for children that has been published to be sold by sub-scription at so low a price. With its two full-page illustrations in nine colors, and sixty-six other full-page illustrations together with one hundred and five illustrations between half and full-page and one hundred and forty-seven smaller than half-page illustrations, it has a wealth of pictures that will make it a valuable work to have in any home where there are children. The letter-press was written by Rev. George W. Hammell, whose literary work has been well received by the religious press of this country. The mechanical work is the very best. It is printed on heavy super-calendered paper, and bound in the best style of the bookbinder's art. The design on the cover is exceedingly handsome and attractive and is printed in black and gold.

Young people who live in these days of cheap postage, find it hard to realize that the time was when it cost six cents to send a letter thirty miles or less, and twenty-five cents for a distance over 450 miles. These rates were established in 1792, and were proportioned to distance as well as to weight. People did not write many letters in those days, owing to these high rates, so in 1845 the government reduced the charges to five cents for letters weighing not more than half an ounce, provided they were not to be carried more than 300 miles. If the distance exceeded that, the charge was ten cents. In 1851 a second reduction made the rate three cents for distances under 3,000 miles, while in 1863, all restriction of distance in the country was taken off, and three-cent postage continued till October, 1883, when the two-cent rate went into effect. Since 1847, when the first postage stamp was made, there have been 160 varieties issued. A collection of all of them would be a valuable treasure for any boy or girl.

LESSON IV.—October 27.

Sin, Forgiveness, and Peace.

Psa. xxxii, 1-11.

GOLDEN TEXT.—Therefore being justified by faith, we have peace with God through our Lord Jesus Christ.—Rom. v, 1.

TIME.—B. C. 1054. Grotius thinks that it was designed to be sung on the great day of atonement.

PLACE.—Jerusalem.

1. Blessed—The word blessed is in the plural. O, the blessednesses! the double joys, the bundles of happiness, the mountains of delight. This verse is explained by Paul, in Rom iv, 6, as relating to justification "without works," and "by faith." Covered—Alluding to the covering of the Egyptians in the Red Sea.

2. Imputeth not—The idea is not that he is happy on whom God does not charge the guilt of other men, but that he is happy who is not charged with his own guilt, or is treated as if he had no guilt—that is, as if he were innocent. This is the true idea of justification. The threefold designation, sin, transgression, and iniquity, seems to be borrowed from Exod. xxxiv, 7, where the doctrine of forgiveness is first fully and explicitly propounded. No guile—The guile of the spirit is an inward corruption in the soul of man, whereby he dealeth deceitfully with himself before God in the matter of salvation. Sincerity is that property to which pardoning mercy is annexed.

3. Kept silence—Refrained from acknowledging my sins to God. Bones waxed old—The bones are here put for the framework of the body in which the strength resides, and the decay of which implies extreme debilitation. Roaring—David not only mourns for sin as a man, but he roars out, as it were, like a pained beast. He seems fitter for a wilderness to cry out than for a secret chamber to weep in.

4. My moisture—His inward agonies are represented as intense and parching heats. The dry grass of the fields sometimes takes fire and produces desolating conflagrations, and the parched earth is cleft and broken into chasms.

5. The iniquity of my sin—The perverseness of my aberration. An aberration from the scope or mark which real one sins; all men aim at felicity, but most men stray from it, because they are not led by the law that guides unto it.... But some do stray out of mere ignorance; and they only break the law; some out of stubbornness, which will not submit themselves to the lawgiver; these men's sin is called perverseness.

6. For this—Or on this account, to wit, because I have experienced the blessedness of penitent confession and the pardon which invariably follows it. Godly pray unto thee—Here we see not only that all the godly pray, but every one of them prays for pardon. This is the very thing which our Savior teaches his disciples, "When ye pray, say, Forgive us our trespasses." And this praying does not only regard the manifestation of forgiving mercy, as some would have it, but the exercise of it. Mayest be found—Literally, the time of finding. No object being given. It may be Jehovah himself, or it may be generally grace and forgiveness. Surely in the floods of great waters—In this case there may be a particular allusion to the interval between the sin and punishment, during which the penitent confessions and importunate petitions of the sinner—that is, the offending saint, to whom alone the psalmist here refers—may avail to arrest the judgments which must inevitably follow. This effect is described in the last clause by the figure of a flood which is not suffered to extend to him. The word translated surely means in strictness only—that is, the effect of such a prayer will be only this; or, as we may say, neither more nor less.

7. My hiding-place—An allusion, probably, to the city of refuge. Songs of deliverance—How effectively the music again comes in, prolonging the thought and rejoicing in the pardon! How sure he is that his experience is of priceless value to the world for all time, when he sees in his absolution a clue that will draw all the godly nearer to their Helper in heaven!

8. Instruct thee ... teach thee ... guide thee—Some regard these as the word of God to David; but besides the gratuitous assumption of two different speakers in the two successive verses, without anything to indicate a change, the obvious allusion in the first word to the laconic title of the psalm—as if the assurance there promised was about to be imparted—makes it altogether probable that David is here speaking in his own person and fulfilling the vow recorded in another place, that when forgiven and restored to communion with God, he would teach transgressors his ways. He may, therefore, be considered as addressing another like himself—to wit, a godly person overtaken in transgression or exposed to strong temptation—and offering to point out to him the path of safety. With mine eye—The idea is that of one who is telling another what way he is to take in order that he may reach a certain place; and he says he will watch him, or keep an eye upon him; he will not let him go wrong.

9. Not as the horse, or as the mule—The mule is, among various nations, a proverbial type of stubborn persistency in evil, and we find analogous allusions to the horse in Jer. v, 8; viii, 6. The reason for using a comparison with brutes is intimated in the second clause, to wit: that the debased irrationality of sin might be distinctly brought into view. Lest they come near unto thee—The verb used is a military term, and signifies to advance, as an enemy, to attack. The "coming near," therefore, intended here is the coming near to do mischief.

10. Mercy shall compass him about—He shall be surrounded with mercy—as one is surrounded by the air or by the sunlight. He shall find mercy and favor everywhere—at home, abroad; by day, by night; in society, in solitude; in sickness, in health; in life, in death; in time, in eternity. He shall walk amid mercies; he shall die amid mercies; he shall live in a better world in the midst of eternal mercies.

11. Ye righteous—As opposed to the wicked; not the absolutely perfect, but those trusting in the mercy of Jehovah for deliverance both from punishment and sin.

Missionary.

The Crisis in Japan.

BY REV. FRANK N. WHITE.

We here in Japan feel that we are approaching a crisis in our work, and we are anxious that the needs of our field should be the object of special consideration and that Japan should, if possible, for some time to come, be made the special field of the work of the Board. This arises from no overestimation of our own needs as compared with those of other fields. Missionaries from other lands, when they visit us to see the grand beginning that has been made here, and the great opportunities that are before us now, and the still greater opportunities soon to be before us, say unhesitatingly that the Board should concentrate upon Japan its money and its men, as far as possible, for some time to come.

As you probably know, the new treaty simply awaits formal ratification by the Senate, and the country is soon to be free to us to come and go, to build our homes and to work as we will. If your work has grown to such proportions as at present under trying limitations, to what an extent may we not expect it to enlarge when these limitations have been removed! Religious liberty, too, has been granted by the new constitution, and thus another great obstacle to our work has been taken away. The people are ready to hear. There will be no difficulty in obtaining large and thoughtful audiences. While many of the people are indifferent, many, too, with their confidence in their old faith shaken, are in an attitude of inquiry. We have not to arouse interest and stir minds out of stupor, but are privileged to meet minds already restless and reaching out for some satisfactory faith. Moreover the people are comparatively well disposed toward us. We possess a language that they are anxious to command, and many in this way are brought to us. The generous policy of our government in all of its dealings with this country, renders them ready to listen to representatives of the home land. The conviction deepens that civilization and Christianity go hand in hand; in a word, are inseparable.

Of what other country can these things be said? Where else are there opportunities comparable with these which confront us? In what other country has the way been so prepared and so clearly marked out? Where else have been, where can be, similar results secured with anything like a proportionate outlay in men and money? Is it not the policy—dictated by wisdom—to seize upon such a grand opportunity when it thus thrusts itself in the way? We believe so, and to this end are planning a rapid extension of the work. We want to plant at least six new stations, and each station should be equipped with two families and with one single lady. Each one of these places is a center from which at least nearly a million of people can be reached, and they all naturally fall to us as parts of the great field for which we are responsible.

At this time when aggression is the imperative policy, the question is, Can we have the needed reinforcements? Will the American Board stand by us in carrying out the work it has so nobly begun? We believe it will as soon as the facts are thoroughly understood. At our annual meeting only a few days ago, it was decided to memorialize the Board at its coming meeting upon this subject. We hope (and is it presumptuous?) that the needs and promise of Japan will be the central thought of that meeting; that men will be led to offer themselves for this field, and that the means to send them will there be consecrated.

Do not be deceived by the current rumor that Japan is practically Christianized, and that missionaries can soon be dispensed with. A more grievous mistake could not be made. Japan has made some progress, but the great mass of the 37,000,000 of this land are yet practically untouched. Missionaries are still needed, and will be needed in largely increasing numbers for a generation, if not more, to come.

The Japanese themselves, with all their love of independent action, would be the first to deplore any diminution of help from other lands.

Is this not as great a privilege as the Board has ever had—this opportunity to step in at the right moment and aid a nation in its new birth?—Advance.

Statistics respecting the liberality of native converts always contain a covert reproach upon Christians in the home land. The Protestants under the care of the Eastern Turkey Mission of the A. B. C. F. M. contributed last year $13,000 for religious and educational purposes, which, as money rates in that country, is equivalent to perhaps $75,000 in the United States. This is an average of ninety cents for each declared Protestant throughout the mission, and $4 80 for each church member. When it is remembered that the wages of a common laborer are from ten to fifteen cents a day, and of a man with a trade from twenty to forty cents, one gets a still better appreciation of what these converts are willing to pay, not merely for their own gospel privileges, but to help others to the same. The Moravians have long been an example to other Christian sects in the matter of benevolence to "dissidents." If the Christians of this country gave in like proportion, there would be ten times the amount of money at the service of the missionary societies.

Temperance.

The sum of $300,000 passes over the saloon bars in high license Chicago every Sunday.

One year's work of one woman, Mrs. Helen L. Bullock, has brought more than 1,500 active and nearly 700 honorary members into the W. C. T. U. of New York State.

A noticeable growth of temperance sentiment among the Indians of southern California is reported by local superintendents of W. C. T. U. work among them.

Miss Frances E. Willard and Miss Anna Gordon left Evanston for the East, September 30, to fill engagements for W. C. T. U. work in Connecticut, Pennsylvania, New York and Massachusetts.

Eighty Japanese girls at Nagasaki, Japan, are banded together in a Y. W. C. T. U. that is said to be the strongest organization of the kind in the empire. They give special attention to social purity work and are preparing a petition to the government against legal concubinage.

The Chinese viceroy, Li Hung Chang, was lately interviewed by a philanthropic Englishman, in the interest of temperance, peace and arbitration. During the interview champagne was offered. On his guest's refusal the viceroy asked whether he was a "teetotaler," and, receiving an affirmative answer, said, with a smile, "I perceive that you are a man of benevolence."

A correspondent of the Northwestern Christian Advocate claims that Iowa is not a subject for Niagara sympathy," and says: "With the railroads solvent in spite of our railroad legislation; with farmers able to pay mortgages and increase their improvements in spite of low prices in buying; with our mercantile interests large and prosperous; without the 'inspiration' of the saloon, and no business so poor as that of the county sheriff, it goes without saying that prohibition in Iowa is not a failure."

Illinois Methodists, in recent session at Quincy, passed the following resolution:

"Resolved, That it is the sense of this Conference, that in relation to the regulation of the liquor traffic, the principle of absolute prohibition is superior to our political party ties, and we will refuse to vote for the candidates of any party who do not believe in the practical enforcement of that principle in municipal, State or national affairs."

"There is but one way to kill a devilfish. You may hack away at its arms and even cut them off one after another, but the things still lives and clings while there is a feeler left. But one dextrous blow in the region of the eyes and the creature is no more. So with the saloon octopus. You may cut and slash at the arm of the saloon in politics, or the arm about the press, or the arm about the home, or the freer about the church, and the monster seems little injured. But apply the keen blade of political prohibition to the soft part of the head near the eyes, and suddenly the long arms lose their power and the huge mass collapses and falls into a heap, ugly but harmless. —New York Pioneer.

Miss Frances E. Willard's fiftieth birthday, September 28 was celebrated in Evanston by unusual "doings." From morning until night congratulatory telegrams and letters, flowers and presents poured in upon her. In the afternoon the children of the Loyal Temperance Legion formed a procession and conducted her to the Methodist Church, where a "Harvest Home" program was given and flowers and gifts presented. In the evening more than a thousand people assembled in the auditorium of the Methodist Church to honor this prophet of their own country, who was taken completely by surprise. Addresses were made and congratulations offered by Mr. H. H. C. Miller, president of the village, in behalf of the village; Rev. Joseph Cummings, D. D., president of the Northwestern University, in behalf of the University; Rev. Dr. Jones, pastor of the Methodist Church, in behalf of the clergy; Mrs. Elizabeth Wheeler Andrew, in behalf of the W. C. T. U., and Mrs. Elizabeth Boynton Harbert, in behalf of the Women's National Council. To all these expressions of honor and regard Miss Willard responded with grace and earnestness. The entire occasion was exceptional and proves the infallibility of more than one traditional maxim.

Several of our papers are now calling upon their readers for special contributions to carry forward our mission work in Japan. The good results of our own efforts in this direction are seen, and the work is being thus imitated to stir our people to special effort. We are glad to note this fact. There is nothing so telling in its effect as a special effort. Look at our list again and see how it grows by these special efforts. Have you sent in your contribution? Read the article in our missionary column on "The Crisis in Japan," and you will realize that a "great and effectual door has been opened."

The following dispatch from San Francisco was published in the Times-Democrat, last Monday:

J. V. Penn, the young Methodist minister of Jackson, La., who disappeared suddenly last November, was found in this city Friday night, working under an assumed name in a business house. The first intimation of his presence here came from a New Orleans dispatch saying he wished to be reinstated in the ministry.

The details of Penn's disappearance are still fresh in the recollection of people, but though detectives were employed no clew was ever gained to his fate until he ultimately revealed his hiding place. The fact that he was engaged to a young lady, and had paid court to others, led to suspicious of foul play, or of infidelity on his part, but his story is so straightforward that it settles these. He said:

"When I left Jackson so mysteriously I was suffering from insanity, brought on by nervous prostration, overwork and business disappointments. I was trying to raise $50,000 for Centenary College, and was getting along admirably, when the storm and flood of 1888 along the Gulf coast upset all my plans. Then I was attempting to secure possession of valuable lands left to me and other relatives. A cousin who had promised to join me in legal proceedings refused to do so at the last moment, and I was then disappointed about receiving money upon which I had depended to marry the woman I loved. I became despondent and insane. I was filled with an overwhelming desire to get away. At New Orleans I took a train, not knowing or caring in what direction I went. I proceeded to St. Louis, and from there to Kansas City, and from there direct to San Francisco, where I have been ever since. At Kansas City I imagined I saw Bishop Galloway in a hotel, and then for the first time I took an assumed name, under which I have lived ever since."

Mr. Penn says he was ill here for several months, but was kindly cared for by Odd Fellows. When health returned he made himself known to a local clergyman, and through him appealed to the Conference. He says he will make a public statement in a few days, and will then start for home.

"Passing through the Gates, and Other Sermons, by Bishop McTyeire."

The appearance of this volume is rather a surprise to the Methodist public. Whatever high estimate had been placed upon this author seemed due, not to his pulpit efforts, but to his brain and work for the material interests of the church. He was a thinker rather than a speaker, a founder, a wise master-builder, but not an orator. He established the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE, he wrote on church laws and history, he wisely administered the episcopal office, he founded the Vanderbilt University; but his preaching was more analytical than rhetorical, more like a demonstration in mathematics than an oration.

Yet nothing is truer than that the Holy Ghost will use any man's gifts and natural endowments to the edification of his hearers, if only he give himself to that divine influence. On some occasions it was as true as of any man that Bishop McTyeire preached with the Holy Ghost sent down from heaven. On one occasion, at least, the writer witnessed the most extraordinary effects among the preachers of the Alabama Conference in 1852, when the sermon on, "Ye have an unction from the Holy One, and ye know all things," was being delivered in the slow and stately manner of its author. The fountains of the deep were broken up and the windows of heaven were opened.

Other sermons, not contained in this volume, produced profound impression. One before the District Conference, near Decatur, Ala., in 1877; another before the Holston Conference, at Morristown, in 1879; another at Oxford, Ala., in 1881, left nothing to be desired in fullness of expression and power of application upon the large audiences who heard them. Some of his texts were Romans xv, 29—"The fullness of the blessing of the gospel of Christ;" "Zaccheus, the Publican;" "Agree with thine adversary while thou art in the way with him;" "It is required of a steward that he be found faithful;" on "judging ourselves," and others of equal interest with any found in this volume.

The drift of the Bishop's mind was practical. He cared little for ornament, but was fertile in illustration, often using names and dates for his purposes. This gave him his great power on occasions like those so freely used in this volume on the deaths of eminent men—Vanderbilt, and McFerrin, and of several of his colleagues. Bishop McTyeire studied men. He was fond of history and of great characters. Had he been a painter, his subjects would have been historical. Had he been a poet, he would have written tragedy or epics. The awful in death and the judgment attracted his meditations. To his mind there was a close connection between the present world and the future. The connecting link was the sense of moral responsibility for actions done here. He thought much on the future state. Speculative theology had little charm for his great mind, but he sought to understand the revelation of things as they exist in another world. To him heaven and hell were realities. Nothing could be more solemn than his treatment of death, the resurrection, the judgment, and eternity.

"Great God, on what a slender thread
Hang everlasting things;
The eternal state of all the dead
Upon life's feeble strings."

His son-in-law and colaborer in the university, Prof. Tigert, has given us a fine introduction to this volume of sermons. He surprises us by the statement that there are ample stores of manuscript, skeletons and notes, carefully preserved from the Bishop's early as well as later ministry, for we had supposed the author averse to writing, except for immediate publication. Most of his pulpit efforts bore the appearance of being born of the occasion, and not, in the ordinary sense, prepared for the press. True, there was always a high range of thought and a perfect aptness of language, making them as fit to be read as listened to, but the literary finish and expansion was wanting.

That the Bishop could write with singular and exquisite touch was manifest in a thousand editorials and communications for the periodical press, as well as from his few, but finished published works, and his style of speech was astonishingly like the work of his pen; but the itinerancy is the foe to literary fame, and his hands being full of executive labor, both in the episcopacy and the university, he could scarcely have found time to elaborate essays or sermons. With the exception of the few funeral and other discourses, prepared with a view to immediate publication, we must beg leave to doubt whether any such volumes of sermons, as those of Robert Hall or Thomas Chalmers, can be formed from his notes.

Enough has been given us, to prove what he might have done in the pulpit of a station preacher had he long continued in one congregation. The characteristic of all his work is its genuine sincerity and simple faith in the doctrines of the Bible. The inspiration of the truth breathes through all his literary work. The Bible was more to him than any other book. His knowledge and his estimates of men are always taken by that standard. A full belief in the operations of Divine Providence over human lives, and of the influences of the Holy Spirit upon human hearts, marks the selection of his texts and the treatment of his subjects. His greatness was his faith. One of his greatest sermons was delivered before the Alabama Conference, at Columbus, Miss., in 1863, on I. John ii, 15, 16. It was in war times, and men's passions ran high. Much of the baser quality of human nature was manifesting itself in love of the world, the lust of the flesh, the lust of the eye and the pride of life. He gave a masterly analysis of these three forms of sin: Sensuality, ambition, and pride. He went to the Garden of Eden and found the prototype for all these sins in the forbidden fruit—a tree that was good for food, and that was pleasant to the eyes, and a tree to be desired to make one wise. He found the same elements in the three temptations presented by Satan to our Savior in the desert. He described the larger and lower class of victims as falling under the first assault. Then the more moral and refined as yielding to the second. And last of all, those who having clean escaped these lower forms of vice and worldliness, fall through intellectual and spiritual pride into the snare of the devil and are taken captive by him at his will.

To us Bishop McTyeire was a great preacher. We always went to the church when he preached at Conference, and never came empty away. His humor often made us smile, and his pathos moved us to tears; but somehow his sermons always enriched us, as the smile of a field which the Lord hath blessed with the dew of heaven, and the fatness of the earth and plenty of corn and wine. His preaching was more like strong meat for men than milk for babes. It had the marrow and fatness of the gospel in it, and it required a certain strength and maturity in the hearer in order to be appreciated. The slow and measured fire of artillery, rather than the rattle of small arms or the rushing charge of cavalry, gave the sense of a profound interest, of a prolonged and desperate engagement, the issues of which must affect the destinies of great bodies of men rather than the interests of individuals. Such was the preaching of Bishop McTyeire.

The Colored Methodist Episcopal Church.

Our friends of this church have had quite a rally of their forces in this city during the past week. Some time ago they sold their church property on Seventh street, and purchased the Calvary Episcopal Church, on the corner of Prytania and Counery streets. This is a fine property and a fine location. The congregation has been worshiping in this house for quite a while. The enterprising pastor, Rev. J. C. W. Smith, has lately organized a day school in the basement, which, in honor of Bishop Beebe, he calls Beebe Institute. This school has, at this writing, three teachers and seventy-five pupils, with an increasing tendency. We think they have done a wise thing in organizing that school, for it will be a benefit to the congregation in many ways. In order to arouse interest in the work of this church in our city, the pastor planned a very interesting program and invited some of the principal men of his denomination from abroad to visit his people, and by lectures, addresses, sermons, etc., let the general colored public know the aims and purposes of his church. Hence, during last week, Bishop J. A. Beebe, of North Carolina; Rev. F. M. Hamilton, editor of The Christian Index, the church organ, published at Jackson, Tenn.; Rev. E. Cottrell, Memphis, Tenn.; Rev. R. S. Williams, Columbia, S. C., have been lecturing and delivering addresses on subjects specially connected with their church origin and history and aims. The impression made by these preachers has been a good one, and we feel free in saying that it will greatly add to the influence of the Colored Methodist Episcopal Church in our city. Bishop Beebe is much encouraged with the future prospects of his church. It is growing and enlarging its borders in every direction. Bishop Beebe has also been quite successful in raising funds among his own people for the purpose of paying off the indebtedness of the church here. They still, however, need as much help as they can get; and if any of our brethren wish to know where they can contribute money that will do a great deal of good, we believe here is the place.

From Japan.

Our annual meeting has just closed, and the reports made of work done the past year were very encouraging. I think I have never worked harder than I have the past year, and I feel truly thankful that God has greatly blessed the work under my charge. I can not say what the statistics will be for the year on the entire work of our mission, but the whole will be made up at the end of this month. I think we may say we have had a prosperous year, and the Lord has blessed us all along the line. I have visited during the year some dark places in Japan, where the light of the gospel of Christ has never penetrated, and where they knew nothing of the true God or of salvation through Jesus Christ. Idolatry and superstition has had full sway, and has kept for centuries thousands in utter ignorance. In these dark corners hundreds flocked to hear the preaching of this (to them) strange doctrine, and, notwithstanding the opposition of Buddhists, many heard the Word gladly and desired to be taught more perfectly. Many followed us some distance on our return, and pleaded with us to return again and tell to the people everywhere the way of salvation!

Near the close of last month, in the city of Himiji, I baptized five persons there. They were the first fruits of our work in that place. One lady who was baptized, I found on the day of her baptism that she had been a pupil in Mrs. Lambuth's school in Kobe. Mrs. Lambuth went to attend the baptismal service and recognized Mrs. Okabe as one of her former pupils. It was, indeed, a great surprise and a happy meeting. The good seed sown had taken root, and we feel that she is truly converted.

One part of my work is in great need of help. They are writing and sending us telegrams asking and imploring help. We feel, in a measure, helpless, for we have no foreign missionary to go and live among them, and we have no native preacher ready to go and preach to them. They are so urgent in their calls, I have concluded to go myself and live among them for three months at least, until I can hear from the home-land. Can you not equip and send us a man to go there and take that part of Japan for the Master? I shall leave here in about three weeks to take up my abode there for a while, at least. The field is ready for the harvest, but where are the reapers? Thousands stand ready to accept Christianity when it is presented to them, but we have no one to send to them. Pray for me, and let the church everywhere pray the Lord of the harvest to raise up laborers to enter in and reap the rich harvest at our doors. If you have the money, send and support a man for that field, so open and ready for the gospel in all its fullness.

Your brother in Christ,

J. W. LAMBUTH.

KOBE, JAPAN, Sept. 16.

Among the Papers.

The Central Methodist, in an article, on "Sin Grows," closes with this weighty paragraph:

As sin grows, virtue lessens. As grace grows, sin departs. There is no standing still in forming character. We are either getting better or worse. The change either way is of our own choice. There are abundant helps to be good or to be bad. No one goes to heaven or to hell alone and unaided. Influences of his own selection help him along. The world, the flesh, and the devil make sin to grow. The Holy Spirit, the Bible, and prayer make grace to grow. In a sense, everyone has as much religion as he desires for present use. If he desired more, he would seek and realize more. But to have more sin, is not a matter of desire or effort. The weeds in the garden grow without cultivation. Born with an evil nature, sin grows in the heart easily. The probationary period is always short and uncertain. Seek grace to-day. Sin grows. Our Savior named a fig tree that stood in a good place for three years without bearing fruit. In those years it did much evil. Its roots and its shade monopolized the ground for some distance, either stopping the growth of any good things or so paralyzing the ground that nothing good made any attempt to grow. If you are without grace, your sins may have been growing for three years last past with a similar result. Examine and see. Sin grows.

Zion's Herald objects to the practice some ministers have of calling the church to the altar to give an expression of faith in answer to certain propositions, and calls it the "Martinet Drill." The Herald says:

The most injurious result, however, is seen in the fact that such a procedure develops insincerity in purpose and life. The membership of the church, for instance, is repeatedly asked to make a most solemn promise to perform a specific act, and then by lifting of hands or by standing the resolve is made. The request may be reasonable or unreasonable, possible or impossible, but the demand is so made that not to respond favorably seems to indicate unfaithfulness, and all pledge to do what there m not be any real purpose of doing. There is no process more like to work degeneracy of moral li than frequent pressure in suc direction. Pledges that shou be most sacred come to be co sidered as of little or no bindi force. Such a system work confusion of the moral sens distorts the conscience, and act ally cultivates insincerity. Pa ticular harm is done to your Christians by such method When this practice is general introduced as a part of ever social service, it becomes form and artificial, an irksome routi without spiritual life, an effort t work by certain mechanical pro cesses what can only be wrough by the Holy Spirit upon the ind vidual soul. Much time is thu consumed, the congregation wearied, and the good impre sions already made are large dissipated.

The Wesleyan Christian Advocate, discoursing on the "Limitations of Usefulness," in the following paragraph, shows how those limitations are reached by thousands of our people:

Making all allowances for lac of early education, there ar thousands in the church wh have practically cut themselve off from all good and grea works by a persistent self-im posed ignorance. More than hal the membership of the churc do not know what Christ is no doing in the world. They re fuse to take and read the churc papers. They do not know wha Christ is doing in the world o thought, of literature, of science of art; they are ignorant of th spread of the gospel in the world, of its triumphs over th old religions of the East, of it power to still turn the world up side down; they seem to b quite content to know tha Christ is their Savior and th Savior of a few of their neigh bors, and resist all efforts to in duce them to take further inter est in the matter. Their lack o knowing what Christ is doing i the world unfits them for any par in the great movements of Chris tianity—knowledge which the might easily obtain by reading weekly any good church paper.

Notes.

Back of every statute of the crim inal code of the State stands the im partial and eternal Judge, and in hi hands are the retributive sanctions o all law. Eliminate this one fact fro the consciousness of mankind, and th gates of hell will swing wide open And yet there are men who have de liberately set to work to do this ver thing; teaching doctrines which i received, will uproot all the founda tions. A world without God! I means, man leveled down to the brute and earth turned into pandemonium.

As the Conference year is drawing to its close, we find ourselves musing and putting questions. Have I done my duty? Have I made a wise use o privilege and opportunity? Have I exerted my mental, moral and physi cal powers in such a way as to accom plish results, that will, in the future become the efficient causes of still better results in the still further future? Have I met my obligations in such a manner as to produce a cumu lative result, that will keep growing for all the years to come? Alas! how few can answer affirmatively!

In his second letter to the Corinthians, chapter 13, and verse 9, Paul expresses a wish in these words: "And this also we wish, even your perfection." In the eleventh verse of the same chapter he exhorts in these words: "Be perfect." In the original the same word is used in both cases; one being the noun and the other the verb. According to the best authorities, the noun means, "a thorough adjustment." The verb means, "completely adjusted to surroundings." Here, then, is Paul's view of "perfection." This agrees with the scientific definition of a "perfect life." Herbert Spencer says: "Perfect correspondence would be perfect life. Were there no changes in the environment but such as the organism had adapted changes to meet, and were it never to fail in the efficiency with which it met them, there would be eternal existence." Now the word Paul uses, which has been translated "perfection," shows that his idea was the same idea expressed by Mr. Spencer. His wish was that the Corinthians should be "thoroughly adjusted to the circumstances of their life." And what is that but Mr. Spencer's "perfect correspondence?" His exhortation was: "Be ye completely adjusted to God and his law, to man and his claims, indeed to everything." Is not that a beautiful idea? Is it not an interesting view of this whole matter? And what better definition of perfection can we have than the literal meaning of the apostle's word gives us?

Dr. Carradine on Entire Sanctification.

The "flesh" is actually "dead," without force or influence; so that it is "led by the Spirit." The terms applied to the process are as strong as can be, and indicate a most thorough and decisive work in the "flesh" for the soul, and in the soul, so far as it may have been left deficient by a complete regeneration, not in itself partial. The terms "redemption, propitiation and satisfaction" of our Article are not properly interpreted as signifying any subjective effect accomplished in man, but rather as indicating a work of God in the sense of a "plan," a system of operation wholly on the divine side. They are terms that express only the divine side of redemption—a work God has done for man, by which he may be saved and sanctified, and receive all the fullness of the blessing of God in Christ Jesus—a work by which "the whole world" may be saved from all sin, "both original and actual."

I submit that Articles VII. and XX. of our creed, interpreted in the light of the facts of human life, can not mean such a sanctification as is nowadays claimed in certain quarters. The sanctification of our creed and of the Bible leaves us in possession of all the Adamic effects or original sin, transmissible to our posterity, but leaves us without guilt or responsibility further than our actual, personal sinning, and, at the same time, secures for us that spiritual assistance needed for a victory over "the world, the flesh, and the devil," without annihilating either. To my thinking, our sanctification brethren are a little awry. I do not question their honesty of purpose, but their logic.

Let no one construe this paper into an assault upon holiness of heart. The practical, concrete fact of holiness is one thing; but the theoretical system and logical structure is quite another. We may wage war on logical fields, and be in harmony in the concrete. I do not, in the least, question the holiness of heart professed by Dr. Carradine; but when he constructs a logical form as the intellectual basis of such a holiness, I can, in all candor and Christian affection, differ from him as intensely and emphatically as I may wish, and, at the same time, be as holy as he, provided the essential doctrines of religion are accepted. But logical forms graduate into experience. That professed holiness must issue in corresponding holiness of life; otherwise I must question the integrity of the profession. If he ever becomes conscious of the movement of sin, not now felt, and finds himself tending toward sin in any way or degree, it must be considered evidence of a discrepancy in the profession, or an apostasy. Of course, the sanctificationist can not surrender the doctrine of the possibility of apostasy, if he be a Methodist. But a Presbyterian sanctificationist is confirmed in an infallible election. Doctrinally, sanctification can not negative the doctrine of apostasy, even if it places the sanctified precisely where Adam stood before his transgression. But if he occupies such a position in grace, that estops the descent of depravity in his lineage. And sin, in an individual after sanctification, must partake of the nature of Adam's sin, inasmuch as he stands in a federal relation to a line of posterity beginning in him, that must be "corrupted," in consequence of lineage from him. And what must follow?

The sanctified and unsanctified uniting in marriage strangely complicate the moral attitude of their children. Sanctification, therefore, brings us under obligation to marry only among the sanctified; otherwise we sin against the race, in as far as it depends upon us. And such an act of disregard to righteousness and holiness is certainly a personal sin.

McTYEIRE INSTITUTE.

Sunday Law Convention.

A convention of the friends of Sabbath rest will be held in Grunewald Hall, in this city, on Thursday and Friday, November 28 and 29, with a view to organize a Louisiana State Society. The object is to secure protection of our citizens by law in freedom from compulsory labor on the Sabbath. Churches, benevolent societies, labor, and other organizations, friendly to this cause, are respectfully invited to send delegates. Eminent speakers will address the meetings. Topics of great interest will be discussed.

Reduced railroad rates are expected for visitors.

By order of the committee.

C. W. CAUTEN, Chairman.

"God manifest in the flesh," is the statement of the greatest fact of the world's history. It transcends every subject of thought, and yet the fact announced brings the Infinite One within the range of human contemplation in the only way by which our minds can grasp the great subject. How wonderful, and yet how simple, is the revelation of "God in Christ reconciling the world unto himself!"

Personal and Otherwise.

Rev. T. J. Reynolds, of the Arkansas Conference, becomes assistant editor and part owner of the Arkansas Methodist.

Mr. Albert R. B. Edbrooke, a young brother from England, is selling the Tree of Methodism. This is a valuable map with statistics brought down to 1888. Address at 106 Camp Street.

The Southwestern Methodist favors a return to the methods of the fathers by making the young, unordained preachers assistants to the preacher in charge.

We see from the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE that Dr. Carter has read the Montana Methodist. We hail, scarcely believed it.—Montana Methodist.

We like, as far as possible, to keep up with our old friends. "Though lost to sight"—you know the rest, Couey.

Bishop Duncan transferred four preachers from the North Carolina to the St. Louis Conference: William Lowe, C. P. Snow, R. M. Taylor and H. M. Eure.

Rev. S. A. Steele says he transfers to the North Alabama Conference, on his own motion, with the approval and consent of the Bishop.

It is very strange, after all that has been said about it, that people will send anonymous communications and expect them to appear in this paper!

A resolution was introduced in the Tennessee Conference memorializing the General Conference to abolish the title of Doctor of Divinity, since it had become empty and vain by indiscriminate distribution. So says a dispatch. It is difficult to see what the General Conference has to do with that matter!

Bishop Galloway has raised $37,500 of the $50,000 required for the new Methodist college, and is confident that, by December 10, the whole amount will be subscribed.

Mr. Maurice Thompson has been chosen as one of the associate editors of the Independent. He will hold the post of literary critic.

The brethren and sisters need not send us any more articles on the subject of sanctification.

In the Greenville district, Bishop Galloway's collections for the new college amounted to $5,000. What other district will do as well as that? Will the other presiding elders allow themselves to be beaten?

Robert Patton Crockett, the last son of the celebrated "Davy" Crockett, died recently in Texas, aged seventy-three years.

The arrangements are being rapidly made for the Sam Jones meeting in January, next. The committee have leased the Artillery Hall, on St. Charles street, for the month of January, and Mr. Jones has agreed to come, and we expect to have a gracious and great time. Remember the time, the month of January.

We have some valuable contributions on important subjects on hand which will appear as soon as the sanctification business is over. In regard to that matter, we say to our readers that we see our way out, and, as far as this paper is concerned, the subject will very soon be postponed indefinitely.

Read Dr. Lambuth's letter on the fourth page, and then ask yourself if you have done all you could to help him give the gospel to those who are crying out for it. Can't you, won't you do something to help? Men and women of Israel, what mean ye by not answering these cries that are ascending to heaven?

With great sorrow we record the death of Rev. James S. Rencher, of the Alabama Conference. He was pastor of the Franklin Street Church, in Mobile, Ala., and died at the parsonage last Sunday evening. He was one of the foremost men of his Conference, and his death creates a void that will not be filled.

Miss Willie Galloway, eldest daughter of Bishop Galloway, has a position as teacher of vocal and instrumental music in Galloway College, Searcy, Ark. We are constrained to congratulate the college on securing the services of so competent a musician as Miss Willie Galloway. All the teachers in that college are members of our church. Take a note of that.

The editor spent a pleasant Sunday in Baton Rouge, ministering to the Methodists of that community. He is glad to report the pastor as slowly, but steadily, improving; but the physicians forbid him pulpit work for a couple of weeks yet.

A telegram from Dr. C. G. Andrews, of Meridian, Miss., brings the distressing intelligence of the death of his son Oscar. A young man of correct principles and fine address, and hopeful prospects, and the subject of earnest prayers and faithful religious training, is thus cut off in the beginning of life. How mysterious! The Father doeth all things well, is the answer of our faith. The parents and relatives have the sympathy of the whole church.

Bishop Galloway, accompanied by his wife, passed through our city, last Monday, en route to the Mexican Border Mission Conference, at San Antonio, Texas, and thence to the Central Mexican Mission Conference, at Guadalajara, Mexico. The Bishop looks fresh and strong, notwithstanding his heavy college campaign during the summer and fall. Our readers may look out for some interesting sketches from that interesting field in the South.

Eminent men very frequently differ in opinion. Bishop Simpson, on "The Call to Preach," said: "The man who is anxious to go is never sent." On the other side, Dr. Buckley, of the New York Advocate, said last week: "It is not proof that a man is called to preach that he does not wish to go; no proof that he is not called because he wishes to go."

Capt. R. L. Robertson, of this city, died last Monday at the home of a relative on the Lafourche. Capt. Robertson was one of the oldest men of the city, having reached his ninety-second year. He was a member of Morean Street Methodist Church, and was for many long years the Sunday-school superintendent. We hope some friend will give our readers a sketch of his life.

—Rev. B. S. Rayner writes from Magnolia, Miss.: "Our meeting at this place began September 9, and closed October 6. It was a first-rate meeting throughout. The interest was fine at the beginning, and it increased until it, at last, reached 'high water mark.' Our church here was probably never in better condition. This is the judgment of some of our oldest members. We have fewer 'deadheads' than in any other church, for its size, that I ever saw. The membership is one hundred and twenty. A more liberal people I have never seen. The meeting resulted in great spiritual good to the church, and in twenty accessions. Bro. Watkins, of Brookhaven, did most of the preaching, and did it to the delight and joy of his hearers. Bro. Lewis, our presiding elder, was with us in the latter part of the services, laboring with great acceptability and to the edification of the people. Magnolia is one of the most pleasant and prosperous towns on the I. C. R. R. Our accessions to date in this charge—Magnolia and McComb City—number ninety-one. The revival influence is felt throughout the work. God be praised!"

—Rev. T. B. White writes: "The 'mission ship' was built in Mansfield by the Juvenile Missionary Society, last night, in the presence of a delighted audience. As an 'object lesson' it is beautiful, impressive and religious. At times I felt the tears start at the sentiments so beautifully expressed by the twenty-four children who were the main builders. The nations represented and impersonated by the young ladies were striking. Misses Eliza Logan, Emma Sutherlin and Millie Ricks and Mrs. Scales at the organ. Bro. Lewis Wilcox, with his horn, rendered good service. After the ship was built, rigged, and with anchor, life boat and sails full spread, to see the whole company get aboard the 'old ship,' all singing, 'Old Ship of Zion,' it was enough to stir the enthusiasm. It was a good thought and act of our worthy president, Mrs. Fullilove, to set that ship sailing. Every society ought to get the ship and keep it sailing."

—Rev. W. W. Drake reports from Hammond, La.: "I have just closed a meeting at my Ebenezer appointment, in which I was assisted by Rev. John Boyes, L. P., and Bro. Keen, of Amite City. The meeting resulted in thirteen accessions and numerous other good effects. In writing of a meeting in the ADVOCATE, of October 3, I omitted to say that the place was Wesley Chapel, Tangipahoa parish."

—Rev. L. W. Wood writes from Covington, La.: "Since my last, I have had five meetings at Covington and Bedico; assisted by Bros. Davies, Joyner and Adams at the former place, and W. W. Drake at the latter. Results: eleven accessions, four baptized, and about fifteen conversions. The St. Tammany Camp Meeting opened on September 27, and closed on the following Wednesday night. A glorious meeting. Eighteen accessions, sixteen baptized and upwards of sixty conversions. Dr. West was with us three days, and preached with his usual power. Bros. Davies and Adams also worked nobly. All praise to God!"

Rev. N. M. Clark, writing from Shubuta, Miss., says: "On last night, I closed a four days' meeting at Manassas Church. The Spirit was present in great power to awaken and convict sinners, convert mourners, and to revive the church. Results as follows: twenty conversions, eighteen accessions to the church, fourteen persons baptized, five subscribers and three renewals to the ADVOCATE received, and the entire church revived. To God be all the glory! Bro. H. C. Brown, of Meridian, assisted in the meeting."

AGENTS WANTED.

AN EXTRAORDINARY OFFER.

We want live, energetic agents in every county in the United States and Canada to sell a patent article. It goes into use on its merits. An article having a large sale, paying over 100 per cent. profit, having no competition, and on which the agent is protected in the exclusive sale by a deed given for each and every county he may secure from us. With all these extraordinary inducements for agents, and the fact that it is an article that can be sold to every house owner, it might not be necessary to make an extraordinary offer to secure good agents at once; but we have concluded to make it to show, not only our confidence in the merits of our invention, but in the energy with any agent that will handle it will engage. Our agents now at work are making from $100 to $300 a month clear, and unless it sells for itself we make no offer to all who are out of employment. Any agent that will give our business a thirty days' trial, and fail to clear at least $100 in that time, above all expenses, can return all goods unsold to us, and we will refund the money paid for them. No other employer of agents ever dared to make such an offer, nor would we if we did not know that we have agents now making double this amount. Our large descriptive circulars explain our offer fully, and there we wish to send to every one out of employment who will send us three one cent stamps for postage.

Mason & Hamlin Organs and Pianos.

The improved method of fastening the strings of pianos, invented by the Mason & Hamlin Organ and Piano Company in the year 1881, is unquestionably one of the most important improvements ever made, making the instrument so reliably in tune that it will remain so, as well as is reasonable, and much longer than is usual to get out of tune.

Both the Mason & Hamlin organs and pianos excel chiefly in that which is the chief excellence in any musical instrument, quality of tone; other things, though important, are much less so than this. An instrument with inferior tones can not be a good one, however high-sounding illustrated catalogues containing descriptions of new and popular styles of organs and pianos, introduced this season, will be sent free to any one addressing the Company, Boston, New York or Chicago.

Advertising is evidently becoming an art, and its development may yet lead to the establishment of special courses of training in business colleges. Already nearly $25,000,000 are spent annually in the United States in newspaper advertising, every dollar of which if used judiciously has returned a large interest to the investor. One feature of the advertisements of to-day forms an agreeable contrast to the advertisements of a generation ago. It is the evident sincerity in which they are written and the consequently greater confidence the searcher after information can repose in them. That the advertising page is becoming one of the most interesting pages of the daily newspaper is one of the striking proofs of the growth of intelligence and refinement among the people.—Philadelphia Press.

A LITTLE SPEECH FOR A LITTLE BOY.

Perhaps you think a little boy
Can hardly understand
The message that the temperance folks
Would send through all the land.

But this I know—that want and woe
In drunkards' homes are found;
And places where they buy their drinks
Are open all around.

For liquor and tobacco, too,
More money goes, they say,
Than all the people in the land
For bread and meat now pay.

Some think a little does no harm,
It makes them feel so nice;
But ah! it is more dangerous
Than skating on thin ice.

A little makes you soon want more;
And more and more you crave,
At last to alcoholic drinks,
You find yourself a slave.

The chain begins to bind your soul,
When first you take a drop,
Before you take a single drink,
That is the time to stop.

MR. EDITOR: I am a little girl seven years old and live in a little town, and have two little sisters—Josie Frank, and Bessie Hammond, named for Dr. W. A. Hammond. We live immediately on the great Illinois Central railroad, and have every opportunity of seeing and hearing the many trains that go whistling by almost every hour in the day. I do not go to school, but learn at home. I can read; write and spell. I study geography, and know the multiplication table and am working little problems in division. I hope to grow up to be a wise and a good girl and to honor my parents. I go to Sabbath-school every Sabbath, and am learning something about the Word of God. We had a District Conference here in May, and Bishop Galloway and Dr. Wheat were our guests. I like them both, for they do not forget to speak to the children. We now have a Baptist Association in session. Yesterday one of their evangelists said that he wanted to scatter Baptist literature knee-deep all over this land, and have stamped on the face of it, "Our good old Baptist Confession of Faith." Mr. Editor, what will become of us little Methodists then? As I do not wish to tire you with my first letter, I will close with many good wishes for your own happiness and the prosperity of the ADVOCATE.

Your little friend,

MARY FLETCHER BURTON.

PICKENS, Mississippi.

MR. EDITOR: As I have not seen a letter in your paper from this place I thought I would write to you. Dr. W. T. Beall is our preacher. He is boarding with us. I think he is a splendid preacher. I like him very much; he is very kind and good to Ethel and I. I have no sisters or brothers. Ethel has a little sister and three brothers. Ethel is my cousin, and she is going to school with me. I have a nice little pony, and she has a pretty little long-eared colt. I have a little saddle and I have been riding for five years. Sometimes I go to church with Dr. Beall in his cart. Ethel is nine years old; I am ten. I hope to see my letter in print, as this is my first attempt to write to your paper,

Your friends,

MR. EDITOR: Here is another little girl who wishes to join your glorious band. I am nine years old. I have one sister and two brothers. My uncle, Rev. W. W. Nicholson, takes your valuable paper, and he lets me read the letters from the young folks, which I enjoy very much. I am living in the Lone Star State, yet I am partial to dear old Louisiana. We moved from there four years ago. I left many dear relatives and friends there, whom I hope to visit sometime. Now, Mr. Editor, please publish this, as I want my grandpa, who lives in Louisiana, too see it.

Your little friend,

ROSA TAYLOR.

DETROIT, Texas.

MR. EDITOR: As I have not written for a long time, I thought I would write again, to the "dear old ADVOCATE." I do not go to school. Our school was out last Friday. I will answer Rupert Fargeson's question. The thirty-seventh chapter of Isaiah and the nineteenth chapter of II. Kings are alike. I will close by asking a question: Where and how many times does the word "hammer" occur in the Bible? Your little friend,

BETTIE CARRUTH.

SUMMIT, Mississippi.

MR. EDITOR: We are two little girls coming again to ask a small space in your valuable paper, of which we are both very fond of reading. First, we must tell you of our protracted meeting, at Gilead, held by our beloved pastor, Bro. N. J. Roberts, assisted by Bros. J. M. Whitehead, N. B. Young, and Whitington. There were twenty-two accessions to the church and several conversions. Our family are all members, except our four younger brothers, who are yet rather small to join. We all love our pastor very much, and are so much in fear that we will have to give him up another year. We, of course, might get one as good, but we could never get one we could love better, and, we fear, hardly so well. We have a very interesting Sabbath-school of about forty members; also two prayer meetings organized recently—a ladies' prayer meeting and a young men's prayer meeting. We are in hopes they will both be successful and do a great deal of good. Wishing the dear ADVOCATE much success, we are

The Church Builders.

GOLDEN PENNIES.

A little boy who had plenty of pennies, dropped two into the "Church Builders" chest, laughing as he did so. He had no thought in his heart about Jesus, or the need of churches. His was a tin penny. It was as light as a scrap of tin.

Another boy put a penny in, and as he did so looked round with a self-applauding gaze, as if he had done some great thing. His was a brass penny. It was not the gift of a "lowly heart," but of a proud spirit.

A third boy gave a penny, saying to himself, "I suppose I must, because all the others do." That was an iron penny. It was the gift of a cold, hard heart.

As a fourth boy dropped his penny in the chest, he shed a tear, and his heart said, "Poor people! I am sorry they are so poor and so miserable." That was a silver penny. It was the gift of a heart full of pity.

But there was one scholar who gave his penny with a throbbing heart, saying to himself, "For thy sake, O loving Jesus, I give this penny." That was a golden penny, because it was the gift of love.

How many of our readers are giving golden pennies to help build churches?

A Good Reply.

A good reply was made at a children's mission meeting one evening. Said the speaker to the boys:

"There's a time and a place to play, but the time and the place is neither now nor here. Say, boys, a kite is a good thing, isn't it?"

"Yes, sir," replied a bright little fellow, "but it is not worth much when it breaks loose."

"Stop right there," said the speaker. "I want to ask you a question: How much is a boy worth when he breaks loose?"

The boys understood at once; there was unanimous consent that a boy is not worth much either. The speaker had compelled the boys to testify against the habit of breaking loose, from parental restraint, from the teacher's authority, from the loving rule of Christ.

Household.

Dear Sisters: The editor knows that you always read the Household column, so he has slipped in a little story which he wants you to show to the male head of your household. Much of the editor's life has been passed visiting households, and he is satisfied that there are too many Farmer Bells in Mississippi and Louisiana.

Farmer Bell.

Farmer Bell did not believe in mental or moral sugar-plums in his own family circle. He was quite willing to commend friend or acquaintance; but he had a theory that his own family would be best improved by a Spartan discipline. The children must learn to do their duty without praise; and, as for his wife, she had toiled for fifteen years without having once been told that she was a satisfactory housekeeper.

One night the two came home from a tea-party at a neighbor's house, and Mrs. Bell, with the courage of the meek, said:

"Ezra, seems to me I heard you praisin' the mottoes the Smith girls worked."

"Yes, I did," said Mr. Bell. "Real pretty they were, for such nonsense."

"Your own girls have made some just like 'em. You'd better praise them. It'll tickle 'em most to death. And didn't I hear you say that squash pie for supper was powerful nice?"

"Well, Miranda, 'twas a good pie."

"Was it a mite better'n mine, Ezra?"

"Well, no, can't say as 'twas."

"When have you ever said one word to praise a pie or cake I've set afore you?"

"Maybe I ain't praised ye much, Miranda, but then I ain't complained."

"Yes, you have," said Miranda. "Yes, you have! Sayin' nothin's complainin' sometimes. It's just like pushin' a heavy load up hill, besides what ye have agreed to carry, to go along, day after day, an' not hear a word o' praise."

Ezra began to think; and, although he by no means changed his spots entirely, he did from that time try to act on the theory that "women folks" are fond of commendation.—Selected.

As a rule, the happiest homes are those in which the members are accustomed to render personal service to each other. A father returning weary from his day's labors, or a mother coming home exhausted from a shopping jaunt, is far more refreshed to have slippers brought, or bonnet removed, by a child than by a servant. Members of the household confined to their rooms, by reason of invalidism or old age, have an added relish for food when brought to them by loving hands, and not served perfunctorily, by the maid or hired nurse. Paul endeared himself to the Ephesians because with his "own hands" he had ministered unto their necessities, and the tenderest scenes of our Lord's life are associated more with his helpful deeds than his wonderful teachings. When death invades the home, it is the one who has been most thoughtful in the little offices for bodily comfort that is missed the most, and mourned for longest. If for no other reason than because it develops the affections and is a check upon selfishness, children should have a share in the household tasks.—Exchange

We are tired of hearing of the duty that children owe to their parents. Let some one write a disquisition on what parents owe to their children. What though they do upset things, and chase the cats, and eat themselves into colic with green apples, and empty the castor of sweet oil into the gravy, and bedaub their hands with tar? Grown people have the privilege of larger difficulties, and will you not let the children have a few smaller predicaments? How can we ever pay them for the prattle that drives our cares away, and the shower of soft flaxen curls on our hot cheek, and the flowers with which they have strewn our way, plucking them from the margin of their cradles, and the opening with little hands of doors into new dispensations of love?—Exchange.

"Like Magic,"

THE effect produced by Ayer's Cherry Pectoral. Colds, Coughs, Croup, and Sore Throat are, in most cases, immediately relieved by the use of this wonderful remedy. It strengthens the vocal organs, allays irritation, and prevents the inroads of Consumption; in every stage of that dread disease, Ayer's Cherry Pectoral relieves coughing and induces refreshing rest.

"I have used Ayer's Cherry Pectoral in my family for thirty years and have always found it the best remedy for croup, to which complaint my children have been subject."—Capt. U. Carley, Brooklyn, N. Y.

"From an experience of over thirty years in the sale of proprietary medicines, I feel justified in recommending Ayer's Cherry Pectoral. One of the best recommendations of the Pectoral is the enduring quality of its popularity, it being more salable now than it was twenty-five years ago, when its great success was considered marvelous."—R. S. Drake, M. D., Bellot, Kans.

"My little sister, four years of age, was so ill from bronchitis that we had almost given up hope of her recovery. Our family physician, a skilful man and of large experience, pronounced it useless to give her any more medicine; saying that he had done all it was possible to do, and we must prepare for the worst. As a last resort, we determined to try Ayer's Cherry Pectoral, and I can truly say, with the most happy results. After taking a few doses she seemed to breathe easier, and, within a week, was out of danger. We continued giving the Pectoral until satisfied she was entirely well. This has given me unbounded faith in the preparation, and I recommend it confidently to my customers."—C. O. Lepper, Druggist, Fort Wayne, Ind.

CATARRHAL DEAFNESS

A NEW TREATMENT.

Sufferers are not generally aware that those diseases are contagious, or that they are due to the presence of living parasites in the lining membrane of the nose and eustachian tubes. Microscopic research, however, has proved this to be a fact, and the result of this discovery is that a simple remedy has been discovered which permanently cures the most aggravated cases of these distressing diseases by a few simple applications made (two weeks apart) by the patient at home. A pamphlet explaining this new treatment is sent free by A. H. DIXON & SON, 305 West King Street, Toronto, Canada.

GILL.—LILLA MAI GILL, aged seventeen years and nearly four months, is dead! The home of her parents—G. G. and Mrs. E. L. Gill—is lonely. This dear young Christian finished her course in the probationary state, September 21, 1889, in Homer, La. The town is in mourning; the church is bereft of its faithful and accomplished organist; the parents and numerous relatives are overwhelmed with grief, the gloom of the night of death is upon us; but the radiance of the resurrection morn gilds the darkness of the tomb.

"Death lies on her like an untimely frost
Upon the sweetest flower of all the field."

A more beautiful character of her age is scarcely met with in a long lifetime. Beautiful in person, lovely and amiable in disposition, easy in manners, with a native refinement and sweetness, she stood above all others, and still was envied by none. Truly

"Death loves a shining mark,
A signal blow."

His victim was the lovely Lilla Mai. The shaft from his quiver was aimed with unerring precision, and went with directness to the mark, and our dear loved idol is gone. His triumph may seem complete to the infidel, but not so to the trusting, confiding child of God. The Christian in dying, lives; in falling, rises; in loosing the moorings from the cumbrous clay tenement, only fastens the chain of existence to the skies, and there, as "blood-washed and redeemed," to engage in a higher and nobler service.

We think amid the happy throng who have crossed over, Lilla Mai shines with peculiar resplendence among the happy denizens of the spirit world; for "they that turn many to the Lord, bright as the stars shall shine." Her fingers so deftly touched the keys of the instrument in the church, and her voice mingled with the great congregation in praise to God here, she must be singing with the angels now—she must be one of that happy throng whom John described in his Apocalyptic vision: "And I heard a voice from heaven, as the voice of many waters, and as the voice of a great thunder: and I heard the voice of harpers harping with their harps; and they sung as it were a new song before the throne, * * * for they are virgins. These are they which followed the Lamb whithersoever he goeth. These were redeemed from among men, being the first fruits unto God and the Lamb. And in their mouth was found no guile: for they are without fault before the throne of God."

"Blessed are the pure in heart, for they shall see God," is, no doubt, literally true with her. She walked with him here; now the veil is removed and she sees him as he is.

She was caressed and loved by a wide circle of relatives and friends. If being loved and doted on would have made her vain and proud, then she would have been the vainest. But, no. Our reluctant hearts yield to the stroke. We stand confounded that one so young, lovely, and with hope's garlands already clustering around her brow, and promising so much for the church and humanity, is thus absent from the body. "They had finished her own crown of glory, and she couldn't stay away from the coronation." The language of the sacred Psalmist is pertinent: "I was dumb; I opened not my mouth because thou didst it."

Those bright jewels gathered along the shores of time and during the ages comprise our treasures in our Father's house. As death came near, she saw the silver city. There seemed to be a revelation to her in the last moment, for she exclaimed: "Papa, everything is turning into silver; look, everything is turning to silver;" and the "silver cord was loosed, the golden bowl was broken," and the spirit fled.

"Alone unto our Father's will,
One thought has reconciled:
That he whose love exceedeth ours,
Hath taken home his child.
Fold her, O Father, in thine arms,
And let her always be
A messenger of love between
Our human heart and thee."
(Whittier.)

Sleep on in your earth-bed till the gathering trump of judgment shall mark the cessation of time and announce the dawn of eternity; then the beautiful casket, rising from the tomb, invested with immortal blessedness, with kindred spirits shall be "forever with the Lord!"

O happy place of sweet repose,
There pain nor death no entrance knows,
And life's fair tree forever grows.

To the memory of this loved one by her former pastor,

THOS. B. WHITE.

WILLIAMSON—MRS. ELIZA L. WILLIAMSON (nee Ray) died at her home, in De Soto parish, Louisiana, September 3, 1889, having been an invalid and a great sufferer for seven or eight years. She was born in Clark county, Alabama, May 22, 1822; was married to Jacob Williamson in 1842; joined the Methodist Church in 1843. She, with her husband, moved to Louisiana in 1846. She was the mother of ten children, four of whom had passed over before her. She lived to see all her children grow up to manhood and womanhood, and, to her great joy and delight, all members of the Methodist Church. Her husband still remains on these mortal shores to mourn the loss of her who through a long life shared, as no one else could, all his sorrows and disappointments.

Sister Williamson was one of those rare characters whose happiness consisted in doing for others, making those around her comfortable and happy; a more devoted wife and mother this writer has never met. Her end was peace; she died in the triumph of faith. The Lord spared her to attend the camp meeting near her home, where, it seems, she received a special baptism to prepare her for the messenger so near at hand. Her soul was filled with love and joy, and her only desire was to depart and be with Jesus. The divine presence remained with her the few days that remained to her on earth. One of her last utterances was, "Come, Jesus, and take me." J. B. CASSITY.

BRUMFIELD—MISS EMMA BRUMFIELD was born in April, 1854, and departed this life September 23, 1889. She was a sufferer for thirty years, and her intense suffering affected her mind very much, though more at sometimes than others. On account of her absent-mindedness, she was never encouraged to join the church; but the same week of her death she asked her sister-in-law to send for the preacher to come in the church that she might be baptized and received into the church. She was told that she was not able to go in the church, but the preacher would come there Saturday and baptize her and take her in the church, and she said if the preacher could do that, and that it was right, she would be satisfied. But I did not get there until she was dead, and I preached her funeral, Tuesday, September 24, 1889, from Rev. iii. 5: "He that overcometh, the same shall be clothed in white raiment; and I will not blot out his name out of the Book of Life, but I will confess his name before my Father, and before his angels."

J. H. EVANS, P. C.

SMITH—Mr. O. H. SMITH died at his residence in Lawrence county, Miss., September 24, 1889. God saw fit, in his wise providence, to afflict our much-loved brother for many years with consumption. He suffered very much indeed from weakness and coughing, but bore it all with striking patience and Christian fortitude. He was tender and pathetic as a husband, kind and affectionate as a father, faithful and true as a friend and brother. He was a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church for some years, and was consistent in his integrity and devotion to God and the church, recognizing God as the source of all power, and Christ as a leader in life's road, a guide for the wanderer, a teacher for the ignorant, strength for the weak, comfort for the sorrowing, the giver of life, sustainer in death, and the salvation for all mankind. He leaves a widow and five children to mourn his loss. May the benedictions of Heaven rest upon them and the Spirit of God be their comfort!

W. M. STEVENS, Pastor.

BANFIELD—Miss CORA AUGUSTA BANFIELD, eldest daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Marion Banfield, of Hollandale, Miss., died on the night of September 24, 1889, at the age of seventeen, having been a devoted Christian nearly one year, and having passed successfully last session at Blue Mt. Female College. This young lady passed triumphantly from earth to heaven. She was admired by all who knew her, esteemed and beloved by relatives and friends; the joy, comfort and cheer of parents and grandparents. After a severe illness of twenty-one days, Miss Cora's lively, happy and sweet Christian spirit was taken as a beautiful flower from the garden of God to serve his purpose in brighter climes.

Be faithful, bereft ones, and she will greet you, all happy, at the beautiful gate. J. H. SHUMAKER.

NOLES—ELIZA, infant daughter of Sister Fannie and P. P. Noles, of Lincoln parish, La., was born February 9, 1889, and departed this life August 26, 1889. Just as the bud was unfolding, God plucked it for himself. Another link towards heaven.

The Secret of Life.

Bacon says: "Discern of the coming on of years, and think not to do the same things still, for age will not be defied." Half the secret of life, we are persuaded, is to know when we are grown old; and it is the half most hardly learned. It is more hardly learned, moreover, in the matter of exercise than in the matter of diet. There is no advice so commonly given to the ailing men of middle age as the advice to take more exercise, and there is perhaps none which leads him into so many pitfalls. This is particularly the case with the brain workers. The man who labors with his brain must spare his body. He can not burn the candle at both ends, and the attempt to do so will almost inevitably result in his lighting it in the middle to boot; the waste of tissue will be so great that he will be tempted to repair it by the use of a too generous diet. Most men who use their brains much soon learn for themselves that the sense of physical exaltation, the glow of exuberant health which comes from a body strung to its full powers by continuous and severe exercise is not favorable to study. The exercise such men need is the exercise that rests, not that which tires. They need to wash their brains with the fresh air of heaven, to bring into gentle play the muscles that have been lying idle while the head worked. Nor is it only to this class of laboring humanity that the advice to take exercise need reservations. The time of violent delights soon passes, and the effort to protract it beyond its natural span is as dangerous as it is ridiculous. Some men; through nature or the accident of fortune, will of course be able to keep touch of it longer than others; but when once the touch has been lost, the struggle to regain it can add but sorrow to the labor. Of this our doctor makes cardinal point; but pertinent as his warning may be to the old, for whom indeed he has primarily compounded his elixir vitæ, it is yet more pertinent to men of middle age, and probably it is more necessary. It is in the latter period that most of the mischief is done. The old are commonly resigned to their lot; but few men will consent without a struggle to own that they are no longer young.—Macmillan's Magazine.

SINGING AS AN AID TO HEALTH.—The time will soon come when singing will be regarded as one of the great helps to physicians in lung diseases, in their incipient state. Almost every branch of gymnastics is employed in one way or another by the doctors, but the simple and natural function of singing has not yet received its full meed of attention. In Italy, some years ago, statistics were taken which proved that the vocal artists were especially long-lived and healthy, under normal circumstances, while of the brass instrumentalists, it was discovered that consumption never claimed a victim among them. Those who have a tendency toward consumption should take easy vocal exercises, no matter how thin and weak their voices may seem to be. They will find a result at times, far surpassing any relief afforded by medicine. Vocal practice, in moderation, is the best system of general gymnastics that can be imagined, many muscles being brought into play that would scarcely be suspected of action in connection with so simple a matter as tone production. Therefore, apart from all art considerations, merely as a matter of health, one can earnestly say to the healthy, "Sing! that you may remain so," and to the weakly, "Sing, that you may become strong."

"Why need it be?" we say, and sigh,
When loving mothers fade and die,
And leave the little ones whose feet
They hoped to guide in pathways sweet.

It need not be in many cases. All about us women are dying daily whose lives might have been saved. It seems to be a widespread opinion that when a woman is slowly fading away with the diseases which grow out of female weaknesses and irregularities that there is no help for her. She is doomed to death. But this is not true. Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription is constantly restoring women afflicted with diseases of this class to health and happiness. It is the only medicine for these ailments, sold by druggists, under a positive guarantee from the manufacturers of its giving satisfaction in every case, or money paid for it will be refunded.

I. A. C. Hallenbarger, do say consumption can be cured by Dr. Davis' Compound Syrup of Wild Cherry and Tar. My mother, 3 years ago, contracting a terrible cough, soon became unable to attend to her household duties. Prominent physicians pronounced it incurable consumption. We know of Dr. Davis' Wild Cherry and Tar, and commenced giving it to her. Before two bottles had been taken an improvement was noticed, and by the time one dozen bottle had been consumed she was well, and has never been troubled since. We have recommended it to many and always have it in the house. For coughs, colds, croup, whooping-cough, asthma, bronchitis, it is without a rival. One dollar bottles sold two and a half times as much as 50c. bottles.

All the World's a Stage, and to enable everyone to act his part well needs that he shall be in perfect health. The very best of actors require prompting occasionally, and so it is with the functional parts of our bodies, they sometimes require prompting. A sluggish liver, impaired digestion or weak stomach if taken in time, only need a little prompting to set them right, but if neglected may lead to complications that will necessitate a physician's care. An article to act has, comparatively speaking, been but recently introduced in America, is by far the best little prompter to all the aforementioned casts. We refer to Beecham's Pills, a staple article in England, having been before the British public for over fifty years and already in great demand in every other English speaking country throughout the world. These pills are really a wonderful medicine, arousing and strengthening the system and prompting every organ to the proper performance of its part. It has recently been shown that they are oftentimes more used in England than any other patent medicine and have the largest sale of any in the world. In fact, they are the world's Medicine. No home in America need be without this famous and inexpensive remedy, for although they are proverbially proclaimed to be "Worth a guinea a box," they can be obtained of any druggist for 25 cents or from the Sole Agents for the United States, B. F. Allen & Co., 365 Canal st., N. Y. City, who will forward them to any address upon receipt of price.

A Thousand Dollars for a Sunday-School Library.

The Congregational Church, at Chelsea, Vt., recently observed its centennial. Among the several letters received from former residents was one from Mr. C. I. Hood, of Lowell, Mass., containing a check for one thousand dollars to establish the Hood Memorial fund to commemorate the memory of his father and sister.—New York Witness.

J. D. HARPER, P. E.

FOR A DISORDERED LIVER try BEECHAM'S PILLS.

No Grumbling Here.

"Well, sir," said Mr. J. G. Grant, in reply to the reportorial inquiry about the furniture trade during the past year, "all I can say is that if business had not been satisfactory with me, I should not have felt justified in leasing this new store and putting in the largest and best stock I have ever handled. But come with me and let me show you what I have to sell and where I am going to sell it."

Under Mr. Grant's guidance a tour was made of the entire establishment, revealing furniture of so many different styles and at such varied prices that anyone who could not make a suitable selection from Mr. Grant's stock must indeed be hard to please. The new building, at 44 and 46 Baronne street, is very centrally located being only one block from Canal street. It is 60 feet wide, running back a distance of 105 feet, and has a floor space of over 25,000 square feet. It has all the latest improvements, light and ventilation being perfect everywhere, and all the floors are made easily accessible by means of a hydraulic elevator. The second floor is one of the finest in the entire store, being devoted almost exclusively to the display of parlor furniture, and one can not help being struck by the handsome designs, the beauty and variety of the rich coverings, and the elegant appearance of these goods. The prices, too, will fit all purses, and the lady who only wishes to expend $30 or $40 on furnishing her parlor, and one who can afford to spend $700 or $800, or any price between these, can here alike be accommodated.

In the course of a pleasant conversation, Mr. Grant said business had been very satisfactory with him for the past twelve months, and there was every prospect that the coming season's trade would beat the record. He said that he had not only been selling more goods than formerly, but that the goods sold were of a better grade, which he was pleased to observe, as good furniture is really the cheaper in the end, and much more satisfactory to both buyer and seller. He, however, had a large stock of all grades, and, with the increased facilities which his new establishment afforded him, could and would place his furniture on the market at a lower price than had ever before been quoted in the South. Everyone should call and see the display at 44 and 46 Baronne street and get posted on prices, even if they do not intend to purchase just at present.

Country customers can have a fine illustrated catalogue mailed free to them on application, from which they can make their selections almost as well as if they were in the city.—Times-Democrat, Sept. Trade Edition.

OUR BELOVED DEAD.

And joy too deep for word or sign,

And once again to call her mine!

Nature's Universal Telephone.

BY R. ABBEY, D. D.

When science was twenty years ounger than now—and it has grown, least, a century in that time—it was ated that the sound of cannon was sily and distinctly heard six hundred iles by means of a telephone attached the cable. This was considered onderful by some, and by others re-arded as the slow movements of sci-nce at work in discharging her natu-l obligations to mankind. No small ortion of my religion is a lofty admi-ation of its twin sister—science. I ve God wherever he works. I know t that he is less great in the material an in the spiritual world.

Whether the telephone, or any mem-er of its family, now writes a legible me round the world in an instant, or how many different directions at nce, I do not know, for I have not ad the morning papers very closely the last few days. Science, the eat and true friend of Christianity, ill most assuredly fulfill its many d, as it appears to us, most stupen-ous obligations. Our reading of cripture was very defective in several laces until science came to our assist-nce.

Doctor Hitchcock's great work, "Re-gion of Geology," was published over irty years ago. He thus makes men-on of the natural telephone, or tele-raph, and its absolutely universal ommunication of both thought and eed:

"The discoveries of modern science, owever, show us that there is a lib-ral sense in which the material crea-on receives an impression from all ur words and actions that can never e effaced; and that nature, through l time, is ever ready to hear testi-ony of what we have said or done. en fancy that the wave of oblivion asses over the greater part of their tions. But physical science shows that those actions have been transferred into every texture of the universe; so that no waters can wash them out, and no erosions, comminutions or metamorphoses can obliterate them.

Edward Hitchcock, D. D., LL. D., who died ly about twenty years ago, is well styled "an inent American geologist." Indeed, he has en called the father of modern geology. No an, either in Europe or America, stood above m as a man of great intellect and profound sci-ce. He was also a theologian of distinguished ety.

"The principle which I advance in its naked form is this: Our words, our actions, and even our thoughts make an indelible impression on the universe. Thrown into poetic form, the principle converts creation—

"'Into a vast sounding gallery;
Into a vast picture gallery;
And into a universal telegraph.'

"This proposition I shall endeavor to sustain by an appeal to well-settled principles of science." (Page 410.)

He then goes on to explain and illustrate the great doctrine of reaction, or retroaction. This retroaction may be mechanical, moral, social, political, or religious. The primary principle is the same. I wish I had room here for a dozen or twenty pages. But the reader can turn to any very modern or recent treatise on the subject.

Prof. Charles Babbage, professor of mathematics in Trinity College, Cambridge, England, 1828-1880, of whom it is said that "he united in the most happy combination, powers of invention and observation with thorough scientific culture," wrote on this subject in "A Ninth Bridgewater Treatise," in 1851, and says:

"The air is one vast library, on whose pages are forever written all that man has ever said, or woman whispered." Again: "When man and all his race shall have disappeared from the face of our planet, ask every particle of air still floating over the unpeopled earth, and it will record the cruel mandate of the tyrant. Interrogate every wave which breaks unimpeded on ten thousand desolate shores, and it will give evidence of the last gurgle of waters which closed over the head of his dying victim. Confront the murderer, with every corporeal atom of his immolated slave, and in its still quivering movements he will read the prophet's denunciation of the prophet king."

"Diuturnity" was published a very few years later. The thirty-seventh chapter treats on the intercommunication of ideas. It does not see even the common telephone in form, but it insists that the means of communicating ideas of 1880 were primitive, crude and cumbersome, and it holds science bound at no distant day to increase these instruments and facilities a thousandfold. Nature has hardly begun to develop her vast riches. The great storehouse of scientific truth is as yet scarcely entered, and nothing but a few corridors near the great doorway have as yet felt the first exploring footprint. Intellect has no outer enclosure. Human ideas are in their nature infinitely transmissible. All we need is scientific instrumentality. And we hold science to a strict performance of her prescribed duties.

Merciful heavens! And is thought, as well as action, universally indelible and universally transmissible! Are we all to emerge from under this darkened veil of earthism into the light that knows no darkness, and come to each other face to face! Is there no private chamber for a single word or a single deed? Is universal mid-day exposure a universal law? Is everything to be seen and known? Will midnight itself expose the handwriting, with an interpreting Daniel for every chapter? O, then this world is a "whispering gallery!" And nature herself is a universal telephone, and every zephyr a transmitting wire! It is even so!

O, for a Savior, an intervening Savior, a Daysman who can lay his hand upon both the beholder and the exposed, and save us, if not from the fact, at least from the dreadful consequences of this terrible exposition! How little we know of ourselves! and how little we think about the few things that lie within our reach!

How superficially and unintelligibly were many parts of Scripture read until science, its great friend and minister, began to grow up and construe its language for us! Science is the great patron-friend of the Bible, even as truth is a great friend and co-supporter of all truth. Let this great genius of truth continue her great work, which is but just now begun, of unfolding clearer and still clearer light over the broad pages of nature and revelation. And who knows but the time may not be very distant when revelation, though it be divine, shall be fully read and almost comprehended even by man!

We may grope along here, day after day, with mere human vision, and behold a few men as trees walking, and we may innocently call that knowledge. We may handle with skill those five little instruments we call senses, with which we communicate with things outside ourselves; and we may suppose our knowledge comprehends the staple of knowable things. So Swift's Lilliputians thought that Lilliput was the world. The little fitful thing we call recollection, a tender offshoot of memory, may be supposed to link together most things that are distant and worth linking, and the rest are thrown away into the sea of oblivion; but we are mistaken. There is no oblivion, nor never was. Memory is absolutely perfect. It may pass under a cloud for an hour, but only to shine the more brightly afterward. Even human or animal memory is finally retentive. But the memory of the stars, the forest leaves, the inner walls of our houses, the dewdrops, the breath of summer, the ocean spray, the atmospheric sentinel—each million at his post of duty—these have no recollection—they never forget!

O, fellow-sinner, give me your ear!—come a little closer to me! We both do live in a world of unerasable record, of universal, ever-rend, and never-forgotten history, where our actions, words and inward whispers are emblazoned in ineffaceable print upon the very face of nature itself.

"And Joshua said unto all the people, Behold this stone shall be a witness unto us, for it hath heard all the words of the Lord which he hath spoken unto us; it shall be, therefore, a witness unto you, lest you deny your God."

Habakkuk declares to the Chaldeans on account of their wickedness: "Thou hast consulted shame to thy house by cutting off my people, and hast sinned against thy soul. For the stone shall cry out of the wall, and the beam out of the timber shall answer it."

When the rejoicing multitude shouted, "Blessed be the King that cometh in the name of the Lord," some said, "Master, rebuke thy disciples." But Jesus answered, "If these should hold their peace, the stones would immediately cry out."

So these and other adumbrant Scriptures intimate the demonstrations of science which have long since become a philosophical axiom that the consequences of an action never cease—no, never—any action.

The sum of it all is, that the world's history—all of it to the least minutiæ—is written as we go. By the great law of retroaction everything stamps its image on everything which constitutes the broad pages of nature. But very few of the things that be are visible to mortal eyes, and this record is not one of them. But when these eyes close, the others will open, and then the record of our acts will glare as in the noonday light, and will be seen and read of all men. There will be no night there. Not only the murderer, the debauchee, the covetous and profane, but the delinquent, the idler and the man of omission—all will stand forth before the multitude and join in the reading.

Then whose history will be supplemented by the shield of atoning forgiveness? Will a Savior's bloody sacrifice cover yours? or yours? And who will dare to risk it alone and even-handed!

The College Canvass.

I am glad to report most gratifying progress in the college canvass. Up to date nearly thirty-eight thousand dollars ($38,000) have been secured on the endowment. My recent tour through the Greenville district was, in all respects, enjoyable and profitable. Besides securing liberal subscriptions for the college endowment, I was delighted to note the rapid growth of our church in that marvelously fertile delta. A number of new churches will be reported at Conference, and a very large increase of members. The little Gothic church at Rosedale is a gem of architectural taste and beauty, and a monument to the liberality and loyalty of that heroic flock.

The college is an assured fact. The remaining $12,000 necessary to make up the $100,000 will be easily raised before December. Largely more than that amount can be had with a united effort. Presiding elders are requested to carry out the resolutions of the Joint Committee, and see that the great enterprise is properly presented to every pastoral charge. Endowment notes will be forwarded on application to Maj. R. W. Millsaps, Jackson, Miss. The subscription books will be made up by districts and pastoral charges, giving to each full credit for all contributions to this connexional movement.

The location of the college is exciting interest and generous emulation. Our pastor at Winona reports to me already a subscription of $20,000, as a bonus, to secure it. Grenada is showing a like liberality and enterprise. One princely brother at Holly Springs offers to increase his subscription to $10,000 and one hundred acres of land, and the town is thereby stirred. Kosciusko, Canton, Jackson, and other places are also organizing plans for the same purpose. It is safe to say no church enterprise has ever so moved the great heart of Methodism in Mississippi, or commanded such sympathetic interest from the people at large. This letter found its way to my desk a few days ago:

My Dear Sir: If you will accept from an "outsider"—not a member of any church—so small a sum as one thousand dollars ($1,000) for your new Methodist Male College in our State, you may draw on me for that amount when you need it.

Very truly yours,

———— ———,

Without much hesitation, I accepted in a letter of thanks and "God bless you." And other such responses, in various amounts, have cheered me beyond expression. In this connection I am pleased also to report that some subscribers are paying up their first notes. One honored sister sent to the treasurer a few days ago a check in full payment of both notes. Let others follow this good example, and turn into the treasury by the first of December, at least, $25,000.

The Sabbath.

BY T. B. WHITE, D. D.

The "crisp" of the week is said to be the Sabbath. Its institution is divine. Its immunities are a boon to man and beast. The hand of Almighty Goodness is recognized in its institution. Its sanctity is apparent, and its rigid observance is imperative, as taught by divine revelation. As the Bible is the holy Bible, so the Sabbath is the holy Sabbath. As we have reverence and respect for the Bible as God's book, so we have reverence and respect for the Sabbath of the Bible as God's day, and fittingly appropriate to his service, and such acts of charity and devotion as are in keeping with its sanctity. If under the Mosaic economy, the culprit who was guilty of so small a misdemeanor as "gathering sticks on the Sabbath day" was to be "stoned" (see Numbers xv, 32-35), and Christ "came not to destroy the law, but to fulfill," "of how much sorer punishment, suppose ye, shall he be thought worthy" who flagrantly violates the law, "Remember the Sabbath day to keep it holy"? With this edict of Jehovah, are we guiltless if we do ordinary work therein, or travel on cars or private conveyance, or by making it a day of dissipation and worldly amusement? There are works of charity and necessity that are proper and pleasing to God.

In our domestic and household affairs Sunday too often entails more work and worry than any other day. (I make an appeal in behalf of overtaxed housekeepers.) Visiting and receiving visitors; giving and going to "big dinners;" using the hard-worked horses, which need the rest of the holy Sabbath, to gratify lustful pleasure; spending the day in revelry and amusement; making it convenient to start on, or include that sacred day, in a journey, under the plea of saving time; a day to look after stray cattle, or salt the sheep, or inspect the fences, or prognosticate as to the outcome of the crop, or devising ways and means about business, or planning and arranging for the more successful transaction of worldly affairs, or reading and answering business letters, or going into the counting-room and casting up the debits and credits, or opening the Sunday mail and reading with a gusto (it may be) the latest sensational item, and so on, and so on. O how the heart sickens at the recital! I have known people to apparently wait till Sunday to get sick; send for the poor, overworked physician who needs the rest of Sunday, and that he, by his presence, prayers and influence, may assist in the public worship of God at the church. And I have never known a more fertile excuse for non-attendance—"I was sick, or some of the family was sick, last Sunday," when, maybe, Saturday found the whole family at the picnic.

Thoughtlessness and carelessness has much to do with non-observance of the Sabbath. Indifference and the "carnal desires of the flesh" have such deadening influence. Public sentiment must be toned up. And to whom shall we look for this but Christians? We (you and I), as factors in the body politic and ecclesiastic, are responsible to the measure of our example and influence. Let us wake up! Our greatest strength and effort should be put forth when there are the greatest obstacles and odds to overcome. When a cause involving so much as the integrity and Christian character of the Sabbath is at stake, no effort is too great to be made to maintain it in its purity. Without the Sabbath the church can but signally fail in the promulgation of the gospel, and bring about Christ's reign on earth. Woe worth the day when our Sabbath is gone, and it shall lose its distinctly religious and Christian character!

The hushed stillness of the Sabbath is suggestive of repose, rest, worship. Then let the wheels of commerce stop; let the thundering train cease its noise and rattle; let the mail cease to be transmitted, opened and delivered; let there be universal amnesty and rest from all labor and toil for man and beast; let the holy and inspiring services of the sanctuary, so replete with comfort and peace to the true worshiper, be observed unanimously and universally—then will millennial glory dawn upon this sin-burdened earth!

Then "thou shalt also be a crown of glory in the hand of the Lord, and a royal diadem in the hand of thy God. Thou shalt no more be termed Forsaken; neither shall thy land any more be termed Desolate: but thou shalt be called Hephzi-bah, and thy land Beulah: for the Lord delighteth in thee, and thy land shall be married." (Isa. lxii, 3, 4.)

The Bible Qualifies One to Read Men.

BY REV. DWIGHT M. PRATT.

Isaiah predicted that Jesus would have accurate and profound discernment of human character and conditions. He would not be limited, in his knowledge of men, to "the sight of his eyes, neither reprove after the hearing of his ears." The Spirit of the Lord, resting upon him, would make him of "quick discernment." In the catalogue of his endowments (Isa. xi, 2, 3) it is noticeable that the "spirit of knowledge and of the fear of the Lord" form one couplet, as if knowledge and the fear of the Lord were inseparable.

This prophecy regarding Jesus proved true; for John the Evangelist tells us that he "needed not that any should testify of man; for he knew what was in man." As a man, Jesus knew men. Acquainted with God and with the deep principles of the spiritual life, he was able, because of his own holiness, to pass unerring judgment upon the moral and spiritual condition of his fellow-men.

Have we not in this "quick discernment" of Jesus the key to a profound knowledge of men and of human nature on our part? In proportion as we acquire his knowledge and his character, we shall have the same quick discernment. Through the Scriptures we are introduced to the same spiritual conditions. As a revealer of God and man, it lets the enlightened reader into the very depths of the human heart, and into the very secret of true life as it is found in God. "The Word of God is living and active, ... piercing even to the dividing of soul and spirit, ... and is quick to discern the thoughts and intents of the heart." No other writing has the same power; for all other psychology is subject to the limitations of human ignorance and sinfulness. A profound knowledge of the Word, however, gives one a profound revelation of self, and of the workings of the human heart. Thus enlightened, he is ready to study others, and ready also, as a Christian worker, to help others by an intelligent discovery of their spiritual condition and needs.

It is marvelous what quick discernment and accurate knowledge of human nature practical students of the Bible acquire. They detect moral conditions of which the persons studied are themselves ignorant. In personal work they become skillful in cornering, so to speak, the soul that seeks in every way to evade the truth. Thus hypocrites are unmasked, the dishonest made to face the truth, the self-deceived enlightened, the impenitent convicted. The skill and success of our great evangelists are due to their keen insight into the human heart gained through a knowledge of God's Word. All who desire to help on Christ's kingdom may become qualified to deal with men by a thorough knowledge of men, if they will study diligently and deeply into the secrets of the Word. "The testimony of the Lord is sure, making wise the simple. The commandment of the Lord is pure, enlightening the eyes." The learned author of "Men and Books" only demonstrated his own knowledge of men and his own fitness to teach when he asserted that the truest and the deepest knowledge of human nature is to be acquired pre-eminently through a profound study of the Book, and of man in the light of its teachings.—Sunday-School Times.

Significant Utterances.

Bishop Whipple preached the opening sermon at the General Convention of the Episcopal Church. Among many things said, we quote these significant sentences:

We are perplexed by the unbelief and sin of our time. The Christian faith is assailed not only with scoffs as old as Celsus and Julian, but also with the keenest intellectual criticism of divine revelation, the opposition of alleged scientific facts, and a Corinthian worldliness whose motto is, "Eat and drink, for to-morrow we die." In many places Christian homes are dying out. Crime and impurity are coming in as a flood, and anarchy raises its hated form in a land where all men are equal before the law. The lines between the church and the world are dim. Never did greater problems confront a council of the church. An apostolic church has graver work than discussion about its name or the amending of its canons and rubrics. I fear that some of this unbelief is a revolt from a caricature of God. These mechanical ideas about the universe are the outcome of a mechanical theology which has lost sight of the fatherhood of God. There is much honest unbelief. In these yearnings of humanity; in its clubs, brotherhoods, and orders; in their readiness to share all things with their brothers, I see unconscious prophecies of the brotherhood of all men as the children of one God and Father. Denunciation will not silence unbelief. The armor of infidel has lost its terrors. There is only one remedy. It is in the spirit, the power, and the love of Jesus Christ. Philosophy can not touch the want. It offers no hand to grasp, no Savior to trust, no God to save. When men see in us the hand, the heart, and the love of Christ, they will believe, in the brotherhood of men and the fatherhood of God.

We are living at the eventide of the world, when all things point toward the second coming of our King. God has placed the English-speaking people in the forefront of the nations. They number one-tenth of the human family, and I believe God calls them to do the work of the last time. The wealth of the world is largely in Christian hands. There never have been such opportunities for Christian work—never such a harvest as awaits the husbandman. You may tell me of difficulties and dangers. We have only one answer. Sin, sorrow, and death are not the inventions of a Christian priest. "There is none other name under heaven given among men whereby we must be saved."

Mr. Wesley's Personal Appearance.

John Wesley is thus described by Rev. John Sampson, who knew him well:

The figure of Mr. Wesley was remarkable. His stature was of the lowest; his habit of body at every period of his life the reverse of corpulent, and expressive of strict temperance and continual exercise: and, notwithstanding his small size, his step was firm, and his appearance, until within a few years of his death, vigorous and muscular. His face, for an old man, was one of the finest we have seen; a clear, smooth forehead, an aquiline nose, an eye the brightest and most piercing that could be conceived, and a freshness of complexion scarcely ever to be found at his age, and impressive of the most perfect health, conspired to render him a venerable and interesting figure. Few have seen him without being struck by his appearance, and many who have been prejudiced against him have been known to alter their opinion the moment they were introduced into his presence. In his countenance and demeanor there was a cheerfulness mingled with gravity; a sprightliness which was a natural result of an unusual flow of spirits was accompanied with every mark of most serene tranquility. His aspect, particularly in profile, had a strong character of acuteness and penetration.

The Spirit of the Lord's Prayer.

A filial spirit: "Father."

A catholic spirit: "Our Father."

A reverential spirit: "Hallowed be thy name."

A missionary spirit: "Thy kingdom come."

An obedient spirit: "Thy will be done in earth as it is in heaven."

A dependent spirit: "Give us this day our daily bread."

A forgiving spirit: "And forgive us our debts as we forgive our debtors."

A faithful and adoring spirit: "For thine is the kingdom, and the power, and the glory forever. Amen."

A HARVEST HYMN.

BY MARIANNE FARNINGHAM.

Thank God, that on a thousand hills
His summer gift the landscape fills,
And reapers in the joyous morn
Are busy with the ripened corn.

Thank God for coverlets of snow
That keep the corn-seed warm below,
And for the patient Mother Earth
That nursed and fed it from its birth.

Thank God for all the generous rains,
And the hot sunshine on the plains;
And that the seasons' grey and gold
Brought increase of a hundred-fold.

Thank God for plenty everywhere;
And, that the poor may have their share,
The miracle of loaves again
Is wrought for multitudes of men.

Thank God for all the corn that stands
In other fields of other lands,
And that where'er his children roam,
Some grateful hearts sing "Harvest Home."

Thank God with life as well as lip,
With lowly prayer and fellowship;
With holier hope and nobler aim
Sing praises to the Father's name.

Thank God that all the harvest store
Is only one love-gift the more,
That he who gave his Son will spend
His love in blessing to the end.

Thank him who, for our joy and rest,
Has made the Father manifest,
And for his kingdom that shall come
With righteousness for Harvest Home.

Seashore Camp Ground Sunday-School.

MR. EDITOR: I take great pleasure in enclosing herewith a check for twenty-five dollars, as the result of our missionary labors in the Summer Sunday-school during the past season on the Seashore Camp Ground. We have conducted a school there every summer since 1875, and each year have raised money for missionary work in the various foreign fields of our church, specifically for Christianizing the heathen children.

We regularly organize the school, dividing it up into classes, and give each class a name; then request them to contribute something every Sabbath for the missionary work selected at the opening of the school. Each class is furnished with an envelope, in which to place their weekly contributions—the class reporting the largest sum is "read out" as the banner class for the week, and the scholar in each class contributing the largest amount is announced as the banner scholar of the class. This year the superintendent offered as a prize to the banner scholar, contributing the largest sum during the session, a gilt-edged edition of our new hymn book.

At the close of the school the account showed that little "Buddie" Price Williams was entitled to the prize. Owing to a delay in getting the book from our Publishing House, it was not sent to him, at his residence in Mobile, until a day or two ago.

The following is the summary of classes and amounts, respectively, contributed this summer:

Bible Class (adults)	$3 15
Lambs of the Fold (infant class)	2 56
Lilies of the Valley	1 95
Crown Jewels	1 45
Flower Gatherers	1 35
Pillars of the Temple	1 10
Pearl Seekers	1 10
Soldiers of Christ	1 00
Violets	90
Followers of Jesus	60
Sundry subscriptions	3 84
Superintendent	6 00
Total	$25 00

By unanimous vote it was agreed that our contributions this year should go to the Japan Mission for work among the children. Kindly forward the amount to the proper custodian of such fund.

It is proper to add that, owing to the absence of the regular superintendent for over two months of the summer, no organized missionary work was begun until his return. The hearty co-operation of many of our regular Sunday-school workers, annually summering at Seashore, has been the secret of our success in this interesting field of labor for the Master another year.

With the humble prayer of the school, that the Lord will sanctify the gift to the salvation of many Japanese children, the offering is respectfully tendered. Sincerely yours,

E. P. MACKIE.

Recollections, Pleasant and Sad.

The articles which have appeared in the recent issues of the ADVOCATE, written by "Barnabas," on the "Georgia Jeremiah," have awakened in me some of the most precious memories of my life. In 1871 and 1878 it was my pleasure to serve the good people of Woodville. There I met that venerable man and noble Christian gentleman, Judge McGehee. At that time he was so enfeebled with age that he rarely left his home, and, though I was little more than a boy, he always seemed to take great pleasure in my visits. It was his delight to talk of the early days of the church in Wilkinson county, of which, even in those days, he was one of its most active and influential members. Many were the pleasant hours spent in listening to his description of those times and men. Of none did he speak so often and so tenderly as of Lewis Hobbs, whom he called the "Weeping Prophet." The great zeal and religious fervor of this messenger of God seemed, above all others, to have impressed deeply his equally zealous friend and brother. With Lewis Hobbs he has joined the "shining songsters," and we venerate their lives.

In the ADVOCATE, of this week, appears the obituary notice of Mrs. Annie E. Comstock. A precious, noble woman is gone. No pastor ever had a better friend than this writer found in Sister Comstock during his pastorate at Clinton, La. Full of sympathy and love, she was ever ready to relieve the suffering; and how quickly and modestly she bestowed her charities! I shall ever remember with great pleasure my associations with this lovely Christian character. But how these pleasant memories of friends and brethren are saddened when we know they have passed from our midst!

CANTON, Mississippi.

Mississippi Choctaws Again.

MR. EDITOR: I see an article in the ADVOCATE, of last week (October 3), clipped from the Indian Citizen, published at Atoka, I. T., with regard to the Indians in Mississippi, with a view of emigrating them to the Indian Territory, as the only hope of their moralization, education and salvation, and this article was introduced by yourself, with an exhortation to read carefully, and closed with the question, "What do Bro. Miller and others think of it?"

I have to say, in reply, that I had already read the article in Our Brother in Red (as I am a subscriber to that paper), and made my decision: and I must say that I am not surprised at all at Capt. J. S. Stanley, when hearing of their condition, becoming interested for their salvation, and, as we had done nothing up to the present, feeling that the only hope of their salvation was in emigration. But I am surprised that our Christian editors, ministers and laymen have suffered them to live so long in their midst without doing something toward their salvation. And now that we would think of making emigration a condition of their salvation—or, in other words, that we would, instead of giving them the gospel, say to them if they would take their wives and little ones and leave the home of their childhood and emigrate to a strange land, or would leave this Christian land, with its Christian editors, preachers and people and its fine church-houses and schools and gold and silver, and go to a missionary or mission Conference—they might be saved. There would be about as much sense in saying to the people of a heathen land if they would leave their homes and go to America, they could be saved. I would be perfectly willing, if they wanted to go, to help send them and help to educate them and give them the gospel; but for me to go to them and beg or persuade them to go anywhere, I can never give my consent, and I must confess that I would be ashamed for them to go in their present condition anywhere. Suppose we could just take them up and set them down in the Indian Territory in their present condition, what would the Indians think of us as a Christian people? Why, to say the least of it, they would have a right to doubt our sincerity or Christianity. And I believe that for us to make an effort to that effect, would be to defeat the hope of their salvation. They have had an opportunity of emigrating all the while, and have it now; but they choose to remain here, and for us, in their present condition, to try to send them away would be to prejudice them against us and forestall all the efforts that we might afterward make. God forbid that we should think of such a thing. But, instead of that kind of an effort, we ought to rejoice, not at their condition, but seeing they are in their present condition, that it is our privilege to be co-workers with God for their salvation, or to be humble instruments in the hands of God in raising them up.

And now, brethren and sisters, let us give them the gospel here, and do not wait a year or two to emigrate them, for many of them will be dead and lost before one more year is gone. Let us give them a start; and then if they want to go, all right; and if not, they will be all right here. Please send on your names, and pray for the success of the Indian Mission in Mississippi.

CATO, Mississippi.

Louisiana Mission.

Having read three articles in the ADVOCATE lately, having references to the need of denominational colportage work in our beloved State, I have been giving the subject some thought. It is a lamentable fact that we have an exceedingly large class of people in our land as thoroughly priest-ridden and as intellectually and morally ignorant as we will find in the dark corners of Mexico, Spain, or Brazil. I dare say that it will be a surprise to many in our favored clime to learn that, with all our religious and educational advantages, our State is teeming with multiplied thousands of devotees to Romanism, who have never heard a gospel sermon preached, and upon whose ears has never fallen the sweet story of Jesus and him crucified—a Savior to a lost or fallen world.

Since it has been my lot to work for the American Bible Society, I have seen these deluded people attend the mass at ten o'clock on a beautiful Sunday morning, confession at four, and then adjourn to some neighbor's house to indulge in the gay and giddy rounds of the ball room until the clock strikes one on Monday morning. It is not an unfrequent sight to see them returning from mass or confession running horse races, and making the air hideous with drunken shouts, cursing and blasphemy. Are the people to be censured? Certainly not. They have been taught no better. Said one, a few days since, to me: "Sir, why should I buy one of your Bibles, when I can, for a few dollars, pay my way to heaven?" And when told that salvation was not an article of commerce, and that if he would read the Bible he would learn that salvation was a free gift, and the only condition is faith in the atoning sacrifice of Christ, he replied: "That is not the religion I have been taught, and I can't understand it; and if I had one of those books in my house, I would be visited by some misfortune; hence I am afraid to have one in my family."

Again: there are multiplied thousands of dreary abodes in the land where we find no books, no Bibles, not even an almanac. Some of these tell me that they are church members. I visited the residence of one of the stewards of our church, who had neither Bible or Discipline. I find in many parlors on center tables costly subscription books, trashy magazines surrounding a large and costly Bible, and not a religious book or paper of any kind. I visited such a house not long since, and asked the brother if he was a subscriber to the ADVOCATE. His reply was: "No, sir; it is too costly." I then took from his table a copy of "Robinson Crusoe" and "Widow Bedott," and said: "Now, my brother, you claim to be a Methodist: yet you would spend two dollars for these tissues of lies, and cram your children's minds with them, and not think it costly; yet you would refuse to give the same amount for a paper full of glorious gospel truth, every page of which is calculated to instruct and elevate their moral and intellectual natures, and lead them to Christ and glory." "Say no more," he replied; "I will send right away for the paper."

We need traveling colporteurs to work among these people—godly men who will do all they can to increase the circulation of our literature. I think "Local Itinerant" is wrong when he says that we need men who will work in the harness as an evangelist, and not embarrassed by denominational ties. We need whole-souled Methodists; men who are Methodist to the core; men who will preach and earnestly defend the principals and practices of our loved Methodism, and who will do all in their power to circulate extensively our denominational books, tracts, and papers. We need such a colporteur in each district, and it is to be hoped that our next Conference will give the matter a serious consideration.

Golden Wedding.

Fifty years ago, in the town of Caledonia, in the State of Missouri, by Rev. Andrew Baird, were married John B. Holloman and Miss Nancy H. Braffy. On September 26, 1889, a company of friends and relatives assembled at the residence of their son, Thomas A. Holloman, to celebrate the anniversary of this happy event. Their three surviving children and their families, and all the grandchildren were present save one, he being at the Southern University in Alabama.

After a genuine wedding dinner all repaired to the parlor, where, with appropriate ceremonies, the golden tokens of love were presented to the aged couple. With deep emotion the trembling father expressed their appreciation of the honor done them by their loving children and friends, and in touching words referred to the toils and hardships of half a century, which had been given to the education and care of their sons and daughters. Through all of these years they had come to this glad hour, full of blessings in the past, and bright with hopes for the future. As Isaac and Rebecca lived faithfully together, so have they surely kept and performed the vow and covenant between them made.

During these long years their house has been a house of prayer and consecration to God. In their home the weary itinerant has ever found a welcome; and to many of them this little note will recall pleasant memories. In full appreciation of God's continued care during these long years of pilgrimage, the beautiful glow of a golden sunset rests peacefully upon their silvery heads.

KOSCIUSKO CIRCUIT, NORTH MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.

MR. EDITOR: My protracted meeting season for this year closed last Saturday night, October 5. We began at Smyrna, July 3, where we were assisted by Rev. W. C. Lester, of Chester circuit. Results not as manifestly good as desired; but a good work was done. Our next meeting was held at Rural Hill, embracing the fourth Sunday in July. Here we were assisted by Rev. Bro. Kelly, of the Cumberland Presbyterian Church. Four united with the church, and quite a number of conversions. However, the community was not pleased with the results. Embracing the second Sunday in September, we held a meeting at Bowie Chapel, where we were assisted by our local, Bro. Boone. His preaching was clear and pointed, and yielded much fruit. Two acceded to the church on profession of faith, and five by letter. The revival at this place was wonderful. Thence we went to Salem, where Bro. W. W. Williams, of Sallis, by his zeal for Christ and gospel preaching, won many souls to God. The number added was ten. More will follow at this place. Macedonia was the next in order, where our meeting embraced the fourth Sunday in September, resulting in great good to the church and community, and one valuable accession to our church. Bros. Boone and Kelly assisted us. The meeting at Rural Hill (in July) not meeting the expectations of the membership and community, it was determined to protract again. Whereupon the Rev. J. C. Long, of the Mississippi Conference, was solicited to come and take charge of the meeting (I having been physically worn down). His failure to come by Monday night compelled me to abruptly close a good begun meeting, or to procure such local help as I could and proceed. God was consulted. The conclusion was to go ahead. Revs. R. L. Ely and R. A. Whitmire came to my relief. Wednesday following was little behind the day of Pentecost, in some respects. Thursday night we had a praise meeting: Saturday, love feast; and Saturday night, I tried, by God's grace, to preach to the converts (thirty-two of whom had joined our church), and disbanded with the benediction of Heaven upon us. Eighty-six have been added to date—forty on profession of faith, the remainder by letter. I feel sure the finances will come up all right at Conference. Praise God!

CARTHAGE CIRCUIT, MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.

MR. EDITOR: We have just closed our meetings on this work with good success. I commenced a meeting at Carthage on the fifth Sunday in September, and continued eight days. I was assisted by Bros. Miller, Powell, W. W. Morse, V. D. Skipper and Adams. We had a glorious time. We had twenty-nine accessions, quite a number of conversions and the church greatly revived. All houses of business were closed and people went to church. I have heard several say that there had never been such a religious movement. We have had sixty-six accessions on the work during the year. Some have thought that Carthage circuit was dead, but I think we will show differently this year. The stewards think they will pay up. We are just completing a new church here at a cost of $1,500. We have raised the money and will have the house completed this month; besides we have greatly beautified and improved the parsonage. Our people are responding liberally to all of these calls. May God bless and prosper these good people!

J. M. MORSE.

P. S.—Please accept thanks for the nice Bible you sent for our church.

LAKE CIRCUIT, MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.

MR. EDITOR: I was invited to a protracted meeting by Bro. Caldwell, to be held at Carr's Church, on his charge. After a tedious ride of twelve miles through the country from railroad station, I arrived at my destination. It was a long drive for me; weather very warm, and roads dusty; but I enjoyed it, for I had prayed for and expected a real spiritual feast. I was not disappointed; it was one of the most glorious meetings I ever attended. The Spirit manifested itself with power. Bro. Caldwell was assisted by Bros. Johnson, Sibley, Long and Flowers. The meeting continued five days. There were about forty conversions and thirteen accessions to the church. On Tuesday, the Holy Spirit descended upon us with mighty power; almost the entire congregation were singing and praising God for his wondrous love. I wish to express my thanks to the good people who so kindly entertained us during the meeting. It has never been my pleasure to meet with a more hospitable or kinder people in my life.

Praise the Lord!

LILLIE SMYLIE.

ADAMS CIRCUIT, MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.

MR. EDITOR: Adams circuit, (Brookhaven district) is composed of the following churches: Adams, in Lincoln county; Muddy Springs, in Pike county; Ebenezer and Beulah, both in Franklin county. I am happy to be able to report this work as on the "up-grade," both spiritually and financially. I found the work in good condition, having been faithfully served for two years by Rev. M. L. Burton, whose work stands and is bearing fruit to the glory of God. Our protracted meetings, this summer and fall, were times of refreshings. Our first was at Adams, in July; continued six days. Result: church revived, several conversions, twelve accessions and six infants baptized. We are indebted to Revs. B. S. Rayner and J. W. Sandell for valuable assistance. Bro. Rayner's sermon to the children will not soon be forgotten—was appreciated by all. Our next was at Muddy Springs, in August; continued five days. Result: a good time, a few conversions and seventeen added to the church—shouts heard in the camp. Bro. H. M. Ellis, from Holmesville circuit, did most of the preaching, and did it well; young in the ministry, but strong in labors. Bros. Rayner, Sandell and Bales also did good work. Our next was at Ebenezer, in September; continued four days. One infant baptized and church blessed—nearly everybody in the church. Bro. Bales (L. P.) gave us two good sermons. My strength failed; so closed before we desired. Our next and last was at Beulah, beginning on Saturday before the first Sabbath in September; continued eight days. This meeting deserves more notice than the above from the fact that Beulah is but two years old, having been organized by Rev. M. L. Burton, two summers since, with but a few members. I found about thirty-five members badly scattered, weak in "the faith" and of "doubtful disputations." The Spirit of the Lord came down on us in our first service and remained throughout the meeting, convicting, converting and sanctifying. The convicted was soon converted, the converted soon sanctified. The convicted came to the altar, saying, "Pray for me," and then fell upon their knees; when converted, stood up, and said, "Praise the Lord;" when sanctified began working for God, praying aloud for others. I never attended such a meeting. Bro. M. Ferrell assisted me three days and did good work. He is one of our eleven local preachers, all of whom we are not ashamed; they are men of God. We received thirty-three into the church; twenty-two by baptism (two by immersion), eight infants baptized, and many souls made happy in the love of Jesus. Accessions for the year, eighty-three adults baptized, forty-five; infants, twenty-five. Finances will be up. Praise the Lord!

LESSON V.—November 3.

DAVID'S REBELLIOUS SON.

II. Sam. xv, 1-12.

GOLDEN TEXT.—Honor thy father and thy mother; that thy days may be long upon the land which the Lord thy God giveth thee.—Exod. xx, 12.

TIME.—B. C. 1023.

PLACES.—Jerusalem and Hebron, twenty miles distant from each other. Giloh, perhaps identical with the modern Ilafal, a little south of Bethlehem. In the hill-country of Judah.

1. It came to pass—The working out of Nathan's prophecy in xii, 10, 11, is the clue to the course of the narrative. How long after Absalom's return these events occurred, or whether Absalom was provoked to his unduteful course by any slights put upon him by Bathsheba's influence, or was merely led by his own pride and vanity, we are not told. Absalom—He was the son of David by Maachah, the daughter of Talmai, the king of Geshur, a princess whom David had married while king of Judah. Notice that Absalom's mother was a heathen woman. Prepared him chariots and horses—Absalom set up a carriage (that is, a state carriage), and horses, and fifty men as runners before him—that is, to run before him when he drove out, and attract the attention of the people by a display of princely pomp, as Adonijah afterward did.

2. Way of the gate—The gate of the city was the well-known place of the ancient court. He intercepted the litigants, and poisoned their minds before they brought their matters to the king. Defective administration of justice is the surest source of national discontent.

3. Thy matters are good—To flatter each man by pronouncing a favorable verdict on his case, to excite a sense of grievance and discontent by censuring the king for remissness in trying the cases brought before him by his subjects, and to suggest a sure and easy remedy for all such grievances. There is no man deputed of the king to hear you—The judicial officer, who heard complainants and examined into their different causes, for the purpose of laying them before the king for settlement. Of course, the king himself could not give a hearing to every complaint, and make a personal investigation of his cause; nor could his judges procure justice for every complainant, however justly they might act, though it is possible that they may not always have performed their duty conscientiously.

5. Kissed him—It was usual to approach the king, or anyone of high rank, with a lowly prostration; but this Absalom would not permit; raising such as proffered "obeisance" he would embrace and kiss them.

6. Stole the hearts—Insinuated himself into the affections of the people. That is, deceived them, for so the same phrase means. Others understand stole the affections, got them on his side by stealth.

7. Forty years—This is an error in the text, for David reigned but forty years in all (1. Kings ii, 11), and he certainly had reigned many years before Absalom's rebellion. The Syriac and Arabic versions read four years, and with this agrees Josephus; and this, in the opinion of nearly all critics, is to be regarded as the true reading. The meaning is, four years after the restoration to royal favor. My vow—Whether Absalom ever made any such vow as he here pretends is altogether uncertain. Thus he deceived his father, as he had deceived the people. Hebron—The fact that Hebron was his birthplace would make the wish to pay his vow there instead of at Jerusalem seem sufficiently natural. Hebron, as having been the old capital of David's kingdom, and Absalom's birthplace, was well chosen (as the headquarters of the rebellion). It was a natural center, had probably many inhabitants discontented at the transfer of the government to Jerusalem, and contained many of the friends of Absalom's youth.

9. Go in peace—David would rejoice at this token of religiousness in his son.

10. Spies—The messengers sent out are called "spies," because they were, first of all, to ascertain the feelings of the people in the different tribes, and were only to execute their commission in places where they could reckon upon support. Sound of the trumpet—The common signal to call the people together for purposes of war or self-defense. When all appeared ripe for action Absalom repaired to Hebron with two hundred men, and after seizing that strong town—the metropolis of David's first kingdom—he caused himself to be proclaimed king by sound of trumpet in several parts of Israel at once.

11. They knew not anything—This shows the extreme secrecy with which the conspiracy was conducted, and accounts for David having no suspicions. We may note Absalom's pretense for giving large entertainments. This helped to hide from the inhabitants of Jerusalem the conspiracy of the prince.

12. Ahithophel (brother of folly)—David's trusted counselor. Ahithophel had no doubt been previously initiated into Absalom's plans, and had probably gone to his native city merely that he might come to him with the greater ease, since his general place of abode, as being king's councilor, must have been in Jerusalem. While he offered sacrifices—The meaning rather is that Absalom sent for Ahithophel to be present when he offered the sacrifices; the intention being that all who partook of the sacrifice should be bound together to prosecute the enterprise. Absalom, too, would take advantage of the excitement of the great feast to inflame the ardor of the guests, and pledge them irrevocably to his cause. A similar incident is related by Tacitus of Civilis, the leader of the Batavian rebellion in the time of Vitellius: "He called together the chief men of the nation, and the boldest of the common people, under pretense of a great feast to be held in the sacred grove, and when their spirits were elated with wine, as the night advanced, he addressed them, etc. They heard him with the utmost enthusiasm, and Civilis bound them all in a solemn league under curses, and with the sanction of their barbarous rites." (Hist., 4. 14, 15.)

Missionary.

Woman's Foreign Missionary Work.

I. Kings xvii, 1-17.

There is no more marvelous lesson on giving in the Word of God than we find in this passage, except that "God gave his only begotten Son," and that Christ "gave his life a ransom for many."

None are to poor to give.

If any might be excused from giving, surely it was this woman. Only those who live in heathen lands swept by terrible famines, know how much it meant that there was "neither dew nor rain these three years," and that the brook had "dried up." She was reduced to the last morsel. Death stared her and her child in the face. Yet in this dark hour of extremity God's cause comes to her, in the person of the prophet, faint from hunger and thirst, more needy than she; for he had not even a last morsel. He asks even her to give. If God asks we are to give all.

Make me a little cake first.

"Seek ye first the kingdom of God and his righteousness." "After this manner pray ye: Thy kingdom come; thy will be done. Give us this day our daily bread." Not first for the bread.

The woman was not asked to eat and give what she had left.

Refusal meant starvation.

If this woman had said, "I can not take the last bite from own child to give to anybody; God can not really mean it; it is unreasonable;" if she had cooked and kept it, she and her son would have eaten and died as she said. For it was her last, and God's promise of more was conditioned on obedience.

God blesses the faith and obedience of the unselfish giver.

The gift of this woman was multiplied of him. The tiny morsel was made the means of saving not only the prophet and herself, but out of her beautiful trust came the salvation of her household. God's promise was fulfilled.

To the woman of this generation, with the children of our own land, freedmen, Chinese, Bohemians, Catholics, Mormons, clamoring for the bread of life, comes one in still deeper distress—the woman of heathen lands. Millions of little child-wives, twenty-four millions of suffering widows in India, appeal to her by their helplessness, their hopelessness. Nearly half of the children born in India, dying in infancy, through lack of proper care, appeal to the mother-hearts of Christendom. The little Chinese daughters, unloved, unwelcomed, sometimes sold for a few dollars, or cast away, call louder still. The African woman, overdriven, exhausted, half-starved, staggering under her burden of ivory, yet carrying her child until it is torn from her by the slave-driver and cast aside to perish, makes every woman's heart grow sick with pity. O Lord, how long! Is the cry of every heart that has read "Slavery in Africa," by Prof Drummond, in the June Scribner; and out of the revealed Word the Master's voice makes answer: "Give ye them to eat." To us is offered the sublime privilege of saving them. What these women need is Christ. Sorrow and anguish come upon them overwhelmingly. In their soul-thirst and heart-hunger they cry for help, and the answer can come only through us.

It must be done now.

Mrs. Wilcox said recently that "two-thirds of a generation of these heathen women have passed away since our Woman's Board was organized." Ten years more and the generation coexistent with the W. B. M. I. will have passed away. Shall we steel our hearts, and stop our ears, and turn us to the dressing of our own handful of meal, and leaven it with the sweet drops of the oil of spiritual gladness? Then shall we take from our hearts, from our homes and from our churches, the share Christ offers us in his cup and in his baptism, and we shall lose with it much of our share in his joy—the joy of service.

The promise is to us also.

The barrel of meal shall not waste. Give, and it shall be given unto you, good measure. With "Go ye" is coupled the promise of the abiding presence.

The one missionary of our Woman's Board of the Interior twenty years ago has become sixty earnest women, working in Mexico and Bulgaria, in Turkey and India, in Africa and China, in Japan and Micronesia. The two Bible-readers of that year have increased thirty-fold. The four pupils supported have become thirteen institutions, varying form the Marash College in Turkey and the Kobe Home in Japan to the station boarding-schools of Dindigul and Muna Madura—but all helping to educate women to be a power among their people.

And "her house."

Is woman doing less for the work of Christ at home than she did a quarter of a century ago before these foreign boards were organized? It is a legitimate question. Has not the piercing cry of her heathen sisters been her awakening? Look into our Sunday-schools and churches and see. There are more women, better equipped, at work there than ever before. The industrial schools of our cities, the great temperance organizations, the woman's home missionary organizations, the women at work among the freedmen, and the Mormons, all give grand answer to this question. There never was a time when women did so much truly Christian work with so much spiritual fruitage.

The famine abroad is not ended. The cloud that is to bring blessing is not yet larger than a man's hand. One thousand millions of heathen—by far the greater proportion of them women and children—yet hold out their hands for our little cake. The work done is only a beginning. There must be no rest until the harvest is gathered. The ileids of the Congregational Woman's Boards have been calling loudly for forty more lady missionaries this year. Where are they? The treasuries call for enlargement. Has it come? Let the women who have hitherto heard the call without response, answer to the Leader's word of command.—Advance.

Temperance.

Dean Alfred A. Wright, of the Boston correspondence school, will deliver the annual sermon before the National W. C. T. U. Convention, to be held in Chicago, November 8 to 12.

The Brooks House, Brattleboro, Vermont, now in the hands of a temperance man, reports a larger income the last year without wine than ever before when wine was served.

If high license is a better temperance measure than low license, it ought to bring a community nearer to prohibition; but high fees really tend to block the way to prohibition.—Independent.

Vigorous agitation of the temperance question has penetrated even to the uttermost borders of Africa. Sixteen petitions against the liquor evil were lately presented to the legislative council of Cape Colony during one session.

The national prohibition committee announces the offer of two hundred and fifty dollars as cash prizes for the three best productions upon the theme, "How will prohibition benefit the wage-worker?" Papers must be in by Dec. 15.

Rock River Methodist Conference, in recent session, elected Miss Frances E. Willard as lay delegate to the Ecumenical Conference, thereby reaffirming and emphasizing its position as to women delegates in general and this woman delegate in particular.

Prohibition for ever in the twin Dakotas! North Dakota went dry by 2,000 majority, South Dakota by from 8,000 to 10,000. With South Dakota on the north, Iowa on the east and Kansas on the south, the State of Nebraska must surely come up to this same high level or be soaked entirely out of existence, as far as the moral world is concerned, by the drainage of impurity from these three States.

A pleasant variety in the way of entertaining delegates is reported from the W. C. T. U. State Convention lately held at Harrisonburg, Va. A vacant house near the church was rented for a week, and parlor, kitchen, and dining-room neatly furnished. There delegates and visitors were made thoroughly at home all day, a generous luncheon being dispensed at the noon hour by their hospitable Southern hostess, the local union.

Mr. Terence V. Powderly is undeniably the foe of the grog shop. While addressing an immense audience of of Knights of Labor, last Sunday, in Central Music Hall, Chicago, he arraigned the saloon as the workingman's enemy, declared his belief that the saloon should be closed not only on Sunday, but every day in the year, and reaffirmed his determination to exclude liquor dealers from the organization. He also paid a high compliment to laboring women, exclaiming: "Many a time I have been constrained to wish that every man in the order were a woman."

If you have catarrh, you are in danger, as the disease is liable to become chronic and affect your general health, or develop into consumption. Hood's Sarsaparilla cures catarrh by purifying and enriching the blood, and building up the system. Give it a trial.

Agitation to secure the observance of Sunday has begun in St Petersburg, Russia. Twelve hundred merchants of the metropolis have declared their readiness to close their places of business on that day.

Take Hood's Sarsaparilla 100 Doses One Dollar

The Chief Reason for the great success of Hood's Sarsaparilla is found in the fact that Merit Wins. It is the best blood purifier and actually accomplishes all that is claimed for it. Prepared only by C. I. Hood & Co., Lowell, Mass.

Briefs.

The inventive genius is still bringing his wonderful discoveries to light. A new explosive called "cordite" is one of the latest discoveries. The experiments have proved it one of the most terrible yet brought out, and it is said that it will work a revolution in modern armaments and quick-firing guns. It is absolutely smokeless, and for that reason guns of every description can be used with greater rapidity and precision of aim. Such discoveries, doubtless, have a tendency to lessen the frequency of war, and, therefore, they may be good things.

One of the most popular hymns sung to-day is Charles Wesley's "Jesus, lover of my soul." This is, perhaps, one of Charles Wesley's first compositions, and it is thought by many to be his best. Dr. Tillett says it was published before the Methodist Society was six months old. It was published in 1739, and is, therefore, 150 years old, and yet, though sung by all denominations, its freshness and power are not exhausted. Whenever it is announced, no matter where, everybody joins in singing it. Glorious hymn! "Millions of souls in glory now" have been comforted by it, "and millions more still on the way" are comforted by it to-day!

What strange things and opinions have been. What a curious history science presents. Sixty years ago a great mathematician demonstrated that a steam vessel could not cross the ocean because she could not possibly carry coal enough to make the steam necessary. Just as he finished his demonstration, a steamship steamed into the harbor from the other side of the ocean! The Scientific American publishes the following, which was issued by the Royal College of Bavarian Doctors in a protest against railways, pointing out the danger of that sort of travel:

Travel in carriages drawn by a locomotive ought to be forbidden in the interest of public health. The rapid movement can not fail to produce among the passengers the mental affection known as delirium furiosum. Even if travelers are willing to incur this risk, the government should, at least, protect the public. A single glance at a locomotive passing rapidly is sufficient to cause the same cerebral derangement; consequently it is absolutely necessary to build a fence ten feet high on each side of the railway.

And that was the utterance of science not many years ago!

Gloomy Religion.

To some persons religious duties are irksome tasks, and the privileges of the gospel a wearisome round of labor. Such persons plod heavily along, enveloped in the gloom of doubt and perplexity. They go through life with a shade on their countenances. They are not sure of the possession of the earnest of the heavenly inheritance. To them the Lord is a hard, exacting taskmaster. They regard Jesus Christ only as an angry judge. They see nothing in the Bible but unbending law. They see nothing in nature but unyielding force. The flash of the sunshine is nothing but a scorching flame. The flow of the starlight is but cold brilliance. The grand harmonies which the material universe sends up in an anthem of praise to God, produce discord on their ears. The wondrous beauties of earth, which so powerfully attest the hand and mind of a Master Artist, awaken no thrill of pleasurable emotion in their souls. Why all this gloom? Because the promises of truth have been made a nullity by unbelief. These people live in the dark because they have closed their eyes. What would be thought of a man, possessed of good eyes, who would deliberately close them and go blundering about, quarreling with everything and everybody about his mishaps? What shall be thought of him who shuts his eyes to the exceeding great promises of God, which are intended to enlighten him and to enlighten everything with which he comes in contact, and who pursues his way through life, quarreling with himself and with his fellows, and with God's providence, about the mishaps that come upon him because he will not keep his eyes open? To say the least, he is unwise. In the Christian life, as in the secular life, a man must keep his eyes open to get along well. He must see everything and everybody, and he ought to give everything and everybody a kindly recognition. But these gloomy Christians see nothing but themselves. They scarcely ever give even a nod of recognition to those they meet. Consequently it soon turns out that people avoid them and pass by on the other side. This is perfectly natural, for human nature has an instinctive aversion to that which is gloomy, and especially to a gloomy Christian.

But this gloomy religion is not found in the Book which the Lord has given to his children. Do not the sacred writers bring religion before our minds under the similitude of a feast? Is it not compared to a marriage festival? Does not Paul say that it is "righteousness and peace and joy?" Are we not told "to rejoice evermore, and in everything give thanks?" Does the Lord recommend religion to men under the similitude of a funeral? Are the songs of Zion dirges? Do the "ransomed of the Lord return to Zion" clothed in sackcloth, and filling the air with lamentation? No, no. Whence, then, comes this gloomy religion, this somber piety which checks joy and drives away pleasure? What is it that throws this dark shade on the "beauty of holiness?" It is unbelief. It comes from a failure to appreciate and appropriate the precious promises which accompany religion, and make it a joy in the human heart. These gloomy Christians "have forgotten the exhortation which speaketh unto them as unto children;" they misconstrue the teachings of Providence, they misapply the precepts of the divine Word, they have lost sight of the faithfulness of their heavenly Father, and this want of faith tinges their whole religious character with melancholy. But why should this be so? Is there any reason for a Christian to flounder about forever in the "slough of despond?" Shall a man sit down at the foot of the Mount of Beatitudes and sigh his life away to the winds, when by laying hold of the faithfulness of God he can climb up to the top and look out upon a boundless region of blessedness, and that region all his own? Must a Christian's tongue utter nothing but complaint, and give forth no sound but that of wailing? No, no. Let this gloomy religion be cast out. It does not come from a God of goodness and a heaven of brightness. Let these gloomy Christians open their hearts to the vitalizing and inspiriting influences of the Lord's promises, and the dullness of life will fly away and the bitter of life will be sweetened! Let them look through these promises into the great future, and see it filled with the rich gifts which a provident Father is keeping safely for his faithful and loving children.

"The Lord Reigneth, Let the Earth Rejoice."

In speaking of the material world about us, its mutations and its orderly and beneficent movements, our language would seem to indicate that we have forgotten it is a material world, unconscious and powerless. That matter is inert and incapable of spontaneous motion, is the common and accepted conclusion of what is called "natural philosophy." Matter, of itself, can neither origiuate nor arrest motion; it is incapable of self-motion. All the movements of matter are the result of some exterior and superior power; that power inspiration calls God. Hence the Bible never says, "It rains," or, "It's going to rain," or "It will rain." No; but, "The Lord God caused it to rain." Speaking of the fertility God gives to our growing crops, the Psalmist says, "Thou visitest the earth and waterest: thou makest it soft with showers." And God said to Elijah, "Show thyself to Ahab, and I will send rain upon the earth." God "sendeth rain on the just and on the unjust." This impersonal "it" is much the same as the impersonal "nature," which we are constantly using as a substitute for God. Unless "it," in the use we make of it, in speaking of various weather, means God, it is utterly irrevelant and unmeaning. "Nature," we may suppose, means the whole assemblage of created things. But these things are material and can not properly be said to he the source of power, nor the originator of results. Of course, we are speaking of material nature, and not of spiritual intelligencies, self-conscious and capable of spontaneous activity. By the use of these impersonal substitutes for God, we are putting him afar from us. The educative tendency of this form of speech is atheistic. We all know that quite a number of so-called philosophers are doing their best to get rid of God. And if they have not denied his being, they, at least, have denied his providence over, interest in, and control of the universe, and say, as some said in the days of Ezekiel, "The Lord seeth us not; the Lord hath forsaken the earth." How cold and cheerless is this view of the universe; indeed, how alarming is the situation! An immense material universe without conscious intelligence, incapable of enacting laws, without sympathy, interest, or aim in its tremendous movements, and yet ever rolling on with resistless force, rushing forward to what appalling catastrophe we can not know! All under this godless theory is darkness and fear.

How precious and comforting are the teachings of God's Book! "His tender mercies are over all his works;" that "he maketh the outgoings of the morning and evening to rejoice;" that he rolls the seasons round. The gay, green spring in its beauty, bright and fair; golden summer in its glorious fullness of life, and autumn with its sere and yellow leaf, and winter with its dreary skies and chilling blasts; crowning all the year with his goodness. His providence cares for lilies, and young ravens, and numbers the hairs of our heads.

God was before his works, separate from his works and independent of his works; but he is present in all the vastness aud in all the minuteness of his works. He shines in the sun, glitters in the stars, blooms in the flowers, sings in the bird, and thunders in the storm. "He is not far from everyone of us, in him we live, move and have our being." It comforts me to believe and feel that God, my Father, kindled the fadeless light of the stars, scooped out the ocean's deep bed, and piled up the mountain's towering height. It gives a sense of security, amid the terrific grandeurs of the resistless hurricane, to believe God hath his way in the whirlwind, and the clouds are the dust of his feet. When I can look around on the mutations of the changing seasons, the mighty movements of the material creation—some of them lovely, some of them appalling, and some of them beneficent, and some of them seemingly afflicting and disastrous—and can say, "It is the Lord;" then I can say, "Let him do what seemeth him good." I have, comparatively, but an atom of the boundless creation to look at, and, comparatively, but a moment to look at that atom. I can not know, I can not walk by sight. I must trust; it is all that is possible to me. Thank God, I can trust the wisdom that never errs, the power that is all-sufficient, and the goodness that never does wrong! I can believe that he makes all things work together for good to them that love him. It is most comforting to read that "the eyes of the Lord run to and fro throughout the whole earth to show himself strong in behalf of them whose heart is perfect towards him." It is a grand thing to feel assured that God is in all things, about my pillow and my path, and leading me by his providence and his grace the best and surest way to the heaven of my long-cherished hopes

Letter from Japan.

The following private letter has been furnished us, which we gladly give our readers:

KOBE, JAPAN, Sept. 18, 1889.

REV. T. L. MELLEN—

My Dear Brother: I wrote to you a few weeks since, telling you of our work and of the prospects before us. Our annual meeting has just closed, and we feel the Lord has greatly blessed us the past year. The reports from all parts of our work were very encouraging, and we are assured that the Lord is with us. We have letters and telegrams coming to us, asking for help, and especially on one part of my work they are greatly needing help and are wanting some missionary to go and live among them. We have no one whom we can send, not even a native preacher, and I have determined to go and live among and work for them, until I can get some one from home to relieve me. It is two hundred miles from Kobe, but a most promising field for missionary work. Tell my brethren I go to a people who are earnestly imploring us, by letters and telegrams, to go and preach the gospel to them. Can you not send us a man to go there and live among those people who are holding out their hands to Christian people for help? I shall leave here in about two or three weeks and will write you from there. Direct your letters to Kobe, and they can be sent to me there. Pray for me and for the thousands here who are begging for the light of the gospel and the bread of heaven. I trust you will still keep up your interest in our work in Japan, and plead the cause of these people before all your Christian congregations. Here is the Macedonian cry, my dear brother, and I trust you will tell to every Christian you meet that thousands in this land are stretching out their hands and asking the Christian people of America to give them the gospel of Christ which will bring salvation to their souls. Pray for me and our brethren and sisters here in this land.

Ever your brother in Christ,

J. W. LAMBUTH.

Among the Papers.

You may have read the following in the Nashville Advocate, but we reproduce it here that you may read it again:

The true ecclesiastical reformer is careful in pulling up tares not to uproot the wheat. He knows the difference between reform and revolution. His spirit is conciliatory, his methods are persuasive. The surgery of the ecclesiastical iconoclast is murderous. He cuts and slashes wildly. In exscinding a wart upon the surface of the body he cares not if he should cut an artery or pierce the heart. He loves to have his own way more than he loves the church. Like the woman who contended before Solomon for the child that was not her own, he would risk the life of the church rather than abate any pretension or surrender a hobby. The reformer is always in order, for everything in this world, from a stem-winding watch to a church organization, needs to be kept in repair. The destructive iconoclast has no function where the reformer can speak and act. Let him have no hearing or following among sensible persons. Thus he will be brought to see his error, or at least he will worry and harm only himself. We speak as unto wise men.

The Wesleyan Christian Advocate thinks the Bishop in making appointments should be guided somewhat by the character of the preacher's sermons and by the character of the sermons which the place has received. The editor says:

You will find some places where the people have had the very best awakening and hortatory preaching for a long succession of years. The membership of the church is numerous, but weak in faith and barren of good works. They have added little of virtue, knowledge, temperance, patience, godliness, brotherly kindliness and charity to their faith in Christ. Take certain other places where they have for years had the best preachers of the Word—sound in doctrine, mature in Christian experience, able ministers of the "doctrine." There also you will find children grown up in a religious household without conscience, and probably an unaccountable absence of outsiders from the preaching of the Word. The cry is then raised, "The gospel does not reach the masses." If these preachers were to change places for four years, both sorts would find rich, remunerative fields of work. The church would be built up all around.

The Christian Intelligencer, in a well-conceived and well-expressed article on "The Drawing Power of the Pew," quotes from a minister, in regard to the "holding power of a church," the following:

The best way to keep a church full is for every member to attend regularly every service. That will help; then let every member bring as many people as possible with him. Draw them in. There is a great deal of nonsensical talk now a days about getting ministers that will draw. A man came up to my study the other day from one of the churches near Murray Hill that is vacant, and he said, "I wish you could recommend us a minister for our church." I said, "I can recommend a dozen!" He seemed rather bluffed at that; thought that was a large number, and said, "Won't you suggest a name?" And I went on suggesting one name after another. I suggested one man, and he said, "I understand that man has not a very strong voice?" I suggested another. "Well, I understand that man wears a black cravat in the pulpit!" Another man. "Well, I understand that man is not a very good reade... And another man. Personal and Otherwise.

During Tuesday, of last week, 30,952 bales of cotton came into this market. That is the largest number for a single day that was ever received here.

One of our exchanges says that prohibition was carried in North Dakota by mistake. It carried nevertheless, and is in the State Constitution and will be hard to get rid of.

Some statistician has counted them, and says there are seven millions of Germans in the United States.

Did you read "Our Mission Fields," in the last Missionary Reporter? If you would keep up with our work, you must read or be left behind.

The Southwestern Methodist urges the brethren to send church news, and says: "Do not write a column when ten lines will hold all your news." It is not "news" that Bro. Blank preached delightful sermons! Everybody knows that.

An observing brother, in a private note, says: "I believe, in many instances, the lack of spirituality in the church is caused by the absence of the CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE from the homes of the people."

We had the pleasure of a call, last week, from young Bro. Ballard, son of Rev. W. E. Ballard, of Natchez, Miss. He is here attending the medical college.

An encouraging word helps you; don't it? Then why don't you follow the golden rule in regard to it.

Rev. G. G. Smith, in the Nashville Advocate, recently, said: "When I see a Methodist giving up Wesley and Watson for Robertson and Channing, the Advocates for the Independent, and taking little interest in Methodist history or biography, I fear for the stalwartness of his faith."

Rev. Joe Jones will hold a meeting in Felicity Street Church, in this city, beginning next Sunday.

The dispatches record the death of Mrs. William Griffin, of Moss Point, Miss. She was the matriarch of Methodism in Southeast Mississippi, being in her eighty-fifth year. In company with her venerable husband, she was in attendance at the last Seashore Camp Meeting. Her husband, William Griffin, still lingers on the shores of time, listening for the last call of the Master.

Capt. W. T. Bassett, for many years a member of Felicity Street Church, died last week. He was a successful steamboatman and a consistent Christian.

Rev. S. A. Steel has been transferred to the Tennessee Conference, and stationed at McKendree Church, Nashville.

The Alabama Advocate comes to us this week neatly cut, pasted and folded. We congratulate our brethren over there on this substantial evidence of improvement.

Rev. James I. Cash, the late manager and local editor of the Holston Methodist, has retired from that post, and has been appointed to Hill City Station.

Bishop Keener was present at the preachers' meeting last Monday. He returned last week from the session of the Tennessee Conference. He was suffering from a severe cold. Rest at home will recuperate him for the South Carolina Conference, November 20.

Our school teachers, of whom the ADVOCATE can boast of quite a number among its readers, are hereby called to ponder a sentence from the president of a college: "The school that does not teach its pupils to fear God does inevitably teach them to forget God."

It is said that Dr. R. W. Jones will resign the presidency of Emory and Henry College, and that Rev. James Atkins, Jr., will be selected to fill his place.

The one hundred and twenty-third anniversary of the old John Street Methodist Episcopal Church, in New York, will be celebrated October 27.

We are indebted to the secretary, Dr. John D. Vinell, for a copy of the Minutes of the recent session of the Missouri Conference. It is a handsome pamphlet of sixty-six pages, and reflects credit on the secretary and his assistants.

A private note from Bro. Parker, of Baton Rouge, says: "Sunday, October 20, I preached sitting on a chair, the first time I have been in my church since September 8." We rejoice to know that our brother has recovered thus far.

A brother who is always on the lookout for a safe place to invest his money, and who always appreciates an opportunity to do so, handed us $25 to help the brethren of the Colored Methodist Episcopal Church, in this city, pay for their fine property on Prytania street. The editor is treasurer of that fund; and if anyone else wishes to contribute to it, any amount will be gratefully received and will help a struggling people

Postal Card Reports.

—Rev. I. W. Cooper, writing from Edwards, Miss., says: "My two churches—Edwards and Brownsville—are in good condition. One hundred and ten per cent. will be paid on all collections ordered by the Conference. Pastor and presiding elder will be paid in full. Fifty accessions to the church during the year. Parsonage in good repair for the new preacher. Bro. Charles W. Crisler—a valuable young man—goes up for admission on trial. These people have shown me much kindness during my four years' stay with them. We leave them with profound regret, and shall always love them. About nine hundred members have been added to our church in Hinds and Yazoo counties this year."

—Rev. J. H. Evans writes from Franklinton, La: "I am just out of the third spell of fever, and my oldest daughter has this slow-continued fever. To-day is twenty-four days she has been on the bed, and is still having fever, though she is mending some. I am very much hindered from my work, my health is so bad; and then my affliction has impeded my progress in my collections and in the canvass for the 'dear old ADVOCATE;' but with all I am resigned to the will of God. Pray for us."

—Rev. H. M. Banks reports from Sugartown, La: "A good meeting in progress at a school-house, known as the Singletary School-house. The power of God was felt last night. Two gave their hearts to God and united with the church. Others were deeply convicted. One gave her heart to Jesus after service, and will unite with the church to-night. The last effort at Dry Creek was a grand success. Bro. Daves was with me at Dry Creek, and his preaching was in the power of the Spirit, sending pungent convictions to the hearts of the people. I have no ministerial help at this time."

—Rev. James L. Wright writes from Vernon, La: "I have held protracted meetings at all preaching-places on Vernon circuit, except at Vernon. Result: thirty-five accessions to the church, and as many conversions as accessions: the church much revived. I had the assistance of Bro. Brew, of the Congregational Methodist Church; Bros. Eugene T. Stead and Moncreath, local preachers of our own church. I am sorry to report our finances far behind, and likely to remain so. I am trying to bring them up. May the Lord bless the people! Pray for us."

—Rev. G. D. Anders reports: "The fourth Quarterly Conference for Centerville circuit embraced the eleventh and twelfth of this month, and proved to be a very delightful occasion. Our presiding elder, Rev. C. McDonald, was present, and preached four delightful sermons. Bro. Mac seems to be dead in love with his work, and the work of the Lord is prospering in his hands. He is working hard for a district parsonage, and certain that he will have money in hand by Conference to pay for one. Let the preachers of the district see that the money is paid, for God has blessed the district with a good crop, and now let us honor him by collecting money to build a district parsonage. We expect to report every claim paid in full at Conference."

—Rev. E. B. Galloway writes from Athens, La.: "Please find within $5 for our missionary to Japan. God speed the work! Stir up the many readers of the grand old ADVOCATE, by urging this 'special call.' May more money than men, soon be Bishop Wilson's report. Standing on one foot and one crutch last Sabbath, I took a missionary collection—the first service I have attended on my work for three months. Am just beginning to work. The periosteum of the left foot is seriously affected, if not destroyed; have suffered much during the past thirteen or fourteen weeks. Our heavenly Father, in great mercy, has blessed me. God bless you and the ADVOCATE!"

Sunday Law Convention.

A convention of the friends of Sabbath rest will be held in Grunewald Hall, in this city, on Thursday and Friday, November 28 and 29, with a view to organize a Louisiana State Society. The object is to secure protection of our citizens by law in freedom from compulsory labor on the Sabbath. Churches, benevolent societies, labor, and other organizations, friendly to this cause, are respectfully invited to send delegates. Eminent speakers will address the meetings. Topics of great interest will be discussed.

Reduced railroad rates are expected for visitors.

Woodville District Parsonage.

The committee appointed to secure a district parsonage will please meet at the Methodist Church, in this place, October 31, at 10 A. M. Each charge is asked for the same amount that is now assessed to the presiding elder. The general plan is for the preacher in charge to collect and turn it over to me at the fourth Quarterly Conference. We have made an encouraging beginning, and hope to secure a house by Conference. Fraternally,

C. M'DONALD.

JACKSON, Louisiana.

Notice.

To the Preachers of the North Mississippi Conference—

As it is probable that the coming session of our Conference, to be held at Holly Springs, December 4, will be the largest we have ever had, and that there may be some difficulty in taking care of it, we ask that all preachers who expect to bring their wives will let us know by November 15, so that extra provision may be made, if necessary. Presiding elders will please send us the names of applicants for admission as early as possible.

Yours fraternally.

BOOKS.

A BRIEF HISTORY OF METHODISM IN TEXAS. By Rev. Homer S. Thrall. Printed for the author. Publishing House of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, Nashville, Tenn.

Bro. Thrall dedicates his book to the Methodists of Texas, and in his prefatory note he calls it a "condensed history of the rise and progress of Methodism in Texas; with brief sketches of leading preachers and also of the organization of local churches and the erection of church-buildings; the formation of circuits, districts and Conferences." One chapter is devoted to the literary institutions of the church, and one to the Texas Christian Advocate. There are full statistical tables compiled from official sources, and the whole makes a book of interest which, we doubt not, will be highly valued and appreciated by "the Methodists of Texas."

THE MYSTIC SIGN.

"O gorgeous poppy, of rich renown,
Show us the way to Sleepy Town.
Baby must go—he's tired of play;
But yet I think we have missed the way."
Then tranquilly up and down
Waved the flower of rich renown.
And softly it seemed to say,
"This way—this way—this way—
Is the way to Sleepy Town."

"O ripening wheat, all golden brown,
Show us the way to Sleepy Town.
How shall we find where the starlight gleams,
On the City of Sleep in the Land of Dreams?"
Then soothingly up and down
Went the wheat all golden brown,
And whispering seemed to say,
"This way—this way—this way—
Is the way to Sleepy Town."

"O little one with the curly crown,
Have you learned the way to Sleepy Town,
Where faintest music and softest light,
And sweetest blossoms enchain the night?"
Then drowsily up and down
Went the beautiful curly crown,
While the tired eyes seemed to say,
"This way—this way—this way—
Is the way to Sleepy Town."

A Beautiful Father.

"Tell your mother you've been very good boys to-day," said a school teacher to two little new scholars.

"Oh," replied Tommy, "we haven't any mother."

"Who takes care of you?" she asked.

"Father does. We've got a beautiful father. You ought to see him!"

"Who takes care of you when he is at work?"

"He takes all the care before he goes off in the morning, and after he comes back at night. He's a house painter; but there isn't very much work this winter, so he is doing laboring till spring comes. He leaves us a warm breakfast when he goes off; and we have bread and milk for dinner, and a good supper when he comes home. Then he tells us stories, and plays on the fife, and cuts out beautiful things with his jack-knife. You ought to see our father and our home, they are both so beautiful!"

Before long the teacher did see that home and that father. The room was a poor attic, graced with cheap pictures, autumn leaves and other little trifles that cost nothing. The father, who was preparing the evening meal for his motherless boys, was, at first glance, only a rough, begrimed laborer; but before the stranger had been in the place ten minutes the room became a palace, and the man a magician.

His children had no idea they were poor; nor were they so with such a hero as this to fight their battles for them. This man, whose grateful spirit lighted up the otherwise dark life of his children, was preaching to all about him more effectually than was any man in priestly robe in costly temple.

He was a man of patience and submission to God's will, showing how to make home happy under the most unfavorable circumstances. He was rearing his boys to be high-minded citizens, to put their shoulders to burdens, rather than become burdens to society in the days that are coming.

He was, as his children had said, "a beautiful father" in the highest sense of the word.—Exchange.

Why Pop Stayed Behind.

My little friend Silvia had a present of a small dog which she called Pop, because his sharp bark sounded like the popping noise made by corn when it is parched over the fire.

One day Silvia took her doll and a little basket and went out to pick berries. Pop followed, of course. They went more than a mile from home. But on her way back Silvia lost sight of Pop. She called him, but Pop did not come.

When she got home with her berries she found that she had parted company, not only with Pop, but with her doll. So she put on her shawl and started out again to hunt them up.

The birds flew around her as she walked; for she had been used to feeding them with crumbs, and one little bird seemed to think it a hard case that she should not give him anything, and followed her a long way.

But Silvia walked on, calling, "Pop, Pop; where are you, Pop? Come, Pop."

But for a long while no Pop made himself heard. At last, as Silvia went into a thick part of the wood, where she had passed a short time before, she heard a sharp little voice: "Bow-wow-wow!"

"That's Pop!" cried she, with a laugh; and sure enough, there he was, keeping guard over the doll.

She had dropped it there out of her basket. Pop was too small to take it in his mouth and run home, and so he stayed there and kept guard over it.—Exchange.

MR. EDITOR: I am a little boy ten years old. I have been going to school at Sulphur City, but school is out now, and Sister Katie and I are now at Grandpa Henning's. I have a pet goat here. We are all fond of reading. Grandpa is reading the "New History of the United States;" Grandma is reading the "Man of Galilee;" Katie is reading "First Steps in Gospel Paths for Little Feet," and Auntie and I are reading "Phrenology." She says there is a big bump on my head I must bring down, but may have to ask help of Jesus to do it. Mr. Editor, do you believe in phrenology? I will answer Maggie Chapman's question. "Greyhound" is found in Proverbs xxx, 31. I will ask a question: Where and how many times is the word "eagle" found in the Bible?

Household.

A Needed Reform.

A writer in the Christian Advocate makes the following strong plea for a more economical manner of living, and for training children in habits of frugality:

There is just one way to live in such a degree of safety and comfort as a fallen world permits, and that is to use youth, strength, summer, health, sunshine and life to lay up a supply for age, weakness, winter, sickness, the rainy day and death. The immediate, general and persistent practice of it throughout this country would remove fully one-half, probably more, of the distress and discontent of the times. It is a recipe for happiness which ought to be served out by every pulpit. We ought to require such teaching of the public schools. We ought to enforce it in our own homes. We live too fast. We spend too much. We refuse the privations which make our fathers strong and this nation great. We coddle our children in luxuries. We rear them in false ideas of what is necessary. We turn them adrift on the world without sound education of any sort, or trades of any sort, or fitness to earn their style and kind of living. We doubtless need other reforms; but reform here, in the economies of individual and family life, in the habits of children and their adjustment to the cost of living and to the perils of living—this kind of reform takes precedence of all others. A people among whom improvidence is so general must be full of social discontent.

Children in Heaven.

What is it when a child dies? It is the great Head Master calling that child up into his own room, away from all the under teachers, to finish his education under his own eye, close at his feet. The whole thought of a child's growth and development in heaven instead of here on earth is one of the most exalting and bewildering on which the mind can rest. Always the child must be there. Always there must be something in those who died as children to make them different to all eternity from those who grew up to be men here among all the temptations and hindrances of earth. There must forever be something in their perfect trust in the Father, something in the peculiar nearness and innocent familiarity of their life with Jesus, something in the simplicity and instinctiveness of their relation to the truth, something pure even among all the perfect purity which we shall all have reached, something wiser than the wisest, showing that even there there is a revelation that can be given only to the babes.—Phillips Brooks.

The Word "Wife."

What do you think the beautiful word "wife" comes from? It is the great word in which the English and Latin languages conquered the French and Greek. I hope the French will some day get a word for it instead of femme. But what do you think it comes from? The great value of the Saxon words is that they mean something. Wife means "weaver." You must either be house-wives or house moths; remember that. In the deep sense, you must either weave men's fortunes, and embroider them, or feed upon and bring them to decay.

Wherever a true wife comes, home is always around her. The stars may be over her head, the glow-worm in the night's cold grass be the fire at her feet, but home is where she is, and for a noble woman it stretches far around her, better than houses ceiled with cedar or painted with vermillion—shedding the quiet light for those who else are homeless. This, I believe, is the woman's true place and power.—Ruskin.

A Fact

WORTH knowing is that blood diseases which all other remedies fail to cure, yield to Ayer's Sarsaparilla.

Fresh confirmation of this statement comes to hand daily. Even such deep-seated and stubborn complaints as Rheumatism, Rheumatic Gout, and the like, are thoroughly eradicated by the use of this wonderful alterative.

Mrs. R. Irving Dodge, 110 West 125th street, New York, certifies:—

"About two years ago, after suffering for nearly two years from rheumatic gout, being able to walk only with great discomfort, and having tried various remedies, including mineral waters, without relief, I saw by an advertisement in a Chicago paper that a man had been relieved of this distressing complaint, after long suffering, by taking Ayer's Sarsaparilla. I then decided to make a trial of this medicine, and took it regularly for eight months. I am pleased to say that it effected a complete cure, and that I have since had no return of the disease."

Mrs. L. A. Stark, Nashua, N. H., writes: "One year ago I was taken ill with rheumatism, being confined to my house six months. I came out of the sickness very much debilitated, with no appetite, and my system disordered in every way. I commenced to use Ayer's Sarsaparilla and began to improve at once, gaining in strength and soon recovering my usual health. I cannot say too much in praise of this well-known medicine."

"I have taken a great deal of medicine, but nothing has done me so much good as Ayer's Sarsaparilla. I felt its beneficial effects before I had quite finished one bottle, and I can freely testify that it is the best blood-medicine I know of."—L. W. Ward, Sr., Woodland, Texas.

CATARRH HAY FEVER CATARRHAL DEAFNESS

A NEW TREATMENT.

Sufferers are not generally aware that these diseases are contagious, or that they are due to the presence of living parasites in the lining membrane of the nose and eustachian tubes. Microscopic research, however, has proved this to be a fact, and the result of this discovery is that a simple remedy has been discovered which permanently cures the most aggravated cases of these distressing diseases by a few simple applications made (two weeks apart) by the patient at home. A pamphlet explaining this new treatment is sent free by A. H. DIXON & SON, 305 West King Street, Toronto, Canada.

CHILDRE—JAMES CULLIN CHILDRE was born in Alabama, September 22, 1835, and died at his home, near Raleigh, in Smith county, Miss., August 30, 1889. He married, first, Miss Nancy M. Swint, February 5, 1857, who died September 22, 1858, leaving one child (Laura), who went to meet her darling mother, October 26, 1869. Bro. Childre married the second time a Mrs. J. E. Douglas, July, 1862, and moved to Mississippi in the fall of 1877, where he remained till his death, proving himself a loyal citizen and a faithful disciple of the Lord Jesus Christ. Bro. Childre joined the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, in Montgomery county, Alabama, and was converted at Hill's Chapel, July, 1865. He joined by letter at Raleigh soon after his arrival in Mississippi, and, though wayward at times, he died in the Christian's faith. During his illness he talked a great deal on the subject of religion, expressing his desire to work in the vineyard of the Lord; but if it was the Lord's will to take him, he was ready to go. His wife wrote Bro. Rawls that he prayed to his death, died with his head in her hand, and his dying words were: "Bettie, serve the Lord the balance of your days. Be pure, firm and candid in all you do or say."

Thus died this brother, leaving the dying testimony that there is a reality in the religion we profess. His remains were deposited in the graveyard at Raleigh. Soon the wife and friends will gather with him "at the river."

MERCHANT—Died, JEFF MERCHANT, son of J. J. and May Merchant. He was born in Scott county, Miss., February 17, 1884, and departed this life September 11, 1889. He leaves a father, mother, two brothers and a sister to mourn his loss. But—thanks be to God!—he has gone to see his two little sisters who preceded him to that home in heaven. Little Jeff was a model child in every respect. He loved and obeyed his mother to perfection, and sympathized with her in all her cares and troubles. Even though his little life was short, he lived long enough to form many friends, who will ever remember the beautiful character he exemplified, not only in domestic matters, but in spiritual affairs also. When Jeffy left this land of trouble and took his immortal flight to that "land of pure delight," our hearts were made to bleed in sympathy for his parents. But we have this sweet consolation: "Our loss is heaven's gain." J. A. C.

MCCAIN—Little ALICE, child of Maj. and Mrs. H. V. McCain, died on the evening of October 1, in Montgomery, La. For seven short months she was the pet of the family circle, and then it pleased God to take her from them. "The Lord hath need of these flow'rets gay," and he gathers them when their fragrance is sweetest and their beauty fairest. He knows it is best to detach our affections from earthly things, and attach them to himself and heaven. Our darling is now safe from all ill. Even the fond caressing of mother is not needful to allay the falling tear. There are no tears in heaven.

Good-by, little Alice—dear little namesake! We have now another tie to attract us heavenward.

ALICE W.

RAWLINS—JESSE THOMAS RAWLINS, son of Mr. H. E. and Mrs. Fannie O. Rawlins, died September 23, 1889, aged three years, eight months and ten days. His suffering was great, but he bore it patiently for nine days and nights, and then God took him to himself. Little Jesse was an affectionate child and will be sadly missed in that family circle, and also by all who knew him, for to know him was to love him. This is the first time that death has visited this household; therefore, it will be hard to bear. Little Jesse is at rest.

LAURA P. OAKS.

DERRICK—WILLIAM R., son of Dr. and Mrs. W. B. Derrick, died September 7, 1889, aged one year and three days, and was buried in Spring Ridge Cemetery beside his grandmother. We baptized little Willie a few weeks before he died, and now he has gone to be with God. Willie was a sweet little boy—mamma's and papa's joy; but he has gone to live with the angels. We often pluck our choicest flowers that we may enjoy their fragrance, so our heavenly Father takes the choice bud that it may bloom into eternal life. J. M. MORSE.

DAY—LENA VICTORIA, sweet little daughter of Bro. Hiram and Sister Julia Day, was born May 27, 1887; baptized by Rev. M. H. Moore; died May 31, 1889, aged two years and four days. Kind parents and friends did all in their power to relieve her suffering and to keep the dear little one with them, but God wanted this pure white bud to bloom in the beautiful garden above. We laid her in the church-yard to await the resurrection morn. Grieve not, dear friends, for dear little Lena. She is now in the arms of Jesus. W. M. SULLIVAN.

KING—C. B. KING was born in Wilkinson County, Miss., April 5, 1831, and died May 25, 1889. Bro. King was married to Miss C. A. V. Day, November 17, 1859, by whom he had ten children. Bro. King joined the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, rather late in life. He was one of those quiet, diffident sort of men, but on occasions where it was necessary he was ready to speak for Christ and his cause. He was faithful and consistent in his life. No man in the vicinity of Galloway Church will be missed as is Charlie King. A friend to widows and orphans, his advice and counsel were asked in church affairs and neighborhood troubles. The last act of his life was to build Galloway Church, near his own residence. His hospitality was unbounded. His last sickness was short—a few days; was unconscious just before he died, but we need no dying testimony from a man whose life and walk was like his. He leaves a widow and seven children to mourn his loss. P. S. PETTY.

CARTER—MRS. ST. HELENA (nee Railey) CARTER, wife of M. F. Carter, was born December 4, 1860, joined the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, 1873, and died near Lookout, St. Helena parish, La., August 17, 1889. The deceased was a great sufferer for several months, which she bore with Christian fortitude, and approached death as a deliverer who had no terrors. Assuring her loved ones that she was ready to go, she left them her parting blessing, and admonished them to meet her in heaven. She leaves an afflicted husband and two small children, and father and mother, and several brothers and sisters to mourn her departure. But, thanks be unto God—who giveth us the victory through our Lord Jesus Christ—"that we weep not as those who have no hope." P. HOWARD.

BUCHANAN—JESSE, son of W. T. and Corre A. Buchanan, was born in the town of Floyd, La., December 2, 1885, and died, of congestion, in Delhi, September 13, 1889. Little Jesse was a remarkable child. Lovely in appearance and very intelligent, he was unusually attractive, and a general favorite. Although not five years of age, he would interest and puzzle anyone with questions about God and the future state. It is a profound mystery to his broken-hearted mother, and to a bereaved circle, why God took him. They ask, "O Master, why should such a lovely bud be blighted?" But, mourners, dry your tears. The little bud will bloom again in a more congenial clime, where congestions, heartaches and sad partings are never known. You can not call him back, but you can go to him.

H. ARMSTRONG.

STAFFORD—WM. SANDY STAFFORD was born March 8, 1883, and departed this life, October 13, 1889. Little William is no more. The Lord has taken him to that blessed abode of the children; for the Savior said, "of such is the kingdom of Heaven." May the Lord support the bereft parents of the departed one, and enable them to meet little William in that rich abode. Funeral at the house of the father of the departed one by the writer from Job i. 21—"The Lord gave, and the Lord hath taken away: blessed be the name of the Lord!"

JOHN H. EVANS, P. C.

LAMB—BILLY GREEN LAMB, youngest child of F. Marion and M. J. Lamb, died at the home of his parents, of congestion, on October 3, 1889, aged eight years, one month and sixteen days. He was a bright, cheerful, promising child; and to the bereft parents and family how consoling the words of our Savior—"Suffer little children to come unto me, and forbid them not; for of such is the kingdom of Heaven!" J. W. PITTMAN.

KING—CHARLES M. KING, son of C. B. King, was born June 4, 1874, and died May 22, 1889. Charlie was a member of the church and a good boy; was not vicious, not having formed any bad habits in youth. His mother thinks he was converted during his sickness, and, doubtless, before this there has been a happy meeting of father and son in the good world.

P. S. PETTY.

Mrs May Wright Sewall and Mrs. Josephine R. Nichols, of Indiana, are said to be the only accredited woman delegates from this country to the Paris Exposition. The former represents the National Council of Women, and the latter the World's and National W. C. T. U.

It Is Worth Reading.

We understand a busy man's views in regard to prolixity. In these days affairs proceed at a railroad rate, and there is no time for unnecessary halt, so we fall in with this idea momentum, and briefly call attention to the essential points of a vital matter, or, rather, we let others do it for us. Here are extracts from two letters which need no further comment:

REISTERTOWN, MD., Feb. 15, 1888

"I would like to see you and tell you what Compound Oxygen has done for me. It was slow, but sure. Now almost after two years, after using only one treatment, I think I can say truthfully my health is as perfect as it can be on earth. Two doctors of Baltimore examined me and said mine was a hopeless case of asthma, and I will not tell you how much I have suffered with my lungs."

MRS. MARY R. IRELAND.

A concluding extract from another letter will furnish most satisfactory reading:

MYERSVILLE, MD., Aug. 6, 1888.

"I believe the Compound Oxygen Treatment to be an invaluable remedy, because of the incalculable benefit I received from its use."

REV. A. M. SMITH,
Pastor of Ev. Lutheran Church.

We publish a brochure of 200 pages regarding the effect of Compound Oxygen on invalids suffering from consumption, asthma, bronchitis, dyspepsia, catarrh, hay fever, headache, debility, rheumatism, neuralgia; all chronic and nervous disorders. It will be sent, free of charge, to any one addressing DRS. STARKEY & PALEN, 1529 Arch St., Phila., Pa.; or 120 Sutter street, San Francisco, Cal.

Scientific.

Scientific Testimony.

Prof. Virchow, the great German biologist, whose name is widely known, especially in scientific circles, made an elaborate address at a recent meeting of an Anthropological Congress in Vienna, which caused some sensation. He has long been a steadfast antagonist of the Darwinian theory of Evolution, especially as applied to the origin of man. "Twenty years ago," he said, "the Darwinian theory made its first victorious march through the world." Professor Virchow was its determined opponent then; all his biological studies continued through the intervening years have confirmed him in his opposition. He rejects utterly the suggestion that man may have decended from an anthropoid ape. Professor Virchow says, with great decisiveness in his tone: "We have sought in vain for the intermediate stages which are supposed to connect man with the apes—the proto-man, the pro-anthropos is not yet discovered. For anthropological science pro-anthropos is not even a subject for discussion. The anthropologist may see it in his dreams; but as soon as he awakes he can not say that he has made any approach towards him." He affirms most positively in relation to the human race that "in the course of five thousand years no change of type worthy of mention has taken place. If you ask me whether the first man were white or black, I can only say I don't know. Every living race is still human; no single one has yet been found that we can designate a Simian or quasi-Simian." Then in regard to the inhabitants of the Lake Dwellings Professor Virchow says that "he has been able to submit to comparative examination nearly every single skull that has been found. The result has been that we have certainly met with opposite characteristics among various races; but of all these there is not one that lies outside of the boundaries of our present population." All were human—not Simian or semi-Simian in their characteristics. This testimony is worthy of record.—Presbyterian.

Sound from a Rainbow.

One of the most wonderful discoveries in science that have been made within the last year or two is the fact that a beam of light produces sound. A beam of sunlight is thrown through a lens on a glass vessel that contains lamp-black, colored silk or worsted, or other substances. A disk having slits or openings cut in it is made to revolve swiftly in this beam of light, so as to cut it up, thus making alternate flashes of light and shadow. On putting the ear to the glass vessel strange sounds are heard so long as the flashing beam is falling on the vessel.

Recently a more wonderful discovery has been made. The beam of sunlight is made to pass through a prism, so as to produce what is called the solar spectrum, or rainbow. The disk is turned and the colored light of the rainbow is made to break through it. Now, place the ear to the vessel containing the silk, wool or other material. As the colored lights of the spectrum fall upon it sounds will be given by different parts of the spectrum, and there will be silence in other parts. For instance, if the vessel contains red worsted and the green light flashes upon it, loud sounds will be given. Only feeble will be heard when the red and blue parts of the rainbow fall upon the vessel, and other colors make no sound at all. Green silk gives sound best in red light. Every kind of material gives more or less sound in different colors, and utters no sound in others. The discovery is a strange one, and it is thought more wonderful things will come from it.—Christian at Work.

From the Herald of Faith, St. Louis, Missouri, August 10, 1887:

Referring to Shallenberger's Antidote for Malaria, the business manager of the Herald of Faith would say, that he gave this medicine a personal trial, and was speedily cured of an unpleasant Intermittent Fever. He then recommended it to F. J. Tiefenbrunn, 1915 Papin street, and to police officer Meidenger, at the Union Depot, both of whom were cured by it of chills and fever of several years' standing. Recently his wife, after a fever of several days' duration, took a single dose and was perfectly cured. In view of these remarkable cures, and remembering how much money is spent for quinine, so little to be depended on and often so injurious, we can only wish that Shallenberger's Antidote would come into general use.

AN EXTRAORDINARY OFFER.

We want live, energetic agents in every county in the United States and Canada to sell a patent article of great merit, on its merits. An article having a large sale, paying over 100 per cent. profit, having no competition, and on which the agent is protected in the exclusive sale by a deed given for each and every county he may secure from us. With all these advantages to our agents, and the fact that it is an article that can be sold to every house owner, it might at be necessary to make "an extraordinary offer" to secure good agents at once, but we have concluded to make it to show, not only our confidence in the merits of our invention, but in its salability by any agent that will handle it with energy. Our agents now at work are making from $150 to $300 a month clear, and makes it safe for us to make our offer to all who are out of employment. Any agent that will give our business a thirty days' trial, and fail to clear at least $100 in that time, above all expenses, can return all goods unsold to us, and we will refund the money paid for them. No other employer of agents ever dared to make such an offer, nor would we if we did not know that we have agents now making double this amount. Our large descriptive circulars explain our offer fully, and these we wish to send to every one out of employment who will send us three one cent stamps for postage.

We are willing to bear personal testimony to the efficacy and value of Hood's Sarsaparilla, which we have been advertising some years in our paper, having used it for blood impurities with great success. It is a preparation of standard merit, made of perfectly pure ingredients, and thoroughly effective in cleansing and purifying the system. For eruptions, boils, etc., it can be relied upon every time. Our own experience with it has been most gratifying, and we are glad to give it this endorsement.—Athol (Mass.) Transcript.

Specific Oxygen—What It Is.

As the word specific means special, then "Specific Oxygen" means special Oxygen. But to be more explicit, "Specific Oxygen" is a portable inhaling treatment for chronic diseases of the Nose, Throat and Lungs. It is especially adapted to diseases of the air passages, and possesses many advantages over other Home Oxygen Treatments:

First—Because of its specific form—it being the only Medicated Oxygen Treatment in use.

Secondly—It affords not only a vital blood and nerve stimulant from the natural power of Oxygen, but the medicated inhalations carry with them an additional local antiseptic treatment, which is especially curative in a large class of chronic diseases of the lungs, stomach and bowels.

Thirdly—The medication being "part and parcel" of the Oxygen, is brought by it into direct contact with the diseased membranes, over and through which the Oxygen passes on its way to the blood.

Fourthly—The medication possesses the properties of a germacide—destroying the propagating germs in Diphtheria, Membranous Croup, Consumption, Bronchitis, Hay-Fever, Asthma, and many other wasting diseases of the Throat and Lungs. These same advantages recommend it over Oxygen Treatments for offensive Catarrhs in the head. The medication kills the Catarrh germs, cleanses and disinfects the membranes, thereby destroying the offensive odor and cutting short the disease. The same pertains to Hay-fever. It is the only sure cure for these diseases. It is not a patent medicine. Write for Manual. SPECIFIC OXYGEN CO., Nashville, Tenn.

At the meeting of the barbed wire and nail manufacturers in Pittsburg, on October 18, the price of barb wire was advanced 5 per cent and wire nails from 7 to 8 per cent. The advance goes into effect immediately.

The National Board of Trade, in session at Louisville, adjourned on October 18. Resolutions were passed opposing any modification of the interstate commerce law, especially of the clause prohibiting pooling; favoring national supervision of insurance and uniformity of insurance legislation; favoring a reduction of the federal revenues in the way which will the least embarrass industries and trade; favoring Congress considering plans for irrigation; favoring reciprocity of trade relations with Canada.

Senators and Representatives now in Washington say the issues to be discussed in the next Congress will be the civil service, the interstate commerce law, the educational question, subsidies to steamship lines, a national election law, the race question.

The election of a colored man as class orator at Harvard caused intense excitement in that institution. He was elected by a majority of one vote in a total of over 250 votes cast.

A warrant for $550,000 has been turned over to the Eads' estate by the government. Of this sum $25,000 was a quarterly payment for the maintenance of the jetties, $25,000 was interest, and the balance, or $500,000, was in part payment of the amount of $1,000,000 due to Captain Eads. It was provided in the act relative to the jetties that within ten years of the completion of the jetties the works should be inspected, and if the required depth of water should be found, that Captain Eads should receive $500,000, the remainder of the million to be paid at the expiration of twenty years.

The Paris Temps, in a resume of the financial results of the Exposition, says that before its close the number of people who will have visited the great fair will reach 26,000,000, and will in all probability exceed that figure.

The North German Gazette says it is not unlikely that Germany will refuse to recognize Mataafa as King of Samoa, and that it must be assumed that the other powers, parties to the Samoan treaty, have similarly expressed themselves, because at the conference, recently held at Berlin, all the representatives agreed that Malietoa should be King.

It is said that Prince Ferdinand, of Bulgaria, who is now in Paris, fearing that attempts will be made upon his life during his tour of Europe, is taking every precaution to preserve his incognito. The Prince is guarded by both French and Bulgarian detectives.

Asthma can't be cured? Oh! yes it can. Dr. Davis' Compound Syrup of Wild Cherry and Tar will do it. I know it because it gave me relief. Every winter I was troubled with asthma, especially if the weather was damp, suffering severely. I took about six bottles of Davis' Wild Cherry and Tar, and am completely cured. It is the remedy for asthma. CHAS. HEINES, 500½ Chippewa Street, New Orleans, La.

Dr. Davis' Compound Syrup of Wild Cherry and Tar is a sure and speedy cure for coughs, colds, catarrh, bronchitis and consumption, and gives immediate relief in cases of croup and whooping-cough. Try it. One dollar bottles hold two and a half times as much as a 50c. bottle.

So Many Ladies

Have been disappointed in buying dresses that we can readily believe that many of them despair of purchasing a dress that is worth the money paid for it. Severe competition, high rents, expensive clerks, all combine to drive storekeepers to sell an inferior article of apparel at a price much higher than its real value. So when a manufacturer offers to sell direct from his looms to the wearer, the buyer has a guarantee that he or she will get the best fruit of the looms. This is particularly true of silk and satin, as in no other class of goods is the opportunity for so big-a gain so great. Foreign materials can be introduced into the silk so that even a practiced eye cannot detect the deception. The lady who has been led by a pleasant clerk in a handsome store to invest her money finds out after it is too late that she has been cheated, and the goods she bought for something hand-some turns out to be rough material, containing 10 per cent. silk, 50 per cent. foreign materials not fit for a lady to wear. All our lady readers will welcome the chance offered them to secure a handsome silk or satin dress direct from a great Connecticut factory which offers to send a perfect Silk or Satin dress to any of our subscribers for examination and final purchase.

Read carefully their large advertisement, and be sure to send your name, address and stamp, asking for samples of silk or satin, to C. S. CHAFFEE & SON, MANSFIELD CENTRE, CONN. They are reliable, and we take much satisfaction in pre-cuting their card. Do us the favor to name our paper when writing.

Entire Sanctification.

[An Open Letter of Reply to Mr. John C. Shakelford.]

BY B. CARRADINE, D. D.

Your letter, of the ninth instant, in the St. Louis Christian Advocate, was only seen by me a few days ago. The communication touched a tender chord within me and moved me. It also impressed me that I was dealing with a man who is genuine, spiritual, and athirst for the sanctifying grace of God. I fancy, however, that I detect in your questions a spirit of assuredness that you had propounded queries that could not be answered. So it would be but for the fact that faith unlocks and enters through a door before which earthly wisdom and knowledge stand baffled and helpless. I insert your leading questions in your open letter to me.

Your communication has renewed my aspirations for the attainment of what John Wesley called "The Grand Depositum of Methodism." There is, however, one point in your narrative at which I stumble. Perhaps you can remove the stumbling-block, and in helping me, help others also. You say, "I believed the work was done before the witness was given." This you did for three days, and then baptism of fire came upon your soul. Now, with me it is impossible to distinguish the fact of sanctification from the witness. Both sanctification and the witness of sanctification are matters of consciousness. Does God count me sanctified before I am sanctified? Can I believe that he sanctifies me before I am conscious of the fact that I am sanctified? Can I really be sanctified before the baptism of fire, which you call the witness, goes through my nature and destroys the "body of sin"? If I believe I am sanctified before I am conscious of the fact, do I not make belief in a falsehood the condition of obtaining the great blessing? Here I stumble.

If I tell you that I suffered intensely where you are now being tried, and that I have found light where at first there was profound darkness, and where you to-day only see darkness, I trust you will not think that I am arrogating to myself anything whatever. On the contrary, I feel, by the nameless spirit and character of your letter, that you are a man of superior mental and spiritual culture. And, furthermore, as you read on you will discover that I place myself properly in a lowly place in the kingdom of grace. Indeed, it was because of my conscious weakness and helplessness that I found what you have not yet discovered. For if a diamond be lost in the dust, it is not the man whose eyes are on the stars that will see it, but the man who has bowed body and face close to the ground. I thank God that salvation is not placed high above us, and beyond reach, but very nigh to us, and low down, so that a little child, and, indeed, a fool, may lay hand upon it and be enriched. It is so with pardon and regeneration, and it is so with entire sanctification.

Will you allow me to speak to a class through you before I answer your questions? The doors of the sweet experiences of regeneration and entire sanctification do not lie back at the touch of the hand of the metaphysician, for several reasons. One is, that the great mass of people on earth are not learned or trained in the laws of the mental life; and if the reception of blessings was dependent upon the apprehension of syllogisms and recognition of certain great principles of mental science, the race would be lost. Another reason that occurs to me why the door of grace opens not to the touch of the reasoner is, that salvation is above reason. It was not conceived by man, nor is it understood by lordly intellects to-day. I have often been struck with two expressions in the Bible. One is, that the wisdom of God is foolishness to men, and the other, that the wisdom of this world is foolishness to God. It is noteworthy that the gospel came down to us through the air to Bethlehem, and not through the brains of the scribes and learned members of the Sanhedrim. The point I would humbly make is, that what may appear irreconcilable in the realm of metaphysics may be perfectly harmonized in the realm of grace. For instance: Mathematics would say that it is impossible for three to be one, and one to be three, and yet this impossible thing is the glory of heaven in the fact of the Trinity.

May not, my dear brother, the difficulties you mention in your letter, and which appear in the clipping above, exist only in your mind? May not God's thoughts be higher than our thoughts, and his ways not as our ways?

Here I am to-day thrilled with this "secret of the Lord," the declaration or confession of which has brought upon me attacks from many directions, saving your kindly and courteous pen. As I read the arguments turned against my experience from high quarters, there are three things that sustain me and keep me perfectly calm and assured through it all. One is the perpetual witness of the Holy Ghost to the fact of my sanctification (Heb. x, 14, 15); another, the work itself done by him (1. Thess. v, 23, 24); and the third is the recollection of a verse uttered by the Savior: "I thank thee, O Father, Lord of heaven and earth, that thou hast hid these things from the wise and prudent, and hast revealed them unto babes." (Luke x, 21.) This verse explains why I have obtained that which nobler, better, wiser men have not received. I came to God as a little child in seeking the blessing of sanctification. I reasoned not, even as a child does not reason. I created no mental difficulties. I never went near Sir William Hamilton, nor any like him. I knew the work was above his and all other human intellects. It was a part of the mystery the angels studied and could not fathom. I went not to books written by ancient or modern authors on the subject. I went to God! The Bible said He could do it, and would do it, and, better than either, that if I believed, He did it then! I simply believed God—I took him at his word!

Now for the suggested difficulty. "How" (I am asked in substance) "can I believe that the work of sanctification is accomplished until I receive the witness that it is done? And if I believe I am sanctified before I am made conscious of the fact, do I not make belief in a falsehood the condition of obtaining the great blessing?" These questions at first seem to possess great weight. They have troubled many, and will agitate many more. They gather about the real heart and center of the whole question. He that tarries here to settle this will never go farther. He that approaches the difficulty as a little child will find that there is no difficulty; that there is no problem of Methodism for him to solve!—that the Father himself has given the solution to the humble, childlike man of unquestioning faith.

But let me first say that the question can not but surprise me. Just a glance reveals the fact that it reverses the order God observes in the work of salvation. God's order is, first faith, then the work, and last, the feeling. In your question you ask how can you believe that you are sanctified until you are made conscious of the fact. Look at the question closely, and you will observe that your order is, first, feeling; second, the work, and last, the faith, which is the direct reverse of God's method of doing. Virtually, you say that if God sends you a certain feeling or consciousness, that he has done a certain work in you; that then you will believe.

My dear brother, is it not evident that whatever may be the procuring cause of the blessing to you, that according to your plan it can not be faith?—for faith with you is put last. You will believe if you feel that the work is done. Let me ask you, Who could not stand on such an easy platform as this? Surely anybody could admit the fact of a work done by the Savior when great tokens of emotion are given at the moment. A great multitude, I fancy, stand ready to be saved on such terms. Millions are ready to say, "If God gives certain emotions or experiences declaring his work, then will we believe." But where appears the faith in such a salvation? Don't we see that it is no longer faith, but knowledge? Don't we see that the demand here to God is, "Let me know, and I will believe," while God says, "Believe, and ye shall know"? If anything, my dear brother, thrills you through and through. It is when a man believes your quiet statement of a fact, and asks for no proof, while, at the same time, many things are operating to produce doubt in the mind. And so I believe if God ever stands thrilled in heaven, it is when a man takes him at his word, and goes on believing it in spite of an emotionless heart, and in spite of contradicting men and devils, and in face of the fact that there is no sign or witness from heaven that the life is observed, or the faith accepted.

This is faith worthy of the name. No sight or feeling about this. This is what I call dry faith; though I bless God it does not stay dry long. It fairly drips with grace, if cherished and kept in the heart a few hours or days. Such a faith Abraham had when he went out, not knowing whither he went. Some one says about him, that "he walked out into empty space on the naked promise of Almighty God!" Such a faith the centurion had when he asked Christ to heal his servant. Christ replied, "I will." On this word the Roman soldier rested; even said there was no need for Christ to come to his house; that his word was sufficient to heal the servant at a distance. This was one of the times that Christ was thrilled. The Bible says, "He marvelled, and said to them that followed, Verily I say unto you, I have not found so great faith, no, not in Israel." The centurion held on by dry faith; the servant was distant; the healing took place out of sight; and yet, without a single sign from heaven, with nothing but the word of Christ, he went home, believing the servant was well; and when he arrived, found that he was restored. That he had this faith, appears in Matthew viii, 13.

Now, God says in his Word that if I perfectly, unreservedly, and forever consecrate myself to him, that I shall be made holy by the altar on which I have placed myself. He says that the altar sanctifies, that the blood cleanses, and right now. That the instant I believe it, the work is done! Will I believe it? Will I take God's word, and rise up after a perfect consecration, and say it is done? The battle rages right at this point; defeat or victory must come right here. Let no man say there is no such thing as a second work or cleansing by the Holy Ghost, unless he has thoroughly tested the virtue of the faith that is here presented. Have you cast yourself upon this faith as Peter flung himself upon the waves? If not, you have failed to do what others of us have done; and, as a consequence, are without an experience that is to-day thrilling us as the greatest fact of our lives. It won't do to question here. The instant a mental debate starts, the instant the words "why" and "how" appear, the instant the psychology of sanctification is dwelt upon—that instant the glory is lifted, the mysterious Being whom I felt to be in my arms is gone, and my hands are left grasping at empty air. Such debate and questionings of mind come with a poor grace from us who believe that even in conversion that regeneration is one thing, and the witness of the Spirit another; that not infrequently the divine testimony is withheld for weeks and months. Just as clearly do I recognize that the work of sanctification is one thing, and the witness to the work another. The two may be separated, as in the case of regeneration. But you ask the question, "If I believe I am sanctified before I am conscious of the fact, do I not make belief in a falsehood the condition of obtaining the great blessing?"

Your trouble here was once my trouble; my soul was in an agony over it. As a difficulty, it is insuperable until you discover that God does not condition the bestowal of a blessing on us by a preceding or accompanying act of consciousness upon our part. I fail to see in his Word where he states that my consciousness of the fact affects in any way the work of sanctification. Instead of this, I am simply required, after a perfect consecration of myself, to believe that the work is done. The servant is distant—no messenger has as yet reached me; but I believe he is healed, because Christ says so! My faith rests not upon any mental condition of my own, or any play of emotion; but upon the simple statement of God—that I am sanctified. There can be no falsehood about the matter. The man casts the whole thing on God; and it is the divine faithfulness and honor and truth that are involved. It is idle to say that the man may be deceived in regard to his exercise of faith. Every man knows when he really believes. Peter knew the moment when he flung himself upon the water, and just as clearly does the soul recognize the critical instant when, forsaking all other help, turning from every other hope and confidence, it lets go every earthly hold, and leaps or drops in the arms of Christ. Blessed be God! no one ever did this in vain. Even here I am not required to look to my consciousness, or to any conceivable experience; but quietly to go on believing that God has done the work. But must we not pray for the witness to our sanctification? Undoubtedly: but we must not forget the work is one thing, and the witness another. So we walk in faith until God is pleased to send the testimony. I do not know how it strikes you, but to me it seems there could be no more acceptable faith to God than this, which takes God at his word, and goes on without a disturbing doubt.

I can not but claim for God, on the part of his children, the same unhesitating, unquestioning belief and obedience that I have seen rendered by sons and daughters to an earthly parent. God says a thing—I believe God! It was this, and nothing but this, that caused the Lord to say of Abraham, He is my friend.

I am confident that some sharp-eyed reader will point out an apparent discrepancy in my experience. For instance: I said that I believed the work was done in my soul before I received the witness: that in the faith I walked two days; and yet that on the morning of the third day I felt the work of sanctification.

This is only an apparent difficulty. It is not a real contradiction unless some one can show that God can not do a work in us apart from our consciousness, or that he is under necessity to reveal himself simultaneously with his performance. I believed with all my heart for two days that God had sanctified me, because he said so. In this faith I walked unwaveringly until the morning spoken of in my experience, when suddenly and powerfully God gave me the witness of his work, or the proof that the blood had cleansed me from all sin, and that my heart was pure.

In a recent visit to Georgia I was informed of a case strikingly illustrative. It was that of a young man who, after having made the perfect consecration demanded by the Bible, believed that the blood of Christ did then and there cleanse him from all sin. He was without feeling; but he remembered that we are not saved by feeling, but by faith, and so lived on the first day, clinging to God's Word about the matter, as a man in mid-ocean would cling to a spar. Some one saw him shake his head in a peculiar, positive way in church. One sitting near him heard him say at the same moment, "The blood does sanctify me." Later in the day he was approached by a friend, who asked, "Bro. ——, how are you feeling?" His reply was: "I have no feeling; but I know that Jesus sanctifies my soul, because He said so." Next day he observed an unfriendly critic observing him in the congregation; again came the positive movement of the head, with the murmured words, "He does cleanse me from all sin." To sympathetic and anxious Christian friends his constant statement was: "No feeling; but perfect faith that the blood cleanses me now." Thus he walked for several days by "dry faith," when one morning, as a friend started to put the usual question, suddenly he cried out in tones that thrilled beyond all description: "O glory! glory! my soul can not contain the joy and blessedness it feels!" The witness had come; as, indeed, it will always come to the man who takes God at his word.

Why is it that so many seek this blessing for months without obtaining it? Because they put the work in the future; they place the fulfillment of the promise to some remote time when God says now, and demands that our faith shall say now!

My brother, are you a perfectly consecrated man? If so, then in the name of Jesus of Nazareth rise up and say, "His blood cleanseth me now from all sin," and walk in that faith. Let it be a dry faith. I tell you that it will not remain dry long. The balm of Gilead—the very dews of heaven—and the anointings of the Holy Ghost will descend, and can not but descend upon a faith that takes God at his word. The disciples held on ten days; can not you wait in prayer and dry faith that long? Don't read books opposed to the doctrine; they will chill your faith and divert you from the blessing. Would you advise a penitent to read skeptical works before coming to Christ? The principle is identical. Some godly men are skeptics in regard to instantaneous sanctification. Don't read their works until you are sanctified; then you can read with a smile, in calmness of spirit, and without hurt to yourself. We can then peruse the ninth chapter of John with an appreciation never felt before. Instead of the books referred to, search a certain famous old Book which, addressing converted men and women, says, "This is the will of God, even your sanctification," and adds, "Faithful is he that calleth you: who also will do it."

Don't listen to men who deny and oppose in various ways this experience. How can they speak advisedly and correctly of what they have never felt? Their confessed ignorance of the experience disqualifies them here as instructors and leaders, no matter how wise and good and excellent they may be as Christian men and ministers. How can a man lead in a way which he has never trod?

And now I leave these words with you and with other readers to whom I have manly addressed through you. Would that they were clearer, stronger, and worthier words for your sake and the sake of God's people, for whom I would gladly lay down my life to bring into this blessing, this deliverance and rest, this tender and yet steadfast grace that Paul speaks of so frequently and assuredly, and with such an accent of rejoicing and triumph. (Rom. v, 2; II. Cor. i, 15.)

Let me call your attention to the fact that when Carvosso received the blessing he was saying, "I shall have the blessing now." If he had said "to-morrow," he would not have entered into rest. Be assured that we can never err by believing too much in God's Word, especially when that word is a promise coming directly to us. To doubt is to dishonor God: to believe is to honor and glorify him.

Let us hear the Savior: "Therefore I say unto you, what things soever ye desire when ye pray, believe that ye receive them, and ye shall have them." "Lord, increase our faith."

In Memoriam.

CAPT. R. L. ROBERTSON, OCTOBER 11, 1889.

BY F. M. GRACE, D. D.

Capt. R. L. Robertson was born in Southampton, Va., March 10, 1798; raised in Norfolk; when seventeen went to sea: in 1821 made his first voyage to New Orleans, and came frequently thereafter; in 1828 purchased and ran a ship in the West India trade; in 1829 left the sea and was appointed marine inspector. This position he held till 1887. He remained on active duty among the shipping as inspector for the Sun and Home Insurance Company until within a few weeks of his death. Although more than ninety years old, he died not of old age. He wore the appearance of a healthy and happy old man, who enjoyed life and loved to do good. He complained of impaired hearing and eyesight; but continued to move around till death came from pneumonia, after a week's illness, at Albemarle, La. Here the history of the outer man breaks off; but that of the inner man, or the soul of Capt. Robertson, is more remarkable than the other. His seafaring life, his longevity, his successful business career, are not to be compared in point of interest with his religious experience, his devotion to the church, and his characteristic benevolence. The captain was a wicked man till he was more than forty years of age. He joined the church May 1, 1842, on probation, and was received into full connection November 11, of that year, under the pastorate of Rev. William H. Watkins. His residence was then at 491 Royal.

It was through the influence of his first wife, and a young lady then residing in his family, and who afterward married Rev. Dr. Watkins, that Capt. Robertson was converted. He began his religious life by taking up the cross at home, holding family prayers both night and morning, and he kept up this good habit during all his married life, though he survived his third wife some ten years. The latter period he spent at the residence of his son, on Josephine street. The devotion of Capt. Robertson to his church was something singular and extraordinary. He first labored in the building of the old flat-boat church, the beginning of Methodism in the lower part of the city. Then in 1812 he was on the Building Committee, and treasurer of the funds which were raised for the construction of the new brick church, corner of Moreau and Englehn. When this was consumed by fire in 1852, he superintended the construction of the present edifice at a cost of about fifteen thousand dollars. During the remainder of his long life he watched over the interests of this church in every possible manner. He was superintendent of the Sunday-school, steward, class leader and trustee for more than forty years. In fact, he believed that he had been providentially called to labor for this church as much as the Apostle Paul to preach the gospel to the Gentiles. He kept a faithful record of the history of the church for more than thirty years. He boarded the successive pastors in his family for fourteen years. No man was ever more thoroughly identified with any interest than was Capt. Robertson in Moreau Church from its origin to the present time. Under his administration successive generations of children have been trained in the Sunday-school; so that when he died the grandchildren of some of his first pupils were members of the school. When rich he gave largely to the cause of Christ, and when in old age and comparative poverty, he continued his regular contributions. Though more than ninety years of age, he continued to visit the school every Sunday, and at the close would pronounce the benediction. Residing several miles from the church, he nevertheless attended all the morning services, and, when absent from the city, he kept up a continued correspondence with his pastor in regard to the interests of the church. What an example of piety!

The last few months of his life were spent in Texas, where he passed the summer on a visit to his granddaughter. Returning to Louisiana, he stopped a few weeks on Bayou Lafourche, where he died at the residence of an old friend, Dr. John E. Pugh. Thus cut off from religious associations, we have no account of his last exercises, except that he expressed a regret that he should die away from home and without religious ministrations. His illness, however, being made known in the city, prayer was made for him in the Sunday-school and the congregation on the day before his death.

On the arrival of the train bearing his remains, a number of his brethren conveyed the body to the church, from which it was borne to the cemetery on the following day.

The funeral services were peculiarly solemn and interesting. Not only the people of his own church, but the Howard Association and many old friends of all classes attended the funeral. Almost all the Methodist clergy in the city were present, and all the former pastors and presiding elders of Moreau Church took part in the services. Drs. Evans and Carter read the lessons, Bro. Heard read a hymn, Bro. Sawyer made the prayer, the pastor read a biographical sketch, Dr. Walker made an address, and Dr. Ahrens read the burial service at the tomb. The church was draped in mourning, floral designs were laid upon the altar, and everything that could be done to express the veneration and gratitude of a grief-stricken church was freely and spontaneously contributed by the loving hands of his thoughtful friends and scholars. Grand old man! When shall we look upon his like again! What benefactions has he left behind! And what a reward has gone before to await him in the skies! The old sailor has now crossed "life's solemn main" and has gained the port!

"There all the ship's company meet,
Who sailed with the Savior beneath,
With shouting each other they greet,
And triumph o'er sorrow and death."

THE UNFINISHED STOCKING.

BY SARAH K. BOLTON.

Lay it aside—her work! no more she sits
By open window in the western sun,
Thinking of this and that beloved one
In silence as she knits.

Lay it aside; the needles in their place:
No more she welcomes at the cottage door
The coming of her children home once more,
With sweet and tearful face.

Lay it aside, her work is done and well;
A generous, sympathetic, Christian life;
A faithful mother and a noble wife;
Her influence, who can tell?

Lay it aside—say not her work is done;
No deed of love or goodness ever dies.
But in the lives of others multiplies;
Say it is just begun!

"The Other Side of the Shield."

BY MARY WINANS WALL.

The article published in your paper, of September 19, entitled "A Halt Called," has been endorsed by numerous letters and messages to myself, thanking me for writing it, and saying that I was right.

Now, this commendation does not make me vain, for I know that the favor with which my article was received was due to the fact that I voiced the views and feelings of the persons who commended it.

Ministers, laymen, and honorable women, not a few, have written to me. How I am ever to reply to these kind people I do not know. I am something of an invalid, and have been for eighteen months. In my lonely, quiet hours I have much time to think over the past and to ponder on the present.

It seems to me that the church, the laity, are responsible for much of the preaching to which I and a host of others object. The church members do not support their ministers as they ought. I do not mean only financially, but morally and spiritually. They do not hold up the minister's hands as Aaron and Hur held up the hands of Moses.

A sensible, pious minister is on a work: he wants the people to serve God: he wants to do them good, and to see the work of God prosper. What help does he get from the members? Say there are 80 or a 120 on the church book. He is blessed if 25 of them attend church, at eleven, on Sunday, and at prayer meetings. "Angels and ministers of grace, defend us!" Perhaps nine women and five men come (of the members, I mean). They scatter over the house, and look frozen. Dear old "Uncle Billy James" used to say, "Push the chunks together, if you want a fire." And you just watch! It is a thermometer. If a congregation gets warmed up, you will see the members getting near the pulpit. I see lots of vacant seats in front of the ministers when I am well enough to go to church. I do not see how a minister can preach under such circumstances.

We ought to feel that our religion, our church is a part of our life; not something foreign to it. Let us all feel, "It is my church; I belong to it, It belongs to me; I must help it all I can; I must go to its meetings; I must take an interest; I must sing and pray; I must look the minister kindly in the eyes—he is my minister; and I must get all the good out of his ministrations that I can."

In 1854 the Conference sat in Jackson, La. Our beloved Bishop McTyeire (not a Bishop then) was appointed to preach in the Presbyterian church, while the Bishop preached at the college chapel. I went to hear Mr. McTyeire, and to this day I remember parts of his sermon. He said: "Some persons say they would not have cared to have known Jesus personally; but that he would have loved to walk and talk with him; to have sat at his feet with Mary, and to have leaned his head, like John, on Jesus' breast." And he spoke of the preaching of some as being full of the "living Jesus." In speaking of that day, Mr. McTyeire said, "The Presbyterians are a people who stand up to their rack, fodder or no fodder, even if there is nothing but shucks—for the congregation stayed to hear me, instead of going to hear the Bishop."

Well, that is the way it ought to be. We ought to stand by our preachers—even if they are not so interesting as we might wish—if they are true, faithful servants of God. Now, this is what I want to get at: when these good, faithful men see that they do not interest their congregations, they give in to having spicy, sensational preaching. And old friend of mine used to say, "There is a heap of human nature in people;" and these ministers want to make a good showing as well as others. I do not decry special seasons of revival, and special gifts in season; but don't make a circus of the meetings. All churches have peculiar seasons of activity; even the Catholics have "missions." What I mean is: do not let a craving for extra preaching make us neglect the regular routine of church work.

When I was in Evansville, Ind., I had quite a number of friends in Walnut Street Presbyterian Church, and attended the services in that church a good deal. In the matter of church activity, love for their minister, and usefulness, it is nearly a perfect church. I do not say that all the members are perfect Christians, but they are earnest workers. Let a stranger attend that church; some one takes him or her by the hand, and seems glad that they came. It is comforting to a stranger, in a strange city, to feel that he is noticed. They have prayer meetings, choir practice, missionary meetings, and church socibbles, and what I enjoyed greatly, a "Society of Christian Endeavor," composed of young ladies, young girls, young men and lads. They meet just one hour before night service, and have a subject from the Bible to consider and talk about. I went once, and the dear young people adopted me, and wanted me to come often, though I am "old enough to die off." I have a program for '89. The subject for October 20 was, "The Christian's Rewards." Each one recites or reads something apropos to the subject. There is always a room-ful. An elder or the minister is present; but the young people carry on the meeting. Sometimes a young man or lad leads; often a young lady. The meeting lasts just one hour. They have delightful singing and short prayers. At the church sociables a decent poor woman receives as much attention as a wealthy one. I speak what I know.

The young people of that church do not want to go to balls or to dance. Their time and attention are fully taken up in church matters. The members would not leave their regular minister and their church to go one square to listen to any sensational preacher. The church increases all the time.

CLINTON, Louisiana.

Brandon Wants the College.

Editor of the Clarion-Ledger:

As your paper is read by all classes of people, and allows the discussion through its columns of all questions that affect the public, I desire to say a few words as to the location of the proposed Methodist college.

In my judgment, Brandon is the place for it, for many reasons, amongst which are: That it is the healthiest place yet named, that it has the best water, that it has six churches and a sober, intelligent and moral community, that it is most accessible to that class to be mostly benefited by it.

Besides these positive advantages, Brandon has these negative ones:

She has no skating rink, no baseball club, no brass band, no german dances, no progressive euchre, no whisky saloons, no ten-pin alleys. Take it all in all, the Christian people of the State would not find a better place to send their boys to be free from bad examples and had influences and be in a healthier place and among a more intelligent, liberal and refined people.

OLD SUBSCRIBER.

During the past months we have had through the columns of the ADVOCATE inducements for the location of the Methodist College in Mississippi, based upon considerations of health, accessibility, subscriptions of money, etc.; but in none do we find reasons and advantages more worthy of consideration than those contained in the above, which we clip from the Clarion-Ledger. Especially do we agree with the writer as to the negative advantages suggested in the above. Next to healthfulness and accessibility, these should occupy the first place in deciding this important question. Any place where the moral and social atmosphere is contaminated by these alluring vices and dissipations is not suited for the location of such an institution. While to the school-room and lecture-halls belong the work of educating the head, all recognize that the moral and religious training is greatly influenced by the customs of the surrounding people. Especially is this the case where the students are thrown, as boarders, into the families of the community. Therefore, for the proper education of our boys, we want the best advantages for the development of the whole man, mental, moral and religious. I do not presume to dictate to the excellent committee which has this matter in hand, nor have I the candidacy of any special place to advocate; but I do believe that the community which may be so fortunate as to secure the institution will owe it to the college and its patrons to cultivate these negative advantages.

I am more fortunate than Brother "Methodist," who writes on this subin the ADVOCATE, of October 3. I have boys to educate, and write from the heart of a father. T. B. H.

Here and There.

For the first time in thirty-five years I have had a vacation. We left Wilson station, September 2, at 8 P. M., and reached Springfield, Robertson county, Tenn., the next day at 9 o'clock, P. M. This is fast traveling; we no longer count miles, but hours. The corn and cotton through Mississippi are very fine; certainly this will be a year of prosperity in this State. The portion of Tennessee that we visited is in good condition; the tobacco crop rather late. In Springfield, Tenn., we saw Rev. John H. Nichols, D. D., our preacher at that point. The Baptists and Campbellites are still living, and Bro. Nichols still pounding away on them. It was a pleasure to see the place where we were born, but some melancholy mixed with this pleasure. The human mind never forgets what has been written on it. When the page is opened we can read it as though it had just happened yesterday. To go to the place where one was born and reared, after an absence of forty years, is a kind of living youth and childhood over. No people wear better than these Tennesseeans, who live on the high table lands north of Nashville.

We had the pleasure of looking in on Dr. Cottrell, at Franklin, Ky. As a matter of course he was busy writing; and he writes well, as we all know. Two weeks' stay with my brother at Eldorado Springs, where he lives, was refreshing to soul and body; but we did not get our talk out, though we talked all the time.

For the first time we saw Dr. Fitzgerald, at Nashville. He is a better looking man than we expected to see; his pictures do not flatter him. We had not seen the pictures of Drs. John and Boswell. * * * One week with my nephew and niece at Orlinda, Tenn., was pleasantly spent. We returned home by Birmingham, Ala. This city is a wonder of the age; it can not be described. After five weeks' absence, we are now at home, in Clinton, La., and from the looks of my congregation last Sabbath, one would think the long rest had been beneficial to them. F. M. FEATHERSTUN.

A Place for the New College.

MR. EDITOR: I am informed that through the generous liberality of Major Millsaps, of Jackson, Miss., and the untiring labors of our beloved Bishop Galloway, that the handsome sum of one hundred thousand dollars will be raised for the endowment of a Methodist College in this State for the purpose of educating young men, whose parents belong to the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, as well as for any others who may wish to avail themselves of the advantages offered for securing a first-class collegiate education. The location of said institution is to be determined soon by a committee appointed for that purpose. I desire to present, as briefly as possible, the claims and advantages of the town of Verona, in Lee county, Miss., as a suitable point for the location of this new institution. Verona is a town of six or seven hundred inhabitants on the Mobile and Ohio railroad, four and three-fourths miles south of Tupelo, the county seat of Lee county, and about 140 miles north of Meridian, and is the second station north of the Prairie. It is beautifully situated on gently undulating, sandy soil, surrounded on all sides by forests, and in the midst of one of the best agricultural communities in the State; is the centre of a fine cotton, corn and stock-raising country, equal to any in the State. It is strictly a prohibition town, and has always been such. At the election on local option in 1886, there was but one vote cast for the sale of whisky out of a vote of 350 polled. Verona has long been an educational centre. The North Mississippi Female College is located there, being opened in 1870 under the presidency of Rev. Dr. T. C. Wier, who still occupies that position. Most of the time, since the war, a flourishing male academy has been successfully conducted there, under the superintendence of Prof. R. M. Leavell, now of the State University; and Prof. J. G. Deupree, now of Clinton, and others. The citizens are mostly enterprising, public-spirited and liberal men, who will, doubtless, contribute largely to aid in the college building, equipments, etc. As to the healthfulness of Verona, I know from experience that it can not be surpassed by any point in the State, having practiced medicine there for twenty-three years, and being for ten years chief health officer of Lee county. I know that there never has been an epidemic in Verona of any description, and there was not a death from typhoid fever during my residence there, and the mortality rate was as low, if not lower, than any place in the United States according to population. Yellow fever has never been nearer than about seventy miles west of the place. As to the morals of the town, it has ever been noted for religion, morality, temperance, refinement and general intelligence. This is one of the best Sunday-school towns in the State, more than three-fifths of the entire population being enrolled as members of some Sunday-school. The churches are neat and commodious, and filled weekly with large and attentive congregations. In addition to all I have written, Verona is north of the Black Belt, in the midst of a white population, free from all danger of race troubles, easily accessible by two railroads—the Mobile and Ohio running through its corporate limits, and the Kansas City, Memphis and Birmingham only three miles east, with a splendid dirt road to the Plantersville station on said road. Besides there is no finer college of the kind contemplated nearer than the Vanderbilt University at Nashville, Tenn., which gives an immense territory for patronage of the young men desirous of obtaining a collegiate education. Many other cogent reasons might be assigned in favor of Verona as a location for such an institution. But, perhaps, I had better not ask for any more space in your paper. If you will kindly publish this, you will bring the people of Verona and friends of the new college under many and lasting obligations.

From the Work.

RAYNE AND PLAQUEMINE BRULEE CIRCUIT.

MR. EDITOR: Protracted revivals are over and we are harvesting in finances for awhile. This country (Acadia parish) is a nice country, and its crop is some later than cotton reaching market. The yield seems good, and the country will be nearer out of debt, perhaps, than for some time, if the farmers do not begin to feel rich over this year's success and go further in debt, trusting to another bountiful year. We have taken advantage of the present crop and are building two greatly needed churches; one at Loug Point and the other on Prairie Hayes, and enlarging the Plaquemine Brulee Church. This country is not only new as a parish, but in every sense. For years there have been a few English-speaking communities, but most of this vast prairie has been inhabited by Creoles, but is now being rapidly settled by our people. There are German communities, most of whom are Catholics. I find myself the only pastor of our church in this parish, my presiding elder excepted. We should have for this circuit two good preachers another year and about $200 missionary aid. And for the parish outside of this circuit, two missionaries; one able to speak French, and the other German. Some people in this country tell me that these Creoles can not be reached by Protestants; but I am certain they can, for we have about twenty-five new converts from their ranks, and they are doing well. It takes good management—good generalship—to reach them successfully, and sometimes great and continued patience. Catholic priests are not active pastors, especially in the country, and Methodist ministers should ever be active in city and country. We must not persecute the Catholic faith, but teach the people the gospel of Christ, and thereby show the errors of popery. It is a tedious work, but it will pay, both in this world and the world to come. They have many superstitious notions. They have a great many days and ceremonies—many things to atone for sin and to help the unfortunate out of purgatory. In, at least, one community, it is said, that once every year they "shoot the devil." They can kill him, some seem to think, for twelve months, and then they have another "devil-shooting" and down him again. Brethren, let us set our hearts on this field of Romanism and secure it for Christ. We have had 139 persons to join the church this year, including a few by letter; and have had, I suppose, 150 conversions, and baptized 62 children. We have had some gracious times. The Lord has been very tender in his mercy and bountiful in his love. R. M. ULOCKER.

OCEAN SPRINGS, MISS.

MR. EDITOR: Though we have had no great revivals, we feel that there is improvement all along the line on Ocean Springs circuit. Those who are familiar with this seacoast will know what a difficult field it is. We need more laborers; we need men of experience.

Work has been begun on our church at Handsboro, and we hope to see it completed by Conference.

In a former letter I gave you a short account of the condition of this work, and specially of our church at Biloxi.

While our Mission Board is spending its thousands in Mexico, which is right and proper, would it not be well for them to take a look at this Mississippi seacoast? Here we have Mexico at our very door.

Biloxi, with its 4,500 or 5,000 souls, has a Catholic population of over 1,200, while we number less than fifty; but this state of affairs will continue so long as it is in a circuit where it only has the pastor's presence one Sunday in each month.

I succeeded in getting our District Conference to pass a resolution appealing to the Annual Conference to make it a mission station; for unless this is done, we can never expect to accomplish anything there.

Brethren of the Mission Board of the Mississippi Conference, when you make your appropriations at the coming session, cast your eyes on this place, and give it enough to support a live, earnest worker; and in two years you will have a self-supporting station which any preacher in the Conference would be glad to serve.

Fraternally,

JAS. G. GALLOWAY.

BUENA VISTA CIRCUIT, NORTH MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.

MR. EDITOR: With feelings of profound gratitude to the Giver of all good, I report decided improvement on the Buena Vista circuit. At Asbury we had five conversions, and the church greatly strengthened. Was forced to a premature close, with many at the altar. Otherwise the result would have been much greater. Considerable awakening in the church at Concord, and six conversions. At this point (Buena Vista) our little town was moved from center to circumference. Christians of all denominations "rejoiced with exceeding great joy," and eighteen souls were made "new creatures in Christ Jesus." I looked anxiously for promised help, but the expected assistance did not come; nor could ministerial aid be obtained from any quarter. But, best of all, the Lord was with us. The people lost sight of the evangelist, and looked directly to God, and the Lord did not disappoint the expectations of his people. Never before in the history of this people has there been such a signal failure in the cotton crop. Many will not make "rents," while the merchant will not collect more than ten per cent. on investment; ten to fifteen acres to the bale is distressing. Yet, notwithstanding all this, our people are building our new church; supplying the necessary outfit for others; repairing the parsonage; meeting some personal obligations incurred in the past, and responding, in many instances, with commendable liberality to the Conference collections. Soon after the close of the Buena Vista meeting, I was presented with a purse and handsome suit. I appreciate exceedingly this unmerited expression of fraternal regard, and herein express my unfeigned gratitude for same.

The Real End of the School.

The great question concerning th schools is a very simple one: Wha effect has the institution upon it pupils? What sort of men and wome does it make out of them? The stand ard so far has been too material. W want now something more spiritual It is a truism to say that the function o the school is not to instruct, but t educate; but it is a truism which ha not yet been taken sufficiently to hear to be translated into a fact. Struck b the manifest inadequacy of the ordi nary school in preparing boys to mee the problems of life, a somewhat vehe ment reformer has declared that America has succeeded, not because of her public school system, but in spite of it. The exaggeration is evi dent. There are many, however, who can not help feeling that as a moral force the modern school, whether public or private, has been scarcely less than impotent. It has given itself up to the business of instruction, and has found little or no time for the infinitely more important work of development. The whole force of the school should be devoted to the one supreme issue—the boy himself. If while you are making a man, you can also make a scholar, it will be well; but look to the man first.—Popular Science Monthly.

LESSON VI.—November 10.

DAVID'S GRIEF FOR ABSALOM.

II. Sam. xviii, 18 33.

GOLDEN TEXT.—A foolish son is a grief to his father, and bitterness to her that bare him.—Prov. xvii, 25.

TIME.—B. C. 1023.

PLACES.—Mahanaim (camps or double camp), Wood of Ephraim.

18. In the king's dale—The king's valley, which received its name from the event narrated in Gen. xiv, 17, was two stadia from Jerusalem, according to Josephus. It was the eastern side of Jerusalem, in the Kedron valley; though Absalom's pillar, which ecclesiastical tradition has transferred hither—a monument about forty feet in height and pointed like a pyramid—is not of early Hebrew, but of Grecian origin. I have no son—The three sons mentioned (chap. xiv, 27) seem to have died in childhood, and their names were never registered. Unto this day—That is, at the time of the writer the pillar was yet standing and its history known.

19. Ahimaaz—The son of Zadok, who, with Jonathan, had brought to David the information concerning Absalom's design, and had remained in the army.

20. Because the king's son is dead—Because he knew that David, notwithstanding the victory, would be deeply moved at the news of Absalom's death. Those who follow the cethib render the passage, For you would have to give tidings about the king's son being dead.

21. Cushi—Should be translated Cushite or Ethiopian. Joab was willing to expose this stranger and slave to the chance of David's anger. We must not confound the Cush of Psalm vii, inscription, with this man. The form of the name rather favors the view that would suggest the idea of a Moorish slave in the service of Joab.

22. My son—An address of affectionate tenderness. Thou hast no tidings ready. A difficult phrase. The simplest and most literal translation is: "Since to thee there are no tidings sufficing:" the Cushite has taken all the news I have to send, and there is none left, none forthcoming for thee to carry. Thenius alters the text after the Septuagint, and renders: "There is to thee no message leading to profit."

23. By the way of the plain—He seems to have understood the routes better than Cushi, and also to have been a swifter runner. What plain is here intended is not clear. If the Jordan valley is meant, then the wood of Ephraim must have been somewhere near the river.

24. Between the two gates—The two gates are the outer and inner gate of the fortified city wall, between which there was a small court, where David was sitting. The gates and gateways of Eastern cities anciently held, and still hold, an important part not only in the defense, but in the public economy of the place. They were used as places of public resort, either for business or where people sat to converse and hear news; as places for public deliberation, administration of justice, or of audience for kings and rulers, or embassadors. They contained chambers over the gateway, and probably also chambers or recesses at the sides for the various purposes to which they were applied. The watchman—The watchman then went up to the roof of the gate by the wall, probably the outer gate in the city wall, and as he looked he saw a man running alone.

25. If he be alone—David concluded that if his army had been beaten, the highways would have been crowded with fugitives.

26. Another man running—This was the Cushite, probably an Ethiopian slave.

27. Like the running of Ahimaaz—In the East, professional runners attend upon every prince, and accompany every army to bear messages. They are young men of great speed and endurance, having been known to run a hundred miles in a single day. The well-trained eye of the watchman had probably discerned the messenger at a great distance, in what to a common eye would have been a confused and almost invisible speck. Now, as he approached nearer, he recognized the running of Ahimaaz. There is a great deal of individuality in running; and practiced foot-racers are known and recognized at a distance by their gait, as Ahimaaz was. He is a good man—One of the most valuable and cheering of all the tidings David ever received was borne by this messenger, and this fact made Ahimaaz to be loved by him. Good tidings—The king rightly judged that Joab would not choose a distinguished messenger like Ahimaaz to carry bad news.

28. Hath delivered up the men—The Lord hath shut up (the ground meaning of the verb is to be retained) thy enemies—that is, the Lord hath set bounds to thy enemies in their revolt, has surrounded and embraced them with his power so that they can no longer stir.

29. Is the young man Absalom safe—Not only the question itself, but the very terms of it, breathe the tenderness of David's feelings. Absalom is "the youth," as if his youth were a full excuse for his conduct. I saw a great tumult—He knew the king's son was dead, for Joab had told him; but, knowing the tenderness of David for Absalom, he would not be the herald of sad news to him. Josephus states that Ahimaaz obtained leave of Joab to run to David, by assuring him that he would relate only the victory of his army, and not the death of Absalom.

30. Turned aside, and stood still—After his long and toilsome race we might suppose he would need to sit or lie down to rest. But etiquette would not allow that in the king's presence. So Ahimaaz patiently stood.

32. Be as that young man is—The Ethiopian slave then comes, tells the same news, bears the same question; and, with no touch of reverence for the father's sorrow, nakedly blurts out, as if he were the bearer of good news, that which filled up the measure of David's woe.

33. Much moved—Better, perhaps, "sore troubled."

Missionary.

Every Christian a Missionary.

BY TRYON EDWARDS, D. D.

In that wonderful prayer of our Savior, in the seventeenth chapter of St. John, he says, "As thou, Father, hast sent me into the world, even so have I also sent them" (i. e., "my disciples") "into the world." And the Greek word which he twice uses, is the word from which comes our English word "apostle," or "missionary;" as when Paul is spoken of as an apostle or missionary to the Gentiles, or Eliot or Brainard as an apostle or missionary to the Indians. So that what Christ really says is, "As thou, Father, hast sent me to be a missionary on earth, so have I also sent you, my disciples and followers, every one of you, to be a missionary on earth;" to be everywhere spreading my truth, and to be pointing men, as I would point them, both by precept and example, to the way of duty and to heaven.

Every Christian a missionary—a missionary appointed by Christ, and for Christ—to and for the world. This is the great thought and duty set forth and impressed by the words of the Savior. We know well what a devoted and faithful missionary should be, and what all expect him to be: and just this is what Christ calls every one of us, his disciples, to be; to cherish the same spirit, engage in the same work, and aim continually at the same great ends. As he said of himself, "For this cause came I into the world, that I should bear witness to the truth," so he sends every one of his disciples into the world to bear the same witness, as missionaries of the Cross, to point mankind to himself as the only and all-sufficient Savior.

Do you ask, How shall I do this?—how be a missionary? and how do a missionary's work? In several ways you may do it, and as the aim and habit of your life, you should be doing it—

1. By giving yourself to the Lord; repenting of sin, believing on Christ, receiving his truth, obeying his will, cherishing his spirit, and being devoted in heart and life to his service. As Paul says of the Macedonian Christians, that they "first gave their own selves to the Lord," and then to his work, "according to the will of God," so you are to do; first, be yourself a faithful, spiritual Christian, as you expect the devoted missionary to be, and then, like him, let your life be filled out with truly missionary work. Be a missionary also.

2. By speaking for Christ. "A word fitly spoken, and in due season, how good it is; it is like apples of gold in a network of silver." And often, and wisely, like a faithful missionary, you may speak for Christ. Of the early disciples we read that "they went every where preaching the Word"—telling the good news of salvation to others—and when one who had been healed by Christ entreated that he might be continually with him, "Jesus," we are told, "suffered him not, but said to him, Go home to thy friends, and tell them how great things the Lord hath done for thee, and had compassion on thee." And at once, we find, he went, and began, through ten cities, to tell "how great things Jesus had done for him, so that all did marvel," and many, doubtless, were led, through his words, to the Savior. Many whom you know, or may meet, may be longing for a word on this, the most important of all subjects, and that word you may be able to speak, to encourage, and cheer, and help, and to lead them to Christ as their Savior. Watch for opportunities and they will open before you. Pray for the divine blessing on your words, and it will be given. Ever be ready to speak for Christ, and you will be the means of leading others to him. Like Harlan Page, who was thus the means of the conversion of more than a hundred persons, so you shall have souls as seals of your faithfulness and crowns of your rejoicing in the last great day. Be a missionary, once more—

3. By living for Christ. Example is better than profession, and more impressive than precept. A consistent, holy, heavenly life is more eloquent than words. You can not always be speaking for Christ, but by the grace of God, you can always be living for him. It was from the conduct, the bold fidelity of Peter and John, that the rulers "took knowledge of them that they had been with Jesus." And when one, about to unite with the church, was asked, "Under whose preaching she was converted," her reply was, "Under nobody's preaching; it was under Aunt Mary's living." Lord Peterborough, after having been some time with the excellent Fenelon, referring to his holy example, said, "I shall become a Christian in spite of myself." And said one, now an eminent minister of the gospel, "I could put away appeal, and reply plausibly to argument, but I never could get over the faithful Christian life of my father; it gave me no rest until I gave myself to the Savior." Justin Martyr tells us "that he was led from philosophy to religion by the godly lives of the early Christians." And when the native converts of Madagascar, on presenting themselves for baptism, were asked, "What first led you to think of becoming Christians? Was it some sermon, or address, or the reading of God's Word?" the answer usually was, "It was the changed conduct of those who had become Christians." And if you so let your light shine that others may see your good works, they will be led to acknowledge, and love and serve, and glorify your Father who is in heaven.

Oh! if every Christian would but remember that as Christ came to be a missionary on earth, so he has sent every one of his followers all to be missionaries on earth, and if they would but faithfully and prayerfully endeavor to live as such, what a revolution it would make, in our persons, and families, and churches, and in the entire community! And would not the blessed result be that the wide world would soon be rodeemed, and Christ's kingdom come in power, and his will be done on earth as it is in heaven!—Quiver.

Indian Mission.

MR. EDITOR: I have three more names to add to my Indian Mission list. Judge A. H. Meyers, Brandon station, Miss., gives five dollars for one year, and more to follow. Rev. B. S. Rayner, of the Mississippi Conference, McComb City, Miss., gives five, and more to follow. And last, but not least, Miss Maggie Lee Hawkins, of Hattiesburg, Miss., a little girl, sends me five dollars to assist in this great work.

May God abundantly bless them all! And now, if the little girls will follow Miss Maggie Lee's example, we will soon get all we will need. They may not all be able to pay $5; but I will be thankful for one or two. Remember the widow's mite.

I have thirty names on my list now. Who will be the next? I want to get up enough by the meeting of our Annual Conference (Mississippi) to secure the services of a missionary, so that we can put him to work early next year. I have been corresponding with some of our preachers in the Indian Territory with a view of securing the services of a Choctaw preacher for the work, and they think we can get a good one.

Now, we want the money at once. Please let the names and amounts come at once. Remember, it is only about two and a half months till the meeting of the Conference; and if you don't mind, you will let the time pass, and the poor Indians will starve for the bread of life. How much money lying idle to-day that ought to be started out on a mission of love and salvation!

Brother, sister, and sweet little girls and boys, please sit down this very moment and send me your name and amount. And I want to ask a special interest in the prayers of all God's people for this great work.

Hearty!

The laborious and expensive efforts to establish a footing in popular regard, for a worthy commodity, are often indirectly supplemented by gratuitous testimony.

When the genuineness of such tribute can not be doubted, its influence exceeds in importance the costly repetitions of the most judicious advertising.

In the science and art department of the Harrisburg (Pa.) Church Advocate, April 11, 1888, may be found the following unsolicited endorsements of DRS. STARKEY & PALEN'S Compound Oxygen Treatment:

"In some experiments with ozone as a curative agent, an English lady, so far advanced in consumption that her case appeared hopeless, has been treated with inhalation of this gas, with results described as marvelous. After a month's treatment the appetite was regained, the sleep calm and refreshing, and there was a very good prospect of recovery. The ozone was prepared by passing a stream of Oxygen through the current of an induction coil, and was administered with atmospheric air in the proportion of 1 to 5. The experimenter has reached the conclusion that the ozone treatment is specially applicable to all germ diseases."

This instance needs no comment.

Send for the brochure of 200 pages, containing the history of Compound Oxygen. It will be forwarded free of charge to any one addressing DRS. STARKEY & PALEN, 1529 Arch St., Philadelphia, Pa.; or 120 Sutter street, San Francisco, Cal.

The Watchman says: "The more men have sought to discredit the Bible, the more does its Divine Author own it as his word and honor it as the medium of his gracious and victorious working."

Japan has suffered from great floods, as well as we, during this year. The news is that in twelve prefectures 2,419 people have been killed, and over 90,000 deprived of the means of subsistence. More than 50,000 houses have been destroyed and 6,000 bridges swept away, and hundreds of miles of road broken up.

The German government feels that the only way to preserve the peace is to continually strengthen the army. The Emperor, in his speech to the Reichstag recently, said that the foremost object is the consolidation of the defensive powers of the Fatherland, and he claimed the co-operation of that body in order to develop the efficiency of the army. He said: "Its readiness for action, in accordance with whatever circumstances may arise, will thereby impart to the efforts of the Emperor and his exalted allies for the preservation of peace the weight which is their due in the council of nations." The Emperor knows that no preparation is too great or costly that will preserve the peace of Europe. In this he is wise. A war in Europe now means tremendously more than it did fifty years ago, and its disastrous results, no matter which side should win, no man can tell. The motto of the Emperor seems to be, "Strengthen the army, and thus preserve the peace."

Quite a number of complaints have reached us about the failure of our paper to reach its destination. In some instances the whole bundle for one place has failed to come. During the last few months these complaints have been more frequent than ever before. We are sure the fault is with the mail lines somewhere, or with the postmasters somewhere. We mail so many papers every week and pay the postage and hold the receipts for postage. The mail service is under obligations to see that the mail reaches its destination, but it does not seem to feel that obligation to any great extent. We are trying to rectify the matter, but we can hardly be held responsible for inefficient mail service. Bro. Wanamaker's attention has been called to it, but he don't seem to do us any good. We assure our readers that each paper for each week is mailed and paid for, and we have repeatedly called the attention of the authorities here to these just complaints, and still they come. We will continue to do our best to get the paper to each subscriber as early after publication as possible.

The Hopefulness of Religion.

There are persons who regard religion as a negative thing, supposing that it merely saves its possessor from distress of mind by rolling off the burden of guilt. Well, if this were all, religion would still be "great gain," and the highest wisdom would be manifested in being religious. But such is only an approximate estimate of its worth. Religion is one of the most positive things with which men have to do. It is not only negative in saving from distress, but it is tremendously positive in the bestowment of blessings, supplying its possesser with an abundance of actual and positive enjoyment. Religion stands by a man's side and partly lifts the curtain from the future, and he catches glimpses of a glory to come, which inspire him with hopes of immortality. While that curtain is never fully lifted away in this life, it is never entirely let down again, so that the hopes inspired by that blessed vision remain as an anchor to the soul, holding it in communication with the life within the vail.

These hopes never fail, never disappoint. How different are the hopes of this life! They, too, picture the future in radiant hues, but how often the shadows of disappointment creep over their brightness and they go out in the blackness of despair! The invalid looks out through his chamber window at the calm hour of eve—the sun goes to rest on his couch of purple and gold—the birds send up their vespers in praise of providential care—all nature reposes trustingly in the arms of Almighty Goodness, and he hopes to see the morning when nature shall awake with a smile from its delightful slumber and send forth a matin in praise of God's love! But, alas! the morning sun rises upon a house in which there is a felt stillness—the curtains droop mournfully to shut out his glad beams—the inmates move about with muffled tread—the finger is on the boisterous lip—the haze of sorrow dims loving eyes—the agony of bereavement chokes the utterance, for the invalid lies upon his couch, covered with the white shroud of death—his hopes all gone out in the darkness!

The hopes of this world are so often delusive! Who can picture the bright hope that swells a fond mother's heart, when, after years of care and prayer and anxious days and sleepless nights, she looks through eyes of love upon a noble boy, whose young life is running over with promises of usefulness and honor? Oh, who can conceive the crushing anguish of that mother's soul, when with eyes blinded by tears, and heart staggering under the heavy blow of bereavement, she listens to the solemn words, "Earth to earth; ashes to ashes, dust to dust," uttered over that manly form? How cruelly deceptive are the hopes of this life! Based upon the desires of the carnal mind, when the desire fails of accomplishment, the hope fades to nothingness!

But the hopes of religion are steady and true. They change, but with every change the prospect brightens and broadens. They assume new attitudes and present new positions, but every such change enlarges the view and gives the soul more ravishing sights of the beauty beyond the bourne of time. These hopes are the friendly messengers Heaven sends out to accompany the weary pilgrim and cheer him on his journey to the home of the blest. They light up his pathway with a brightening, broadening radiance, and encourage his fainting heart, and freshen his faltering courage, and exhilarate his drooping spirits! No other man has such a hope as the Christian, and this hope is one of the most positive things of the Christian's experience, and it is one of the grandest bestowments of the Christian religion. Without it, the Christian would be the most miserable being in existence.

A New History.

Miss Annie M. Barnes, of Duluth, Ga., is engaged in writing a history of the work done by the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, among the slaves. This is a matter of some importance. It is not only an interesting subject in itself; but, if properly done, will show our church to the world in a light which the world has not yet seen. That a great work was done by our church among our former slaves is well known to intelligent Southern Methodists; but outsiders know very little of it. For their benefit, and to place our Methodism in its true light before this generation, Miss Barnes has undertaken the writing of the history of that work. But historians must not draw upon their imaginations. They must have facts, and Miss Barnes writes to us to know if some of our readers can not give her facts in regard to the work among the slaves in Mississippi and Louisiana. We suppose there are preachers in our Conferences who could do this. They are invited to communicate with Miss Annie M. Barnes, Duluth, Ga.

A Circular Letter.

To the Preachers of the Louisiana Conference—

Dear Brethren: As the Executive Board, created by you to have charge of church extension interests during the interval of your annual sessions, we feel impelled, by the circumstances of our position, to address to you the following circular letter:

No field in the whole church, if we except some of the newly occupied territory in the West, is so destitute of church-building accommodations as that which, as a Conference, we serve, and this conclusion helps us to others, which are equally patent and potent—viz.: (1) That no other religious community will derive profit from the church extension movement in the same ratio, and (2) that if we, as a church, hold Louisiana as the first occupant, it will be by force of superior effort in church building. The Church Extension Society, which is the greatest religious movement of modern times, and which is destined to settle finally the much-mooted question of church sovereignty, at least, in the United States, is above all other organized bodies our friend and ally in the work of reducing to peaceful possession and fruitful cultivation the goodly inheritance which is ours, and to be indifferent to its claims or to turn a deaf ear to its urgent calls, is not only to lose a golden opportunity, but to be unmindful of that providence, which, with more than the constancy of the star of western empire, has guided our infant church to its goal of sovereignty. To this reflection may we not add that a practical review of the workings of the society since it has been domiciled among us fully proves that its moral effect is to inspire, foster, and practically control the work of church building in the most needy and productive portions of our territory, so that it not only vitally helps us, but affords us such help at the points where we are at once the weakest and the strongest—the weakest in actual resources, the strongest in prospective resources—though it is at the same time urged that motives less politic than any of the above might be successfully appealed to in its behalf? It may now be considered an established conclusion that there is nothing which yields such abundant returns in men, money and territorial conquest as church building, whether by organized or unorganized methods, and of this fact the evangelism of our age and country is making full proof. Indeed, the Mission Boards of one or two leading denominations in the States of Louisiana and Mississippi seem to be organized mainly for aggressive work of this sort in the State of Louisiana, and of this fact you can not be uninterested witnesses. Shall we not use our own excellent machinery, not to counteract these movements, but to vindicate our slumbering rights, and to emulate noble examples which we can not afford to either regret or despise? As many as six beautiful and costly church edifices, at the most progressive centers on river and rail in our territory, will be completed this year through donations from the Church Extension Board. As there will be many petitions for help at the ensuing session of our Conference, and some of these of a very urgent nature, and as there is no interest of our common cause which is not promoted by this fund, may we not depend on you to take up your collections for church extension in full; or, if already taken and deficient, to duplicate them either by private or public effort, so that the full assessment to the various charges may be reported at Conference?

Letter from Dr. C. G. Andrews.

MR. EDITOR: We have received very many letters from brethren and friends since the death of our precious son, Oscar. Will you allow me to express for myself and my stricken family our grateful appreciation of their tender sympathy? If kind attention and manifested sorrow could banish grief, then would our crushed spirits have been relieved. Indeed, we have received much benefit from the consolation they have offered and from the beautiful words of faith and hope which they have expressed.

Oscar was teaching a four months' school near Meridian, and came home on the Friday before the expiration of his last week to see his mother and sisters who had, on that day, returned from their stay at the Seashore Camp Ground. He felt unwell on Saturday and also on Sunday, but went to church. He insisted on returning to his school on Monday, but we persuaded him to wait. A slow fever continued, in which his heart became involved. His fever was never very high; it seemed gradually, but slowly to yield to treatment, and in about two weeks it left him altogether. He suffered greatly from paroxyms of pain in the region of his heart, but these seemed to be brought under control. On the morning of Saturday, October 12, his skillful and attentive physician pronounced all his symptoms better—no fever at all, and the action of his heart much better. We thankfully looked forward to a speedy recovery. But, alas! alas! a violent paroxysm came on about noon, and at about 2:30 P. M. the precious heart forever ceased its throbbings. Oh, what utter desolation came upon our happy family when we saw him breathe his last! He was so bright and manly, so helpful and buoyant, so necessary to all our plans; how could we realize that he was gone? We were to have been all together this winter: he had been chosen professor of Latin and Greek in the State business college here, and intended in addition to pursue the study of the law.

He was always in advance of his years in intellectual development, in assuming responsibility, and in discharging duty. He joined the church on his motion while he was yet a child; was graduated bachelor of arts in Centenary College, of Louisiana, before he was seventeen years old, and immediately engaged in business, and afterwards in teaching. The high esteem in which he was held by those for whom he recently taught, is most grateful to our feelings. They speak of him as an efficient teacher, a true gentleman, an exemplary working Christian.

We recall many things connected with his life recently, which seem as if the blessed Master was preparing him for his change. His letters during the past summer showed a tenderness and an increasing appreciation of the duties of life. In a conversation with a young friend, just before his sickness, he said: "How strange it is that people neglect preparation for death! I am going to try harder than ever to be ready." At his own suggestion he opened his school daily with reading the Scriptures and with prayer. On several occasions, when requested to do so, he led the weekly prayer meeting held in the house where he taught school. One kind gentleman, with a definiteness peculiarly comforting, said that, on Saturday night before the fourth Sunday in August, he heard him make a most instructive talk upon the Scripture lesson he used in prayer meeting. He was only nineteen years, three months and three days old on the day he died. A short career! Oh, so short! Yet, thank God, it is for us a comforting and a beautiful one.

C. G. ANDREWS.

Among the Papers.

The Congregationalist brings to view a point which all Christians ought to remember:

No fact is more painful, and at times it seems as if none occurs more often, than the collapse of apparently strong characters, the failure of trusted men in the very respects in which they have been believed most impregnable. To take a familiar instance, the treasurers who prove defalcators almost invariably are men in whose financial integrity and ability alike there has been implicit trust, and with good reason. Peter affords an equally apt illustration. For fidelity to Jesus Christ, affectionate, enthusiastic, uncalculating fidelity, he had been conspicuous, even in the devoted brotherhood of the twelve. But it was in this very particular that he was proved deficient in the high priest's house after Jesus had been arrested.

We all are in danger of failing where we are believed, and perhaps believe ourselves, to be strong and secure. Probably one reason is our very confidence in our security.

The simple truth is, that any temptation may be too seductive for any one of us, except as we are upheld by divine aid. We may be, as we suppose ourselves, relatively stronger to resist some sins than others, but, absolutely, we are too weak of ourselves to conquer any of them. Here is another, and a more important, reason for our failures. We forget to depend upon the Holy Spirit. We try to overcome in our own strength alone.

Is not the moral plain? We can be strong, even in our naturally strongest points of character, only as we remember that of ourselves we can do nothing, and that all our sufficiency is of God.

Many of our older preachers and members have frequently called attention to the difference between conversions now and fifty years ago. Bearing upon this point, we quote the following from the Watchman:

"The speakers try to make the gospel invitation very plain," says the McAll Record, speaking of the evangelical work carried on in the neighborhood of the Exposition, "but those who are quite unaware that they are sinners naturally do not feel that they need a Savior. This absence of conscience is a great obstacle to work here. Most of the people think that they have almost nothing against them, and that they have a right to all God's gifts and to heaven, too."

This state of mind is almost as common in this country as in France. "Conviction of sin" is becoming rare in connection with "conversions." A conversion, however credible and however attested by a subsequent religious life, when marked by such superficial spirituality will be followed by a pitiable spiritual inefficiency. A heart-searching repentance is the necessary preparation for a lively and strong faith, with its abundant fruits. Churches have need to seek for themselves and for the people the working of the Spirit whose office it is to convince of sin and of righteousness.

Notes.

Rev. Phillips Brooks says: "The missionary is the noblest member of the noblest occupation, the noblest doer of the noblest work that has ever been committed to human hearts and hands."

What is the matter with the jury system? In the Cronin case, in Chicago, the impanelling of the jury began August 30, and was completed October 22. One thousand and ninety-one jurors were summoned, of whom 927 were excused for cause. One hundred and seventy-five peremptory challenges were used, the defense using ninety-seven. The idea of consuming seven weeks' time to get a jury shows that there is something wrong in the working of the jury system.

There seems to have been one level-headed Bishop in the Episcopal Convention, recently held in New York City. Bishop Johnson, of Western Texas, the papers report as having hurled a bomb into the convention by declaring that they had something better to do than "tinkering with canons and patching prayer-books." He said: "What the Episcopal Church needs is a revival of true and undefiled religion. I would to God that this church had life enough to produce another John Wesley."

On church conservatism the New York Herald has this:

A profound and marvelous conservatism pervades that church and all churches, and, in our judgment, it is the marvel of the age. There is, speaking broadly, no religious radicalism in this generation. In all secular matters the people are more than brave, they are sometimes rash; but in spiritual concerns the genius of America holds fast to the faith of the fathers, which time has not dimmed, nor the passing centuries marred.

And perhaps it is well for us, as a nation, that it is so.

Mr. Powderly, the head of the Knights of Labor, speaks thus on an important subject:

I believe in Sunday rest. So do the Knights of Labor. I believe the time will come when enough can be done in five days to give the laboring man two days in the week—one for God and one for humanity. What have these saloons ever done for humanity? How many souls have they saved? How many people have they clothed, except the saloon keeper's family? When we have a strike the saloon keeper often contributes more than the dry-goods man, but he robs them of more. I never knew one of them to give a cent that he did not expect a dollar in return for.

The Richmond Advocate, speaking of the annual review at Conference, says:

If Jesus should come to the chair of the Conference, the hardest worker and saintliest man would turn aside and weep for his sins and sluggishness, before finding voice and courage to go over, in words, the work of the year. What searching of hearts, what high and stern resolves! The ambition would be to wash each other's feet. How tense and luminous the air with ascending and descending messages of mercy and supplication! How slow to speak and with what diffident yet weighty words.

That he will be there we have no doubt! Let every preacher remember that!

Here is a note from the Alabama Advocate, which we commend to the Methodists in Mississippi and Louisiana:

The pastoral charge that will allow its pastor and his family to live in an old dilapidated parsonage, unceiled and only half covered, does not deserve a pastor. We know of some such parsonage in Alabama, and we shudder as we think of the approaching winter and the suffering that must be endured by the families of many of our preachers. Brethren, go to work and make the home of your preacher comfortable before the white icy whips of the winter's tempest begin to howl through the open cracks of the house, where lives the man who is your pastor. "Woe unto them that live in ceiled houses," while the neglected parsonage stands open to every attack of the winter's blast!

The St. Louis Christian Advocate has this:

A new style of elocution is being introduced and practiced by some. It is not laid down in any of the books we have seen, nor is it as yet generally practiced: but we have of late heard specimens of it at several different times and on different occasions. Its leading characteristic is to commence a sentence in a loud voice, almost a scream, then end the same sentence in a whisper. This is either an affectation or a mistaken idea of giving force to what is said. But what force is there to that which is not heard? And it often happens the force of the whole sentence is lost for lack of the whispered word. Have done with all such practices.

We once heard Dr. Cuyler preach, and his first sentence began with a sudden explosion and ended in a lingering whisper! It was such a curious beginning that we did not get over its effect during the whole sermon.

Personal and Otherwise.

The "D. D." appended to some men's names is translated "Delightful Diner."

About once n year the Interior publishes an article, from "A Methodist," on the decline of some feature of Methodism, and yet "each rolling year" reveals the fact that the most vigorous body of Christians on this planet is "the people called Methodists." It is no use to "curse whom God has blest."

At the Paris Exhibition there were 35,000 exhibitors, and 33,000 of them got awards.

The Bible and Training-school for Christian Workers has been located, by the Woman's Board of Missions, in Kansas City.

Sam Jones is advertised to begin meetings at Greenville, Miss., November 1; Meridian, November 10; Vicksburg, November 20.

Bunyan's "Pilgrim's Progress" has been translated into eighty-four distinct languages, the last being the Abyssinian.

Our paper is published on Thursday of each week, and if some of our subscribers do not get it before Friday, they ought not to complain. The day after publication ought to satisfy any reasonable person.

Rev. H. M. Dubose is now editor of the Los Angeles Christian Advocate. We wish him great success.

Rev. J. A. Lyons, who has labored so long and faithfully on our Sunday-school literature, has been stationed in Centenary Church, Knoxville, Tenn.

The editor spent another pleasant Sunday at Baton Rouge this past week. Bro. Parker is now in a fair way of recovery and is diligently preparing for the coming Conference.

Special attention is called to Bro. Mellen's notice in another column. It is the preacher's duty to give the information desired; and if he does not do it, the Board of Finance can do its work neither intelligently nor justly.

Baton Rouge Conference, 1889.

ATTENTION, PRESIDING ELDERS!

Please inform me at once—

1. What appleants are coming from your district with a view to joining the Conference?

2. What local preachers are coming to be ordained?

3. What laymen are coming as representatives?

4. If anybody's wife is coming to Conference, I must know at once.

This is very important. If ample provisions are not made for the entertainment of all these classes of visitors, the blame will be on the presiding elders and husbands. To entertain these people I must know who and how many are to be cared for.

Very truly, your brother,

J. A. PARKER.

To the Members of the Mississippi Conference.

Dear Brethren: As a member of the Joint Board of Finance, I would remind you of the necessity and importance of furnishing the Board with written information about the claimants residing within your respective charges. See the claimant in person and get a correct statement as to age, health, income, property, number in the family; age, sex, health, etc., of the members of the family. Be particular as to information, its exactness and correctness. State facts and let the Joint Board draw conclusions and distribute the funds "according to their (Joint Board's) best judgment of their (the claimants') several necessities." (Dis. 1886, ¶ 164.)

—Rev. William Wimberly writes from Plaquemine, La.: "Last Tuesday night we closed one of the most interesting meetings ever held in Plaquemine. We have received more members in other meetings, but there has never been such deep spiritual work accomplished as was done in these meetings. Such congregations have never been gathered in a Protestant Church in this sin-cursed town as were seen at every service, night and day, for two weeks, during our recent meeting. The Presbyterians of the town and some Episcopalians cooperated with us in saving souls, and God poured his Spirit out upon us, and we worked together for the honor and glory of our common Lord. Some backsliders were reclaimed, several sinners were converted, and the church quickened and buoyed up to a higher standard of Christian living. We had eight applications for membership; all adults except one. Rev. A. D. McVoy, Jr., of Natchitoches, was with us from the first to the last service. He did faithful and efficient work for God and the church during his two weeks' stay among us. Bro. Henry was with us at the last four meetings and gave us three good sermons. Bro. Henry stands high among the people in more ways than one. God bless both of these young preachers!"

—Rev. H. P. Lewis writes: "Last Sunday, twentieth instant, was a great day with us on Baton circuit. Rev. J. W. McLaurin, agent for the American Bible Society, in Mississippi and Louisiana, was with us here in Benton; made a good missionary and Bible talk at eleven A. M; took up a collection for the Bible cause, got $69; preached an able sermon at night from, 'We know we have passed from death unto life.' The subject was well handled, and the sermon was well received by the people. Bro. J. M. Pugh, of Franklin, La., who has been helping me in a meeting in Benton for a week, preached at Midway, Sunday, to a good, attentive congregation. We have a very fine Sunday-school at Midway, with Dr. Caruthers as superintendent. The Doctor is one of our many new members who bids fair to be useful in the church. Our Sunday-schools are all doing well. What we need most now is a little more thorough consecration to God and his cause. Pray for us."

Mrs. Jones has n't a gray hair in her head and is over 50. She looks as young as her daughter. The secret of it is, that she uses only Hall's Hair Renewer.

A. A. Woods & Co.

It gives us pleasure to call attention to the advertisement of Messrs. A. A. Woods & Company, which appears on the seventh page of this paper. The location of their office is changed to that prominent business stand, corner of Carondelet and Gravier streets, immediately opposite the grand business room of the Cotton Exchange. This firm of A. A. Woods & Company are among the first insurance men of New Orleans. Mr. A. A. Woods, the senior member, is a gentleman of high repute, and is known as a Christian of integrity and fairness. Mr. Allen F. Godat is deservedly much esteemed both in religious and business circles for his faithfulness in all he undertakes. Mr. Walter Scott is an experienced accountant, and is a gentleman of recognized worth and ability, as is also Mr. L. H. Poursine; among the commercial community especially the latter gentleman is known to be first class.

"The Man of Galilee," by Attieus G. Haygood, cuts the ground from Ingersoll and his sort; answers "Robert Elsmere," without naming the book. It spikes the infidel guns.

Dr. Fitzgerald says: "If anyone has been bitten by the serpent of modern infidelity, let him read this book. It is a settler."

Bishop Granbery, in Nashville Advocate, says: "It drew me on from beginning to end. I read it at a sitting."

New York Independent: "Like the links of a chain; there is no escape from the whole, and no breaking through any one."

Dr. Carter says, in NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE: "We have read all the books about Christ we could get hold of; to us this is the most satisfactory of them all. It is the smallest in size of them all, and the greatest of them all in quality."

The New York Critic: "We have read many lives of Christ, but nothing quite so wholesome, helpful and convincing as this."

Taber, who is recognized as one of the foremost of Florida's horticulturists. Mr. Taber is chairman of the Florida State Committee on General Fruits for the American Pomeological Society, and his Nursery Catalogue should be in the hands of all who are interested in fruits adapted to Florida and the Atlantic and Gulf Coast Regions of the South Atlantic States.

MANY A LIFE

HAS been saved by the prompt use of Ayer's Pills. Travelers by land or sea are liable to constipation or other derangements of the stomach and bowels which, if neglected, lead to serious and often fatal consequences. The most sure means of correcting these evils is the use of Ayer's Cathartic Pills. The prudent sailing-master would as soon go to sea without his chronometer as without a supply of these Pills. Though prompt and energetic in operation, Ayer's Pills leave no ill effects; they are purely vegetable and sugar-coated; the safest medicine for old and young, at home or abroad.

"For eight years I was afflicted with constipation, which at last became so bad that the doctors could do no more for me. Then I began to take Ayer's Pills, and soon the bowels recovered their natural and regular action, so that now I am in health."—Mrs. C. E. Clark, Tewksbury, Massachusetts.

"I regard Ayer's Pills as one of the most reliable general remedies of our times. They have been in use in my family for affections requiring a purgative, and have given unvarying satisfaction. We have found them an excellent remedy for colds and light fevers."—W. E. Woodson, Fort Worth, Texas.

"For several years I have relied more upon Ayer's Pills than upon anything else in the medicine chest, to regulate my bowels and those of the ship's crew. These Pills are not severe in their action, but do their work thoroughly. I have used them with good effect for the cure of rheumatism, kidney troubles, and dyspepsia."—Capt. Mueller, Steamship Felicia, New York City.

"I have found Ayer's Cathartic Pills to be a better family medicine for common use than any other pills within my knowledge. They are not only very effective, but safe and pleasant to take—qualities which must make them valued by the public."—Jules Hattel, Perfumer, Philadelphia, Pa.

Sufferers are not generally aware that these diseases are contagious, or that they are due to the presence of living parasites in the lining membrane of the nose and eustachian tubes. Microscopic research, however, has proved this to be a fact, and the result of this discovery is that a simple remedy has been discovered which permanently cures the most aggravated cases of these distressing diseases by a few simple applications made (two weeks apart) by the patient at home. LITTLE BY LITTLE.

Step by step the Alpine climber
Presses upward sure and slow,
Till his feet are firmly planted
In the realms of endless snow.

Blow on blow the sculptor fashions
Roughness into symmetry,
Till the dark rock gleams with brightness
In its new-born majesty.

Touch by touch the picture groweth
Into beauty, life and light,
Till a wondrous revelation
Bursts upon the raptured sight.

Stroke by stroke the clock aye ringeth
Welcomes to eternity,
Adding warning unto warning
To the heart in me and thee.

Word by word the book is written
With its tale of woe or weal,
Till the throbbing thoughts like music
Through the trembling spirit steal.

Wave on wave the wild tide creepeth
Farther on and up the shore,
Till the stranded boats are floating
Free and buoyant as of yore.

Such is life in all its phases,
Little things make up the great;
Therefore scorn them not, but make them
Stepping-stones to heaven's gate.

Ditty-Bag Stories.

About the year 1850 I was on one of our East India ships bound from Boston to Calcutta. We arrived off the Cape of Good Hope with fair weather to that point, but every one was on the lookout now for a blow from some quarter.

The previous evening one of the lookouts during the midwatch had insisted he had seen the Flying Dutchman, and every one knows that when that is the case a blow or bad weather in some shape is sure to come. And come it did with a vengeance, for the very next night the wind died down to a calm, then suddenly jumped out from the nor'west butt-end first.

Six of the old tars went tumbling up the weather main-rigging, and were urged on by the gruff voice of the second mate, a thorough old sea-dog, who sang out, "Come, bear a hand there, you lubbers, and get on deck again!" And on deck they were again sooner than he or the men expected; for just as they showed their heads over the "top" a deep sepulchral voice called out "Blows hard, Jack!" They were staggered, and for an instant hesitated, when again the fearful voice repeated, "Blows hard, Jack." That was enough; their superstitious fears overcame them, and they did not stop till the deck was reached.

By this time the captain and mate were on deck, and were astonished to see six of the best men on the ship come tumbling down, while the main-top-gallant sail and royal were slatting in the buntlines as though they would blow away at every flap.

"What's the matter? Why didn't you furl those sails?" said the captain.

"Matter enough," said an old salt. "You don't get me in that main-top to-night. I wouldn't give much for anyone who goes up, either, for I not only saw the ghost, or whatever it is, but heard him talk."

This was too much for the old skipper. The idea of losing all his sails because there was a ghost in the main-top was too much for him, so he called for volunteers, and started up the rigging, followed by his two mates only. Not another man would go. Those who had been up had seen and heard enough, and those who hadn't did not care to risk it.

Well, the old skipper and his mates fared no better than the men, for hardly had their heads reached over the "top rim" than, in the same awful, blood-curdling tones came to their ears the words, "Blows hard, Jack!" and there, right in the "dublins" of the mast, the captain caught sight of two glaring eyes, and a long white arm reached down as if to clutch him, and down they all scampered to the deck as fast as their legs would take them.

About daylight the steward discovered that a pet parrot belonging to the skipper had escaped from his cage and was gone, probably blown overboard and lost in the gale. Polly had, however, by hard work, managed to alight in the main-top, where she had stowed herself in the "dublins" of the mast, and was holding on for dear life until she was rescued in the morning.

The main top-gallant studding-sail was lashed in the weather top-mast rigging, and the clew had blown adrift, and happened to flop down at the captain as he went over the "top" in the black darkness, and so was easily magnified into a ghostly arm, and Polly into the frightful ghost.—Harper's Young People.

Choosing an Occupation.

A boy is too apt to be influenced in his life-work by some accident or petty motive. His father and grandfather have been successful physicians, or manufacturers, or butchers, and it seems natural and right for him to follow in their footsteps. Or his intimate friend at college is going to study law, and he must do the same.

Sometimes a pious father and mother cherish a fond hope that the boy will devote his life to preaching the gospel, and, rather than disappoint them, he does it, with no fitness nor zeal for the work.

In each case the lad's life is a failure for the want of a little deliberation and a careful examination of his natural abilities.

Don't be in a hurry, boys. Do not let an accident decide for you. Do not choose an occupation because it is more "genteel" than others. It is the man who gives character and dignity to his occupation, not his clothes.

Do not think because you were rated dull at school, that there is no honorable place for you in the world. There are talents and powers that do not deal with books. God sends no man into the world without providing an occupation for him in which he may earn respect. You have yours.

But take care that the work is that for which the tool is fitted. The mere fact that the work seems pleasant and attractive to you does not prove that it is fitted for your faculties. You may be ambitious, but you can not climb a ladder without feet and hands.

Learn the strength of your feet and hands, find the right ladder, and then trust only in God and to yourself to make your way up.—Exchange.

MR. EDITOR: I am a little girl; was eleven years old the first of last month. I live in Sardis, Miss. My papa takes your paper. I love to read it, and especially the little letters. I go to Sunday-school. We are all very much pleased with our good pastor, Bro. Ritchey. We have a band of boys and girls, called, Little Workers; it was organized several years ago by my aunt, Mrs. Wright. We all meet at her house the first Sunday in every month. We are working now for an Indian girl; she has no mamma nor papa, and we are going to educate her. We made enough money and bought a library, and gave it to the Sunday-school. I love to go to school; have five studies: arithmetic, history, geography, grammar, and fifth reader. But I have recently been sick, and missed several days from school. I have a sweet teacher; her name is Miss Pearl Carden, and she is just as nice to us as she can be. I will answer Edna's question. The word "soap" is found twice in the Bible: in Jer. ii, 22, and Mal. iii, 2. But I would like to ask a question at the close of my letter: Where in the Bible is the sentence, "Is there any taste in the white of an egg?" Mr. Editor, my grandmamma is now in your city; and if you should publish my little letter, it would be a pleasant surprise to her and all of the home folks, for they don't know that I have written this. Wishing you much success with the dear old ADVOCATE, I am,

Your little friend,

Home Ideals.

A stranger entering for the first time a home, consciously or unconsciously, gauges the ideal of family life by the external evidences of culture and refinement. These may reveal themselves in many ways, but most conclusively, perhaps, in the pictures on the walls, the books on the table, and the dining-table with its appointments and service. To our girls, then, with whom more than they sometimes realize rests the moulding of the home, I would say, "See that the inner beauty of the home manifests itself at these characteristic points, that its sweet influence may reach out—an elevating power to lift up and beautify the many lives that touch it more or less closely."

The pictures need be neither numerous nor costly. In more than one room a single engraving in a simple frame, or perhaps with no frame at all, makes a purer ideal of beauty, and a finer appreciation of form and composition, than a dozen highly colored paintings with rich accompaniments.

The books upon the table represent very closely the level of daily thought in the family. A ponderous Family Bible, a gilt-edged folio and a photograph album, tell the story as accurately as do a few well-worn editions of standard works, whose very size and friendly aspect speak of daily loving companionship.

A crucial test, however, is the dining-room. A superficial refinement may display itself at other points; here the genuine culture of heart and soul is seen and can not be masked under the transparency of "company manners." The natural tendency of the animal to supersede the spiritual will find its way to the service unless restrained by habitual attention to the loving courtesies that make home life beautiful. A meal, badly arranged, poorly served, with an atmosphere of haste and confusion, inevitably lowers the tone of family life. However simple the fare is, it is dignified by careful arrangement and service, while the nameless courtesies which are the fruit only of true unselfishness and a real regard for the comfort of others, can find no worthier mission than to make of the every-day home meal a place of rest and refreshment, spiritual or physical.

Girls, have you considered how much the tone of the home rests upon you? How easily you may raise or lower its ideal to your standard? Fix your ideal high, then, and think no duty small and no courtesy insignificant that leads toward its realization.—Christian at Work.

SHE WAS RIGHT.—I once heard a mother, who had been criticised for her personal vanity by a somewhat gossippy neighbor, say that she made it a duty and pleasure to keep well dressed, for she was likely at any time to be called upon at any time to entertain friends whose good opinion was of such consequence that she could not afford the risk of having them find her in any but neat and presentable attire. The friends were husband and children, and she was fully compensated for her care in this direction by their approval and appreciation. To be "well dressed" was not to her mind an admission of extravagance. Good taste and good planning often stand in the place of dollars and cents, and the lady in question was able to dress well on half the cost of her neighbor's wardrobe.

When the summer's rose has faded
What shall make it fair again?
When the face with pain is shaded
What shall drive away the pain?
Never shall a blossom brighten
After blighted by the frost,
But the load of pain may lighten,
And we need not count as lost
all the pleasure of life when the wife and mother, upon whom the happiness of home so largely depends, is afflicted with the delicate diseases peculiar to women. It is terrible to contemplate the misery existing in our midst because of the prevalence of these diseases. It is high time that all women should know that there is one sure remedy for all female complaints, and that is Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription. Do not allow ill-health to fasten itself upon you. Ward it off by the use of this standard remedy. But if it has already crept in, put it to rout. You can do it, by the use of the "Favorite Prescription." It is guaranteed to give satisfaction in every case, or money paid for it will be returned.

For biliousness, sick headache, indigestion, and constipation, take Dr. Pierce's Pellets.

Is the Earth in Danger from the Drill?

Prof. Joseph F. Jones answers, in a recent issue of the Popular Science Monthly, the question, "Is it safe to drill the earth too much?" The professor assumes the earth to be a hollow sphere filled with a gaseous substance, called by us natural gas, and he thinks that tapping these reservoirs will cause disastrous explosions, resulting from the lighted gas coming in contact with that which is escaping. He compares the earth to a balloon floated and kept distended by the gas in the interior, which, if exhausted, will cause the crust to collapse, affect the motion of the earth in its orbit, cause it to lose its place among the heavenly bodies, and fall in pieces.

Another writer thinks that drilling should be prohibited by stringent laws. He, too, thinks there is a possibility of an explosion, though from another cause. Should such a disaster occur, "the country along the gas belt from Toledo through Ohio, Indiana and Kentucky will be ripped up to a depth of 1,200 feet, or 1,500 feet, and flopped over like a pancake, leaving a chasm through which the waters of Lake Erie will come down, filling the Ohio and Mississippi valleys and blotting them out forever."

Still another theorist has investigated the gas wells with telephones and delicate thermometers, and he announces startling discoveries. He distinguished sounds like the boiling of rocks, and estimated that a mile and one-half or so beneath the Ohio and Indiana gas field the temperature of the earth is 3,500 degrees.

The scientist says an immense cavity exists, and that here the gas is stored that a mile below the bottom of the cavity is a mass of roaring, seething flame, which is gradually eating into the rock floor of the cavern and thinning it. Eventually the flames will reach the gas, and a terrible explosion will ensue.

WONDERS OF THE CAMERA.—The peculiar rhythmical effects which accompany discharges of powder and of nitro-glycerine compounds have been elaborately investigated by the aid of photography. It has also been suggested that careful photographs taken of steel and timber just at the point of rupture under a breaking load, would conduct to our knowledge of the complicated subject of elasticity.

The lightning flash can be investigated. Dr. Koenig, in a recent communication to the Physical Society of Berlin, states that he has photographed a cannon-ball which was moving at a rate of 1,200 feet per second. The ball was projected in front of a white screen and occupied one-fortieth of a second in its passage. Marey has photographed the motions of limping people, and has thus given surgeons the materials for a study of lameness. It is said, moreover, that photography often reveals incipient eruptive diseases which are not visible to the eye. Photographs taken by flash powders of the human eye, showing it dilated in the dark, give the oculist a new method of studying the enlarged pupil.—Prof. John Trowbridge, in Scribner's.

CARTRIDGE TO OIL THE WAVES.—A cartridge has been invented by Mr. Albert H. Walker, which, when filled with oil and discharged, will pacify the roughest sea. The receptacle is of ordinary cartridge size, but it is made of heavy paper, and weighted at the further end with a small piece of lead. It will hold about two ounces of oil. It is fitted in an ordinary cartridge shell, and fastened to it by means of cotton shreds. The cartridge is put into a breechloader and the trigger is pulled. The cotton connecting the cartridge with the shell is ignited by the powder. It is burned, and the cartridge, filled with oil, is sent spinning away over the waves. Then, at any point the navigator may wish, the cartridge, because of the lead at its head, will sink into the waves. By means of these cartridges a path an eighth of a mile broad can be made through the heaviest of seas.—London Court Journal.

MORRIS—Mrs. MARY MARIA MORRIS was born June 8, 1859, and died October 9, 1889, and was sick two years to a day. Mrs. Morris united with the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, early in life, and as far as health and opportunity afforded she was always at her place, and lived a consistent Christian for months before she died. God's chastening rod had fallen heavily upon her, and she was confined to her bed over six months; but in all her sufferings she murmured but little, and in the severest pains she manifested a strong confidence in the Redeemer of mankind and passed under the rod of affliction with that meekness of spirit and submission of soul which characterize the true Christian womanhood of our beloved Methodism. The last few weeks of her life were marked with sufferings of the most intense character, and yet no murmuring escaped her lips. She expressed to the writer n willingness to die and be with her Savior, and she rejoiced in the hope of meeting her mother and her sisters and babies that had preceded her to the home of the blessed, and she said their angel spirits were around her bed and she could see them. She was ripe for the kingdom above, having suffered the will of the Master and died in the faith, and has gone home to rest in his kingdom. God bless husband and the little girl that is left behind, and the aged father who is bereft of his children. The funeral was preached at the grave by the writer—words of Scripture: "Her sun is gone down while it is yet day." (Jer. xv, 9). J. H. EVANS.

DUBELL—The Holly Grove Sabbath-school of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, through their committee appointed by L. H. Swayze, superintendent, wishes to give some expression of sorrow which we feel at the sudden death of little EDGAR CLARENCE DUBELL, who departed this life on August 8, 1889, aged eight years, eleven months and three days. He was a member of the above Sabbath-school; a bright scholar, ever ready to repeat his verses. We miss him so much—no one can fill his humble place; therefore, be it

Resolved, That in the death of our little Sunday-school mate, we have sustained a grievous loss and a deep sorrow; yet we bow submissively to the will of him who gave himself for us, and who now has taken him from us forever. While we can not see how it is to be, yet we are confident that he who called him to that brighter world beyond, by death, will make our loss his eternal gain; so we will, in faith, watch the unfolding of his plans.

Resolved, That we tender our condolence to the sorrowing father and mother and sisters and all members of this grief-stricken family, and with their tears we mingle ours. We feel assured that he who commanded us to weep with those that weep will ever be mindful of us and comfort us when overtaken by sorrow.

MARY E. AARONS, for Com.

HUBBARD—Miss IDA M. HUBBARD, daughter of B. F. and M. T. Hubbard, was born July 10, 1870; died September 1, 1889, in Tupelo, Lee county, Miss., in the triumphs of a living faith. She joined the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, at the age of ten years and lived a consistent member of the same until death took her from earth. In my pastoral visits to her father's home I always found her genial and cheerful. She had many friends, and all who knew her mourn her death. Her absence casts a very dark shadow over the family circle; for her presence was as a ray of sunshine. She was sick several days, though no one thought the sickness would prove fatal until a short while before her demise. She was then too weak to talk much. Her life, however, was such as to dispel all fear concerning her future happiness, even in the absence of any dying testimony. May the Lord bless her father, mother and little sisters, and help them to be faithful unto death, that they may have a crown of life. EUGENE JOHNSON, Pastor.

BROWN—A sad letter reached me in Orlinda, Tenn., from Sister Brown, saying that her dear husband and my dear friend had passed from earth to glory. Her words bring tears from my eyes when she says, "My three little babies are calling for papa. Oh! will he not answer these little voices. No, no; God has separated us"

Bro. S. C. BROWN was born October 9, 1838, in Rankin county, Mississippi. He joined the church at Fanniu; some two years ago moved his membership to Brandon, Miss. Bro. Brown was a man of fine ability, far above the average; a devoted Christian, a kind and loving husband and father. We shall miss this dear brother; the church is poorer by his death, but heaven is richer. On July 21, 1889, in Illawara, La., he sweetly passed away. No word of complaint was heard from him. His faith was strong; he committed his wife and children to Jesus, and yielded his spirit to God, who gave it. May God take care of the broken-hearted wife and dear little children. Behind these clouds the sun is still shining.

F. M. FEATHERSTURN.

HOUGH—Died October 3, 1889, at the age of forty-three years and twenty-two days, Mrs. MARY E. HOUGH, relict of the late Rev. Thomas G. Hough, of the Louisiana Conference. Sister Hough was one of the victims of the terrible disaster which recently befell the steamboat Corona, while plying the Mississippi river. Though death to her was sudden and unexpected, yet she was fully prepared for the change, as she literally lived up to the injunction of her blessed Lord, "Be ye, therefore, ready also: for the Son of man cometh at an hour when ye think not."

Sister Hough was born in the State of Mississippi, September 11, 1846; and at the age of four years her parents moved to Louisiana, where she has since resided. She graduated at Science Hill College, Kentucky, at the age of sixteen years, and two years later was married to Thomas J. Hough, a promising young lawyer who practiced his profession with great success, but after his conversion felt a call to the ministry, and connected himself with the Louisiana Conference. She was converted while quite young, joined the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, and lived an earnest, consistent member thereof up to the time of her death. All of her energies in girlhood and womanhood were devoted to the Lord's cause. She literally went about doing good. Her conduct in society as a member of the church, and as the wife of a Christian minister, was that of a model Christian; and her Christian demeanor won the admiration and love of all who knew her. She was especially the friend of the poor, and many of this class will cherish her memory with feelings of the deepest gratitude. In her death the church has lost one of its warmest and most active supporters, and society a model character and one of its brightest ornaments. Her constant daily companion was her Bible. Her last moments were spent in communion with her Lord, and then sweetly fell asleep in Jesus. A host of friends and admirers attended her funeral services, and followed her remains to their last resting place. They loved her when living, and honor and cherish her memory when dead. She sleeps well. H. S. I.

MEAUX—Little ELLA BEATRICE, daughter of John and Patsie Meaux, was born September 9, 1886, and died September 30, 1889. She was a child of very bright mind and unusually pleasing manners. All who knew little B. (as she was commonly called) loved her. She was the pet of the entire family. God has seen fit to take her away. Yes, she was too pure and lovely to remain here in this world of sorrow and pain. While it is hard to give the child up, it is pleasant to think that she is one of the number that sing around the throne of God. She found pleasure in waiting on her mamma and papa; they could trust her with anything. Just a few moments before she passed away she looked up, and said, "Mamma, rock B. to sleep." She soon fell on sleep in Jesus. May God bless the bereaved ones, and may they so live in this life that they may be enabled to meet little B. in the sweet by-and-by! It makes heaven more attractive to have our loved ones there.

F. N. SWEENEY.

The Census of 1890.

To the Editor of CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE:

DEAR SIR: Having determined to include Church Statistics in the special inquiries to be made for the Eleventh Census, I wish to announce to you and, through you, to your readers, my desire and purpose to obtain the fullest and most accurate results possible in this special department. I need not enlarge upon the value of such results to any who are in any wise interested in church work and progress, and wish to know the numerical strength of the various religious denominations of the United States.

The inquiry will be broad enough in scope to embrace every religious body, of whatever name or creed, however few or many its churches and members, and it will be conducted with the utmost fairness and impartiality. The information sought will be arranged under five heads: (1) Organizations or societies; (2) Church edifices; (3) Seating capacity; (4) Value of church property; (5) Communicants. This is as much, in my judgment, as it will be wise to undertake in this direction for the Eleventh Census.

In order to prosecute this plan successfully and to make the results so thorough and accurate that they can not be impeached, the government will have to count largely on the prompt and generous co-operation of those in each denomination who are in a position to furnish the information desired. This information can not be gathered by the enumerators. They are already fully burdened; and the appropriations available for the Census will not admit of the appointment of special enumerators for this work. It is necessary, therefore, to make Church Statistics a special inquiry, and they must be gathered chiefly by schedules placed in the hands of some competent person in each of the minor ecclesiastical subdivisions of the various churches.

The conduct of this special inquiry has been committed to a gentleman whose qualifications for the work will, I am sure, be instantly recognized. H. K. Carroll, LL. D., editor of The Independent, of New York, has consented to assume the duties of the position. Dr. Carroll is now engaged in preparing plans for such a division of the territory of each denomination as will make it comparatively easy for those to whom his inquiries will be addressed to give a prompt and faithful response. I ask for him, and I am sure you will heartily second me, such cheerful and generous assistance as he may require from officers of the denomination you represent.

Very respectfully,

ROBERT P. PORTER,
Superintendent of Census.

REPORTS OF GOVERNMENT CHEMISTS AS TO PURITY AND WHOLESOMENESS OF DR. PRICE'S CREAM BAKING POWDER.

Dr. Price's Cream Baking Powder does not contain Alum, Ammonia or Lime, or any adulterant.—R. S. G. PATON, Ph. D., Chemist for the United States Government.

The Cream of Tartar used in Dr. Price's Cream Baking Powder is the strongest and free from all lime and other impurities. The best Baking Powder made.—Prof. PETER COLLIER, Chief Chemist for the United States Department of Agriculture, Washington, D. C.

I have several times examined baking powders in the market to determine their purity, raising power and influence on the health of those using them. I have uniformly found Dr. Price's Cream Baking Powder the best in all respects. In raising power it stands at the head. It is a pure, clean, elegant and healthful preparation. I have used "Price's" in my family for years.—Prof. R. C. KEDZIE, Late President Michigan State Board of Health.

Such is PERUNA, a purely vegetable compound, pleasant to take and certain to benefit. It equalizes the circulation, builds up debilitated structures, and gives healthy and hearty tone to the weakened system. It not only restores the body to vigor, but, if kept on hand and made use of from time to time, will keep it in vigor. It assists PE-RU-NA Nature in throwing off any disease the body may be subject in. Read its record in many cases in Dr. Hartman's "Ills of Life." All druggists keep it. Give it a trial. MASON & HAMLIN

The Cabinet Organ was introduced in its present form by Mason & Hamlin in 1861. Other makers followed in the manufacture of these instruments, but the Mason & Hamlin Organs have always maintained their supremacy as the best in the world.

Mason & Hamlin offer, as demonstration of the unequalled excellence of their organs, the fact that at all of the great World's Exhibitions, since and including that of Paris, 1867, in competition with best makers, of all countries, they have invariably taken the highest honors. Illustrated $22 to $900 catalogues free.

ORGANS

Mason & Hamlin do not hesitate to make the extraordinary claim for their Pianos, that they are superior to all others. They recognize the high excellence achieved by other leading makers in the art of piano building, but still claim superiority. This they attribute solely to the remarkable improvement introduced by them in the year 1882, and now known as the "MASON & HAMLIN STRINGER," by means of which is secured the greatest possible purity and refinement of tone, together with greatly increased capacity GRAND & UPRIGHT, for standing in tune and other important advantages.

PIANOS

A circular, containing testimonials from three hundred purchasers, musicians, and tuners, sent, together with descriptive catalogue, to any applicant.

Pianos and Organs sold for cash or easy payments; also rented.

We the undersigned, do testify that we have used Dr Davis' Compound Syrup of Wild Cherry and Tar for years, for all throat and lung troubles, with the greatest benefit. For coughs and colds it never fails. When taken according to directions, it cures our children of croup and whooping-cough, and for serious lung troubles it always gives relief.

"The Coming Kingdom," by Rev. W. W. Wadsworth.

Of this new book, which is now largely attracting the attention of the church, Bishop Granbery says: "I hope it will have a wide circulation. It is well adapted to enlighten the mind, stir the conscience, and warm the heart on the great missionary cause. Preachers and people ought to read it, and keep it in their libraries for frequent reference."

Bishop Hendrix, commending it, says: "Like John Randolph's speeches, it is rich in facts; and it was this that gave them such charm and force. 'The Coming Kingdom' should find a place side by side with Dr. A. T. Pierson's 'Crisis of Missions.' Its discussion of the vexed question of the educational work in foreign fields is eminently wise and practical. May it have the widespread sale it deserves."

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

DOMESTIC.

Postmaster General Wanamaker has awarded the contract for furnishing adhesive postage stamps for the four years beginning on the 1st of January next, to the American Bank Note Company of New York, the lowest bidder. The award was made for stamps of a reduced size, the new stamps being about one-eighth smaller than those in present use.

October 24 was Alliance Day at the Piedmont Exposition (Atlanta). After the ceremonies there was a double wedding of Alliance couples, the brides and grooms being dressed in suits of cotton bagging, as indicative of their faith in cotton as covering instead of jute.

The World's Fair subscription had scarcely been opened in the office of Drexel, Morgan & Co., in New York, on October 24, when three large subscriptions were made. They were those of Cornelius Vanderbilt, $100,000; New York Central and Hudson River Railroad Company, $100,000, and the Wagner Palace Car Company, $50,000.

It is stated at the Postoffice Department that, judging from returns received for the first three quarters of the last fiscal year, the postal deficiency for the year will not exceed $3,000,000.

The Italians of New York have been notified by their government that it will co-operate with them in every way to procure a suitable statue of Christopher Columbus for presentation to the city of New York. The statue will be of gigantic size, made by an Italian sculptor of Carrara marble, and will cost $30,000. Premier Crispi has contributed to the project.

The report of the commission to determine the site of the navy yard on the Gulf coast lacks only a few pages of being completed. It will be submitted to the commodore at the head of the commission, and by him to the President.

It is said at the Postoffice Department that no changes affecting the railway mail service of the gulf region are imminent, although Superintendent S. Lowle Bell is in correspondence with the New Orleans Board of Trade and other parties looking to that object.

A proposition to repeal the rule of the Merchants' Exchange forbidding the cornering of grain in the St. Louis market was submitted to a vote of that body and defeated by a large majority.

The steel cruiser San Francisco was successfully launched, on October 26, at the Union Iron Works, San Francisco.

Gen. Green B. Raum, of Illinois, has been appointed commissioner of pensions.

George W. Cooley, formerly city engineer of Minneapolis, has designed a structure which he proposes shall be erected on the grounds of the World's Fair. It is to be 1,200 feet in height, and will cost about $175,000.

A fire occurred on the steamship Trinacria, now lying at the wharf, in this city, on October 27. Four hundred bales of cotton were damaged.

The spread of diphtheria and scarlet fever in Lawrence, Mass., has become alarming.

At the convention of the Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers in Denver, Col., Grand Chief Arthur was re-elected.

Lord Wolseley has accepted an invitation to be present at the unveiling of the statue of General Lee, at Richmond, Va.

FOREIGN.

The subterranean river recently discovered in France, in the Miers district of the Department of Lot, has now been traced a distance of seven miles, to a point beyond which the three daring explorers who undertook the task did not dare to venture, as the river there takes an abrupt plunge into the bowels of the earth to a depth impossible to fathom.

Advices received in Sydney, N. S. W., from Abia, under date of October 15, state that a battle is reported to have taken place on the island of Savaii between forces of Malietoa and Tamasese. Three hundred men were engaged on each side. Several were killed and a number wounded. Which party won the victory is not known. No news of the battle has been received at Washington.

A disastrous explosion of dynamite occurred in Montreal, on October 24, at 6:30 a. m. Many houses are destroyed. So far only one death is known to have been caused by the disaster, although it is rumored in the vicinity of the accident that two other men have been blown to pieces. Upward of sixty, however, are known to be more or less seriously injured, and of this number five or six may die.

The proposed conference between Prince Bismarck, Count Kalnoky and Premier Crispi has been delayed until after the Emperor William's visit to the Sultan of Turkey. Hopes are entertained that the Emperor's interviews with the Sultan will result in the adhesion of Turkey to the general aims of the triple alliance, without her formal entering the league.

The negro colonization bill has passed its first reading in the Mexican Senate. The bill will be passed and approved, but negroes will find hard times in Mexico, as they are very unpopular there, and, beside this, the lands selected are among the most unhealthy in the country.

The marriage of Princess Sophie of Prussia and the Duke of Sparta, Crown Prince of Greece, took place on October 27.

The food and tariff questions are to come up in the German Reichstag. Though there is abundant proof of the terrible pressure on the poor caused by the existing tariffs it is improbable that the Reichstag will grant relief.

Earthquake shocks have caused serious damage in Italy and loss of life at Gallipoli.

Catarrh is caused by scrofulous taint in the blood, and is cured by Hood's Sarsaparilla, which purifies and enriches the blood and gives the whole system health and strength. Try this "peculiar medicine." It is prepared by C. I. Hood & Co., Lowell, Mass.

AGENTS WANTED.

AN EXTRAORDINARY OFFER.

We want live, energetic agents in every county in the United States and Canada to sell a patent article of great merit, on its merits. An article having a large sale, paying over 100 per cent. profit, having no competition, and on which the agent is protected in the exclusive sale by a deed given for each and every county he may secure from us. With all these advantages to our agents, and the fact that it is an article that can be sold to every house owner, it might not be necessary to make "an extraordinary offer" to secure good agents at once, but we have concluded to make it to show, not only our confidence in the merits of our invention, but in its salability by any agent that will handle it with energy. Our agents now at work are making from $150 to $300 a month clear, and makes it safe for us to make our offer to all who are out of employment. Any agent that will give our business a thirty days' trial, and fail to clear at least $100 in that time, above all expenses, can return all goods unsold to us, and we will refund the money paid for them. No other employer of agents ever dared to make such an offer, nor would we if we did not know that we have agents now making double this amount. Our large descriptive circulars explain our offer fully, and those who wish to send to everyone out of employment who will send us three one cent stamps for postage.

GOD'S FORGE.

BY MARY E. HOPER.

The hammer of thy discipline, O Lord,
Strikes hard and fast. Life's anvil rings again
To thy strong stroke. And yet we know 'tis then
That from the heart's hot iron, all abroad,
The rich glow spreads. Great Fashioner Divine—
Who spares not, in thy far-seeing plan,
The blows that shape the character of man,
Or fire that makes him yield to touch of thine—
Strike on, if so thou will! For thou alone
Canst rightly test the temper of our will,
Or tell how these base metals may fulfill
Thy purpose—making all our life thine own.
Only, we do beseech thee, let the pain
Of fiery ordeals through which we go
Shed all around us such a warmth and glow;
Such cheerful showers of sparks in golden rain,
That hard hearts may be melted, cold hearts fired
And callous hearts be taught to feel and see
That discipline is more to be desired
Than all the ease that keeps us back from thee.

Our Los Angeles Letter.

BY REV. Q. A. OATS.

The Los Angeles Conference was held in San Bernardino, commencing the second and closing the sixth ultimo. This is the smallest body the writer has ever seen assembled in an Annual Conference, there being only about thirty preachers in connection with it. A review of the history of Methodism in the strongest centers shows that the time was when all the Conferences were small hands of faithful men; hence this is no reason for despair. Some years since the Los Angeles Conference was set off with less than a dozen active preachers, with only a few scattered members; all confined principally to the territory of Los Angeles county; no church buildings or parsonages. Now there are over two thousand members embraced in Southern California and Arizona; about twenty-five church-houses that, for beauty and convenience, would do credit to any country, and fifteen or sixteen excellent parsonages. While this has been accomplished, difficulties have been encountered unlike any known in other places, and, in some respects, unparalleled. Prominent among these difficulties was the disaffection caused by the "holiness movement" some years back. The brethren holding peculiar views on that question set up an independent holiness church, and several of our prominent ministers and hundreds of our members went into it. This almost broke up some of the strongest churches, and for some years crippled the whole work. To brethren in the older Conferences the status of this work may seem inadequate. Many, I know, think our church needless on this coast, and think our outlay of men and money here useless. Such was my own opinion till I saw and learned the state of matters here. They think us struggling against great odds, and our ministry confined to a few extremely Southern people. Many suppose we are opposing altar to altar because the Methodist Episcopal Church is represented here. If there is altar against altar, they are to blame for it. Our church was first in the field, and has never sought to invade places when they were established and were doing all the needed work. Are we to strike our colors and abandon our people and our property on this account? I say, Never! The Methodist Episcopal Church has poured men and money into this territory like water. They have built churches everywhere. Notwithstanding all this, and the fact that nearly nine-tenths of the people are from the North, they have but few more members than we have, and preach to but a few more of the people. In the Southern California Conference, embracing more than double the territory and population we have in the Los Angeles Conference, they have only about eight thousand members, served by more than one hundred preachers. Many people seek our church and ministry because our pulpits are free from political alliances and offensive partisan utterances. Many Northern people join our church. Over half the membership of my present charge are "regular down-Easters." Our showing will compare very well with any church established on this coast. It is a lamentable fact that the great mass of the people here are not under the influence of any church, and never enter a place of worship.

The Los Angeles Conference has made a good showing this year. A number of new churches have been built, and others are under way. There has been an increase of about thirty per cent. in the membership. What other Conference has done so well? Four promising young men were admitted on trial, one readmitted, and five preachers received by transfer, viz.: Revs. H. M DuBose, James Henley, J. M. Weems, a Bro. Fuller, and the writer. These additions enabled Bishop Hargrove to fully man the work, and we confidently look for vast inroads upon the enemy's kingdom during the coming year. May God speed the day when this wonderful hand shall be taken for Christ!

Rev. R. H. Parker was elected clerical delegate to represent us in the General Conference, and G. E. Franklin from the laymen.

In the Conference were noticeable several aged and feeble brethren who have borne the heat and burden of the day in this good, but godless land, and are now ready to be offered up and receive the crown of the faithful. Among them were the Bros. Abram and Samuel Adams, and Bro. Clayton. These men are surely a rich heritage to the younger brethren. May they long be spared to be heard and felt in the councils of the church!

Of my own new charge I will say that it bids fair to be pleasant. We have a neat parsonage in the town of Norwalk, a place of four or five hundred inhabitants. Ours is the only church, except a small "Seventh-Day Adventist Society," in or near the town. There is also another church six miles in the country belonging to my charge. I preach alternately between the two. The surrounding country is as fine as human eyes ever rested on, and the people are cultivated and generous.

Mississippi has dealt generously with the Los Angeles Conference. Both the Bros. Adams, D. C. Brown, J. B. Johnson, R. J. Allen, James Healey and the writer are from her precious soil. All except Bro. Healey are from the bounds of the North Mississippi Conference.

BY JOSEPH B. COTTRELL, D. D.

Bro. F. M. Grace's reminiscences of the preaching of Bishop McTyeire before his election to the episcopacy, and subsequent thereto, in the ADVOCATE, of October 17, are specially interesting. Oh! the memories of the days when McTyeire, Jef. Hamilton, Walter C. Harris, Phil. P. Neely and C. C. Callaway, with scores of others, long ago entered into rest, were the objects of admiration to us beginners in this itinerancy. Harris was of that notable class in which Grace, Starr, Belton, Peebles, Dowdell and Mark Andrews were numbered; but for maturity of thought, justness of judgment and amplitude of knowledge, he may rightly be named in the category of McTyeire and Hamilton. As I get older the real greatness of Wat. Harris grows upon me. I fully shared with Grace the admiration and esteem for McTyeire his criticisms discover. How greedily I devoured his editorials in the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE every week; and afterwards, those in the Nashville Advocate! The war drove him down into the Montgomery Conference, and there it was I came into close association with him, and felt the full emphasis of his worth. He went right along up, as a matter of course, through the gradations of influence to the greatness and renown that make him an historical personage in the calendar of American Methodism.

The recent session of the Louisville Conference, at Morganfield, was signalized by an exceptionally powerful sermon from Bishop Keener. I was fortunate in having a seat immediately in front of the preacher, and in such proximity as to enable me to catch every glance and twinkle of his eye, and mark the ebbs and flowings of the tide of thought and passion. The discourse was on the work of the Holy Ghost in consummating the redemption of humanity through regenerative, sanctifying and glorifying degrees—passing the blood-bought church into the ultimates of bliss. Agency in the subjects of this divine government, counterpart to the sovereignty of him whose resources of knowledge and power and love are limitless, is pivotal; so that Bledsoe's leading thought, in Theodicy, of the impossibility of a necessitated holiness, accounts for retributive measures so appalling as those the gospel declares.

In addition to the many holy meetings for Conference—preaching, love-feast, society anniversaries, and the like—some of the brethren enterprised a "holiness meeting" in the afternoons. One of these I attended, desiring most sincerely to reap any supplemental or exceptional benefit that thereby might accrue. I acknowledge that there was naught, to me, more potent, spiritually, through the specialty, than I find in any and all of the normal institutions of Conference. Holiness is so much a matter of course in all that pertains to the covenant of life, whereof our Methodism is distinctively exponential, I am at a loss in endeavoring to find the particular need there is for considering it and enterprising it abstractly and apart from the measures of worship and teaching and communion and Conference and Discipline and benevolent ministration that already symmetrize and compact our Zion. Individual consecration and persistent devotedness along the lines of service and within the prescribed circles already defined will bring all of us into "the unity of the faith and of the knowledge of the Son of God, unto a perfect man, unto the measure of the stature of Christ."

Dr. Morton very deservedly has the chairmanship of the delegation to the General Conference, so vigorously and methodically has he marshalled and directed the forces on behalf of church extension. Dr. Tigert will be, perhaps, the youngest representative in the body. His election, on first ballot, with Morton was gratifying to such as take pleasure in the timely recognition of the gifted. Tigert lectured here last Saturday night on the five senses, and their use. There are a sonorousness and compass of voice that so accord with the profundity of thought and vigor of expression which mark his discussions, an audience sits in enchantment, oblivious of the flight of time. He followed up his lecture, the day after, with a sermon from, "God so loved the world, he gave his only begotten Son," and seldom have I so enjoyed a pulpit deliverance. The facility with which his mind grapples with the cardinal principles comprehended in the graver theological issues is phenomenal.

Your correspondent is back at Franklin for the third year. It was a surprise to him when he learned, in Nashville, week before last, that he was as near as he was to the seat of the Tennessee Conference; and the temptation to drop down, for a day or two, to Murfreesboro, prevailed. It was not wise in me to yield to the pressure the first night to preach, for an intolerable cold was disqualification. Then, the next afternoon, there came a demand for a lecture at the female college, Dr. Graves, the president (a brother of Dr. J. R. G., of "Great Iron Wheel" distinction), claiming the service. A goodly number of the preachers, with citizens, added to the young ladies of the college, made up an audience at three o'clock in the afternoon—not the most favorable hour for a speaker. There is but one rule, however, and that is, respond whenever you are called for, and on every occasion give the best you can produce. When I footed it up from Shelbyville, just after the battle of Murfreesboro, to the Federal picket, in endeavor to reach my wounded boy and minister to him, experiences somewhat other than these of a Conference occasion transpired.

In Dr. Fitzgerald's class meeting, at McKendree, in Nashville, it was an encouragement and an inspiration to hear from laymen an exhaustive analysis of a prime Scripture lesson, and apt practical applications of the principles taught therein.

Now for another year! The experiences of the one just closed are memorable above any of those of the preceding thirty-six in which this scribe has itinerated.

"Immersion Methodists."

MR. EDITOR: Under this head I wish to notice that class of Methodists who clamor for baptism by immersion, as well as some of the consequences growing out of it. It is with some temerity that I speak upon this subject, for I am well aware that able men contend for "nothing in mode," and our book of discipline makes it obligatory upon the minister to administer baptism by immersion where the candidate requires it; but am constrained by the conviction and observation that this practice is breaking down one of the fundamental doctrines of our beloved Methodism, as well as one of the glorious privileges of our Christianity, to wit: Infant baptism, by which we take our little ones with us into covenant relations with God. Our duties as pastor require us to encourage our people to have their children baptized in infancy or childhood, and, in order thereto, we often have to approach them upon this subject in our pastoral visitations; and wherever we approach a father or mother upon this subject, who are advocates of immersion, we are met with the answer either that they do not believe in infant baptism, which amounts to a defective faith as Methodists, or if, as is often the case, they are disposed to shirk responsibility, they say they propose to leave it to the choice of the child as to time and mode.

All this not only makes the pastor's labors more unpleasant and greater, which is, comparatively, a matter of small moment, but, as already said, it is destructive of one of our most cherished Christian privileges and duties, and lending strength to those who claim this as the one essential mode, and frown upon infant baptism as a heresy which has crept into the church of God.

Now, Mr. Editor, I want to ask of you or anyone disposed to answer, How am I to overcome this obstacle to the discharge of my duty as pastor? And how can I teach infant baptism either from the pulpit or in the social circle, and, at the same time, practice the mode which denies the validity, if it does not forbid the practice of the same? And is it my duty thus to contradict my theory and faith by my practice, simply to satisfy an uncultivated fancy, not to say prejudice; and that at the expense of one of our most cherished doctrines, as well as my own conscientious convictions?

WM. T. BEALL.

To the Friends of Free Schools in the South.

My official position as general agent of the Peabody Education Fund, conjoined to my Southern birth, residence and sympathies, must be my apology for the apparent presumption of this appeal.

Prior to 1867 there was not any general or efficient public school system in the South. Before the war academies and colleges for both sexes were numerous and did excellent work, but no adequate provision was made for the education of the masses.

In the Southern States, excluding Delaware, Maryland and Missouri, the school population, from six to fourteen years, according to the latest most trustworthy returns, furnished to me from the Bureau of Education, is 4,028,775. The enrollment is 3,420,401. The school term in the South in the State schools will not average eighty days, while that at the West and the North is probably double. The teaching in the rural districts is often of an inferior quality—what might reasonably be expected from poorly-paid teachers, employed for three or four months in the year. The annual school expenditure in these States is over $13 000,000.

By the census of 1880, 6,000 000 of the 16 000,000 of children of school age did not attend the public schools. Of the school population of the South, nearly half are not in school. Over six and a quarter millions of our entire population could not write their names. Two millions of legal voters, of whom 900,000 were white and 1,100,000 were colored, could not write. This test of intelligence is so deceptive that, while one-fifth of the voters could not write at all, it is probable that two-fifths were so imperfectly educated as to be unable to read intelligently a newspaper or the Bible. The illiterate voters in the South were 1,363,884, or over one-third; 69.8 per cent. of illiterate voters were negroes, and 30.2 per cent. whites. In North Carolina, South Carolina, Georgia, Alabama and Louisiana more than half the voters can not read their ballots.

The maintenance of our public schools has been complicated and made more onerous by the race question, which, whatever fanaticism or partisanship or crass ignorance may say, is the most fearful problem that our civilization has encountered. There is no discrimination against schools for negroes in any of the Southern States. The length of the school year is the same for both races. Dr. Owens, of Roger Williams College, in Nashville, an institution for negroes, says: "The South has acted nobly in dividing the public funds and providing good buildings." The Southern States, on whose territory the war between the States was waged, and which came out of the terrible struggle crushed and reduced to poverty, have paid nearly or quite $50,000,000 for the education of the negroes, and Gen. Armstrong, the able principal of the Hampton School, who commanded a brigade of colored troops, says: "Southern tax payers are doing more than any others for the negro by maintaining 16,000 free colored schools at an annual cost of over $3,000,000. * * * Of every $100 paid in Southern taxation, $91 50 are paid by white people."

These negroes, with their inherited tendencies of superstition and their long, dreary history of ignorance, thriftlessness and slavery, are entitled to education—to fullest moral and intellectual development—(1) as human beings, with individual responsibility and immortal souls, for whom Christ died, and (2) as citizens and voters in a representative republic.

It is a narrow view of the subject to confine it to negroes. Senator Blair, in a recent address, says: "The distress of our own blood is greater than that of the colored race." The destitution of the means of education among white children is appalling. Northern charity to the amount of over fifteen millions of dollars has been concentrated upon negro children.

The States can not rid themselves of the obligation to sustain free schools. That is one of the functions of free government, and can not safely be dispensed with or evaded. General education was never accomplished except under government authority and by government revenues. Instead of doing anything to diminish the sense of the obligation of the Southern States to sustain an adequate system of free schools, I should much prefer to make it more real. The South, instead of deserving criticism or censure for omission of duty, deserves, the rather, commendation for what she has attempted and achieved. No chapter in her history is more brilliant than this, or more merits grateful recognition. Of the $80,000,000 paid out for public schools every year by the whole country, the South expends about $16 000,000, or one-fifth, while her taxable property does not come near that proportion of the aggregate taxable property. A. D. Mayo, of Massachusetts, as familiar as any man in the Union with the school work of the South, has often written of the grandeur and patriotism of the sacrifices of the South in this direction. "No similar class of people in the Old or New World has accomplished so much, in a time so short, against obstacles so formidable." Under her peculiar conditions, with a rural, agricultural, and sparse population, without recuperation from the impoverishment and exhaustion of the war, with a non-tax-paying, unskilled, immigration-forbidding, lately servile race of co equal citizens as joint occupants of her territory, it is financially impossible for the South to sustain a system of free schools, continuing in session eight months and affording educational facilities for the population of school age. The school demand can not possibly be met by her resources, and it is an alarming fact that the States having the smallest resources have the heaviest school burdens. Throughout the Northern States each child receives on an average for his yearly education about $15. In the South the per capita expenditure is about $3 86. A rate of taxation accomplishing what is desirable and necessary in the South would be nothing short of ruinous confiscation.

The only remedy for this deplorable condition of affairs is national aid. The bill, which passed the Senate at the last session, proposes to act through State school systems, in subordination and auxiliary to State authorities, and steered as far as possible from bureaucracy and centralization. The distribution was not based on population in the aggregate, but on the illiteracy of the school population, ascertained or ascertainable from the sworn returns of the census. It rightly recognized illiteracy, not as local or sectional, but as a national question of paramount importance, imperilling our representative institutions. The North may be geographically and practically severed from contact with the negroes; but she can not hope to be exempt from the industrial, social, moral and political consequences of their illiteracy. The North emancipated, citizenized and enfranchised the negroes; and from these three distinct, substantive acts there is a resulting obligation to qualify them for citizenship and suffrage that can not be honestly ignored or evaded. It will no longer satisfy conscience or reason to say that the South enjoyed the fruits of slave labor and must now pay for the education of the freedmen; for since Appomattox a quarter of a century has elapsed, and a majority of the negroes now living were never in legal bondage to any man.

The aid proposed, if given in bulk, is not as much as is given every year to soldiers and claim agents in the way of pensions, and would be about one-fourth of the annual expenditures of the government; but the bill appropriates only $7,000,000 the first year, and an average of only $10,000,000 for the period of eight subsequent years. This trifling and temporary sum, to be paid over to State officers, is to be expended in the common schools on the right and healthful condition that no greater part shall be paid out to any State in one year than the sum expended by that State out of its own revenues. To use an illustration of Senator Blair. If Florida, for instance, could receive by the provisions of the bill $1 25 for each child, in order to get that the State would have to raise within itself an equal amount—thus securing for each child's education $2 50.

Our liberties and the perpetuity of representative institutions are inseparably interwoven with free schools. Recently there have been strong and persistent efforts in behalf of "parochial schools," and the advocates of them, as substitutes for State schools, have manifestly increased their activity. If common schools fail at the South, or linger in feebleness and insufficiency, the parochial schools will acquire increased strength, if not predominance. If parochial schools become influential and powerful, and take, in any degree, the place of the State schools, the denominations controlling and supporting them will clamor for their share of school revenues. When religionists become a compact body and act politically as a unit, they can often control municipal or State or Federal elections, and parties and candidates, from policy or cowardice, will soon be yielding to the demand for a partition of funds. What has been done in some cities will be repeated disastrously throughout the land.

The South, in her past history, from the administration of Washington to that of Harrison, inclusive, has been conservative. Often have her statesmen and her public opinion interposed to preserve the ancient landmarks and prevent departures from the Constitution and the precedents of the fathers. She has been as much maligned as misunderstood. If true to the free schools, she can save representative government and our civil and religious liberties. Her freedom, present and prospective, from heterogeneous and foreign elements, and her consciousness of the perils from the race question, should make her again, as often heretofore, the great conservative, controlling, saving section of the country.

For the present and for a few years to come, national aid is our only hope. The South has favored the measure. Both political parties in Virginia have incorporated it in their platforms. There could not be stronger need for the aid than now. The next session of Congress offers encouraging opportunity for accomplishing what we have longed and labored for. The children, the country, our freedom, the yearnings of the oppressed of the Old World, unite to make us put forth a strong and united effort to remove and prevent illiteracy and save our free schools. J. L. M. CURRY.

RICHMOND, Virginia.

I respectfully and earnestly ask the newspapers of the South, political, religious and educational, to publish this appeal.

THE DEVIL.—It is no uncommon thing to find people in these days who have outgrown the faith so far as to deny the existence of a personal devil. Faith neither creates nor destroys. It simply realizes what is. If language expresses thought, the New Testament certainly teaches that Satan is. Christ was in the desert alone, so far as human company goes. If the disciples invented the story of the temptations, they are too ingenious to be trusted. If they report what Christ told them, and he deceived them, then he is not to be trusted. If the temptations came out of his own heart, then he is not pure enough to keep his power over the hearts of men. The Bible is not given up to the family history of Satan. It simply teaches his presence and power. Objects that cast little or no shadow in the gaslight or moonlight cast a shadow that seems almost solid in the electric light. Neither science nor philosophy outline the form or make plain the presence of Satan, but he stands clearly revealed in the light of the Sun of Righteousness.—O. P. Gifford.

EVENING HYMN.

By J. Hgk.

Shades of evening softly falling:
Hush my heart, and let me hear
Angel voices sweetly calling,
Telling me that God is near.

Shades of evening, calmly closing:
Fold away all earthly care;
Let my heart, on God reposing,
Find its rest in praise and prayer.

Shades of evening, stars revealing
In the peaceful arch of night,
Peaceful o'er my spirit stealing,
Show me Christ, my Star of Light!

Shades of evening, holier living,
Bear me to the heaven above;
Rest in God's own sweet forgiving:
And the gladness of his love.

Shades of evening, slowly stilling
All around in rest secure,
Let me rest, and wait fulfilling,
Trusting God; for God is sure.

A Mississippi Methodist Male College.

Seventy thousand Methodists in Mississippi seem to be waking up and rubbing their eyes after a long, deep sleep on the subject of christian education. The enterprise to establish a male college under the auspices of the church seems to be an assured fact of the near future. One liberal-souled Methodist has all the film out of his eyes and comes to the foreground with an offer of $250,000 (Major Millsaps, of Jackson), conditioned on a like donation for endowment by the whole body of Methodists in the two Conferences. After ten months of vigorous effort and earnest appeal, $37,500 of the amount to be raised by the many has been subscribed. Our Bishop Galloway has brought earnestness, enthusiasm and consecrated talents to bear in pushing the canvass for Christian education—and not in vain. Thirty-five to forty thousand dollars is something to look at in itself, and for which to feel a little swelling of the heart; but when considered in comparison with fifty thousand dollars by one man, it is nothing for two great Conferences to brag about. One man against 70,000 Methodists, and after a contest of well nigh a whole year for the prize of excellence in Christian liberality, the one man yet far ahead! Not quite a case of montes parturiunt, nor a Kilrain knock-out, for the seventy thousand; but it is something to think about. It furnishes cause for serious reflection. Some one has said, that God and one man constitute a strong majority. So, so far one man of noble soul, with generous heart and open hand, is more than a match for seventy thousand other Methodists, who stand pressing their hands over the region of the midriff on their pockets. Well and nobly done for the Major! But what of the seventy thousand? Outstripped, beaten, outnumbered in a material sense, by one man, and that by a large majority. Should not the Methodists of Mississippi hang their heads in confusion and shame at this lack of liberality on the part of the great body of the church. Where are the men and women of the Methodist Church who should have met promptly the liberal donation of Major Millsaps, with their five thousand, ten thousand or even twenty-five thousand dollars. And, so far, I do not call to mind one other man who has contributed as much as five thousand to the endowment fund of a great church school for the grand commonwealth of Mississippi. Long before this time one hundred and fifty or two hundred thousand dollars should have been subscribed by Mississippi Methodism to the endowment fund, so as to put the financial success of the institution beyond a peradventure.

Some places express a desire for the location of the college and are competing for it. As a bonus a few thousand dollars are offered. In some instances, as much as twenty or twenty-five thousand, with, perhaps, a few acres of land. To secure such an institution is a consummation to be greatly desired by any community. A moderate estimate, perhaps, of the financial benefit would be an annual income of $50,000, while the social and moral benefits would be incalculable. No place desiring it should bid less than forty or fifty thousand dollars to the building fund.

Over the whole extent of the cotton belt, and throughout a large scope of territory in North Mississippi, the present cotton crop is short almost beyond a precedent. Many who, when the crop was abundant, would have considered one-tenth of their income for the Lord an extravagant estimate of duty in the way of Christian beneficence—ten bales of cotton in the hundred—are compelled this year to turn over half the crop, and in some instances more than the other nine-tenths, to the caterpillar, the Lord's destroying army.

But we said that the seventy thousand Methodists of Mississippi are waking up, and we believe they are. But the slumber has been deep and long, and the waking is slow. Wake up, brethren, to the importance of the occasion, to a sense of duty and of privilege. And, for your encouragement, remember that the liberal soul shall be made fat. Give and it shall be given to you again. Honor the Lord with thy substance, and with the first fruits of all thine increase, so shall thy barns be filled with plenty.

T. C. WIER.

To the Preachers and Methodist People in the Columbus District, North Mississippi Conference.

My Dear Brethren: Bishop Galloway makes the gratifying announcement to us in the New Orleans Christian Advocate that only $12,000 is lacking to complete the $50,000 to be raised in order to secure the first $100,000 of endowment for the proposed Methodist college in the State.

Up to this date Columbus district has done comparatively little in this noble enterprise. The opportunity to do great things is at hand. The cause appeals to the highest motives of Christian benevolence. The college is not only expedient, important, but necessary to certain ends in the work God has committed to us in Mississippi. The appreciation of this necessity has moved the marked response already given to the call for endowment, and will complete the first demand. The thing is surely of the Lord, and will be carried through. But can we afford to have so little part in it?

Here is an enterprise, not to build a tomb over dead men's bones, nor a monument to dead issues, but to save and vitalize our Christian energies for the best work we can do for the young men of the State. It proposes to give Christian education to these young men under the auspices of our Methodism. It is to be an expression of our faith and hope and love: a perpetual outgiving of generous beneficence to every young man who comes to this source for the training and culture he needs for the work of a good, true life. Not only are young men to be trained there in preparation for the ministry, but also for every official place in the church; to know the church better; to know life better; to go out into the places of its industries, the circles of its society, the care of its interests and responsibilities, rightly prepared to receive its trusts and to do its work as Christian men. He who puts his money and prayer into such an institution perpetuates his own life and multiplies his power for good; yes, and grows larger under the operation. Let me appeal to you to do all that can be done by the session of our Annual Conference. Will the pastors please present this cause, each to his own people? I appeal to our laymen in the district to contribute liberally to a cause in every way worthy of their confidence and support. The subject has already been brought to their attention at the quarterly meetings; let it now be entertained with the convictions and interests of a special call to act. Why should not $5,000 be put by this district—the people in it—into this college at once? I see no reason.

Bishop Galloway says: "The college is an assured fact. The remaining $12,000 necessary to make up the $100,000 will be easily raised before December. Largely more than that amount can be had with a united effort. Presiding elders are requested to carry out the resolutions of the Joint Committee, and see that the great enterprise is properly presented to every pastoral charge. Endowment notes will be forwarded on application to Maj. R. W. Millsaps, Jackson, Miss. The subscription books will be made up by districts and pastoral charges, giving to each full credit for all contributions to this connexional movement."

Let us remember that this "great enterprise" is truly a "connexional movement." It is not in the interest of a party; is not for building up any special place; is not the rival of any other school; but is to be the property of the church, a school in the service of the educational work of the church, and, therefore, as much the property of one member of our church as another, and the agent of all in the noblest achievements of Christian development and work.

Brethren, let us put our funds and faith into this bank. Both will go to the manifold blessing of the living future. W. T. J. SULLIVAN.

Starkville, Mississippi.

College Location.

Very properly the location of the Mississippi Methodist College for boys is exciting a good deal of interest. Where is the best place for it?

I. It should not be located in a whisky town. Some of the brethren seem to think that whisky exerts no influence at all in matters of this sort; that wherever the college is located it is understood that whisky must go. That is an after consideration. It is no easy matter to get whisky out of some of our Mississippi towns. You will either have to get a majority of the voters to sign a petition to the Legislature to pass a prohibitory law for the town, or hold a special election in the county to determine the matter; and past experience has proven that most of the towns now holding for the college are for whisky. The county might be against the open sale, and the town in favor of it. We don't want our college in such a town. The moral sentiment of the town itself should be strong enough to vote whisky out. A prohibition town usually is more moral in other respects than a whisky town. My understanding is that Brandon, Wesson, Winona, Crystal Springs and probably Verona are dry towns and will remain so.

2. It should not be located in a town that would not give much to the endowment fund. This is almost the test of a town's real interest in the Mississippi Methodist College. If very little is given to the endowment fund—just enough to say that something was given by one of the competing towns—it seems to me that it does not show very much real interest in the success of the enterprise. It wants the college for the real pecuniary benefit it will be to the town. On that score Jackson, Wesson and Winona can claim much consideration. Other places have done very well. Let our committee make no mistake in its recommendation.

Let me say, in the last place, that the college ought to be located where it is accessible, healthy and moral, and where the people show a determination to support it as far as possible. The bids for the location ought be considered with the other advantages named in this article. Give us a college located where our boys will be free from the common vices of the day, or as free as possible, and it will more than compensate for the largest and amplest equipment if located in the wrong place.

If our friends at Winona will do their best, they certainly have advantages over any other place in the State.

Another Worker Called Away.

Death has again invaded our Conference and claimed our excellent recording secretary, Miss Bessie Fearn. She died in Jackson, Friday night, October 25. Our hearts are overwhelmed with sorrow when we think of our great loss. But her triumphant death assures us that for her it was only a transfer from earth to heaven. Eternal gain! Since God has claimed her, too, for the "home" above, we look to him to raise up another to carry on her work. With "our sainted Clara," who passed through the deep waters, she has joined the celestial host in the city of our God.

"Why should we mourn departing friends,
Or shake at death's alarms?
'Tis but the voice that Jesus sends
To call them to his arms."

With tenderest sympathy for her loved ones, we bow in submission to his will.

From the Work.

SHILOH CIRCUIT, MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.

Mr. Editor: I am now closing out my third year on the Shiloh circuit, Mississippi Conference. And while we have had a very serious year in some respects, in others we have had a very pleasant and prosperous year. I have received sixty-seven members up to date, and hope to get more yet. I think the work is in very good condition; much better than I could hope for at one time. My family was sick for about four months, so that to have done them justice I ought not to have left them at all, and three of our precious children died, and at the same time I was down with flux for some time, and then was so feeble for three months that I was hardly able to do my work at all. Hence I could not visit as I would have done; and visiting is a very important part of a pastor's work; but the good Lord has greatly blest us in that we have had a prosperous year. Finances tolerably well up, and especially the collections ordered by the Conference much ahead of previous years, and I hope to be able to report assessments paid in full. We have had some good meetings and I have received some very old persons this year. I have received three ladies about seventy-three years old each, and another about sixty-three, and a brother about sixty or sixty-five, and others about middle age. Our Shiloh Camp Meeting was very good. I was assisted by our presiding elder, P. A. Johnston, Dr. W. C. Black, W. W. Morse, J. S. Parker, J. N. Tucker and I. L. Peebles, of the traveling connection, and L. Kendal and T. J. Miller, local. All did efficient, good work. May the good Lord reward them! We received fourteen members at the camp meeting. We also resolved to enclose the camp ground and charge gate fee after this year, and have regular officers to look after the order; also changed the time from second Sunday in October back to full moon in September, which change I think will be a great benefit.

Now, in conclusion, I would like to ask the members of the Mississippi Conference how they would like to have the time of our annual session changed from December 18, back just one week, if it will suit Bishop Galloway. I think it is too late. Beginning the eighteenth, we will adjourn about the twenty-third, and will not get home until Christmas Eve night, and some later. I would like very much to get home a week before Christmas and be with my family, and, then, I think the preparations for Christmas times would hinder, to some extent, the spirituality of our session. Brethren favoring a change might write a postal to the Bishop at once, and then leave the whole matter to his godly judgment.

A. D. MILLER.

ST. HELENA CIRCUIT, MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.

Mr. Editor: We have just closed at Greensburg, La., a meeting of considerable interest. Rev. B. S. Rayner, of McComb City, Miss., gave us a solid week of most earnest, faithful and effective preaching, which greatly endeared him to our people; and, though the congregations were small, owing to sickness and the busy season of the year, yet we think great good was done. At 11 A. M., on Sunday, we cleared the decks with something over, and at night received eight of our young people into the church, the membership being much quickened. Besides this we have held seven other protracted meetings on this St. Helena circuit, of more or less interest. But one, however, that might be called a revival: that at Pine Grove the first week in August. Here we had a number of conversions and ten accessions. But the best result of this meeting was the establishment of a Sunday-school and prayer meeting with a number of family altars. Quite a number of our young men and women pray in public. At several other meetings we had conversions and accessions, and trust that permanent good was done. We count in all thirty-seven accessions. I am a poor hand to count conversions. Eternity alone can reveal the results. The following brethren assisted at different places, and did faithful, earnest and effective work—viz.: E. T. Denson, and D. P. Bradford, of the Mississippi Conference, and Wiley Brown, J. T. Leggett, N. B. Norwood, William Carroll, W. A. Powell (local). Added to these were some lay brethren, that did most efficient work in the Pine Grove meeting. May the Lord give us more lay workmen in the church!

P. HOWARD.

EVERGREEN AND BAYOU BOEUFF, LOUISIANA CONFERENCE.

Mr. Editor: What a wonderful influence a word of the same import will have on the mind. "Public!" "publisher!"—the same word with variations. The first has the influence to make my mind (when writing) become an eighty-saw gin, catching soft fibers and scattering them far and wide. The second transforms me into that massive machine known as the compress. However, we have had eighteen accessions and about half as many discessions to the church this year, making a total of about 200 members. Some fine theological timber, if not found; shaky, pecked, or knotty. We have had a hard year, atmospherically. Three extremes—two dry and wet. Still the manna has fallen each day, spiritually. The Conference collections are coming up beautifully, and will all be full, I think. We have about sixty subscribers to the New Orleans Christian Advocate, and five to the Nashville on this work. Sixty-five in two hundred! How does this item sound? Statistically? Bro. Wimberly is to dedicate our Evergreen Church next Sunday. Rev. James E. Denson was married to Miss Rowena Younger in the Buckle Church on the twenty-second instant. Seven sugar mills within hearing of the parsonage; cane short, but making a good turnout; cotton crop fair; corn good. Health splendid for the season.

WINONA STATION.

Mr. Editor: The year is ending very satisfactorily at Winona. We have received sixty-nine into the church, and will report a membership of about 200. Our parsonage is now one of the neatest and nicest in the Conference. The brethren expended about $350, and the ladies will spend about $90, and every room will be well furnished, and the whole building presents a beautiful appearance, inside and outside. There are now six rooms, besides a pantry. We have spent some money on our church this year. The collections will all be paid. Preacher's salary, the stewards say, will be paid, and a little over $1,000 will be paid this year to the endowment fund of the new college, and the same amount next year. We are bidding for the location of the college, and our Methodist people are bidding more than three-fourths of the amount of the bid. It is estimated that our church will pay out about $3,000 this year. Sunday-school is improving and congregations are good. Prof. W. R. Sims is to preach for us the third Sunday in November, and address the Woman's Missionary Society at night. T. W. LEWIS.

SUNNYSIDE AND M'NUTT.

Mr. Editor: My third year's work for this delightful charge is fast drawing to a close, and its closing fills me with mingled emotions. I'm glad I shall so soon meet the brethren coming up fresh from the various parts of the harvest fields. These meetings once a year are times of profit and rejoicing to me; but when I remember I'm just as likely to change places as any other preacher, I grow a little sad, for I have learned to love these good people with a peculiar tenderness. I hope there is no harm in such gladness and sadness. Sunnyside is on the Tallahatchie river, about twenty-two miles above Greenwood. McNutt lies back from the river six miles, encircled in the crescent of beautiful McNutt Lake, and any preacher that has the privilege of serving this people may count himself favored of the Lord. From present prospects we are, in the near future, to have two railroads running through this pastoral charge, giving us access to all the world. These roads traverse one of the finest sections of country rain or sunshine ever fell upon. I love this Delta country, like the style of the people; they have broad notions and big hearts. Most generally, when one of these puts in his mine for membership in the church, he puts in his cash also. They have too much business sense to expect or think a church can run on mere membership; and many that are not members say the church is a good thing, and we will help run it. A spirit of this kind prompted some generous fellows to start a church enterprise at Shell Mound. Friends came to their help, and now they will soon have a beautiful Methodist Church at that place, where there never has been a church before. I have preached five Sundays for them this year in a private school-house, but the fortunate preacher next year will have a nice church building to preach in. We have received twenty-seven into the church on profession of faith this year, and others to follow. In building and repairing we will spend about two thousand dollars. This is one pastoral charge where the preacher has no trouble about finances; he has no collecting to do—the stewards raise all the money upon the assessment plan. In my opinion, many charges would be surprised at the happy results if they would assess and read out in "meeting:" "Bro. A. assessed so much and paid so much." Bro. Joe Jones has been in our country and stirred the Tallahatchie river from the head of navigation to where it is swallowed up in the sluggish Yazoo, and beyond. His grasp of a Scripture text is that of a giant; he is fearless in his denunciation of sin, but leads the sinner with a tenderness, gentleness and pathos that is irresistible to the cross of Christ. Judging from the fruits of his labors, I am constrained to say he is annointed of the Lord for a work peculiar unto himself.

W. S. SHIPMAN.

CENTERVILLE CIRCUIT, LOUISIANA CONFERENCE.

Mr. Editor: I held a most interesting meeting at Centerville, embracing the first Sunday in October, which resulted in thirteen accessions and about seven happy conversions, and the church revived, sinners awakened, and, it is hoped, much good done otherwise.

After closing the Centerville meeting, commenced another at White Sulphur Springs, which lasted five days. The good Lord was with us in every service, day and night, under the arbor, at the grove meetings, and experience meeting. I shall not soon forget our Sunday morning service, at eleven o'clock, for I seldom ever saw greater manifestations of God's power than was exhibited upon that occasion. The meeting throughout was a time of refreshing to all of us. The number of conversions is not actually known, but estimated to be about twenty-five or thirty—some as bright and happy as we ever witnessed—with forty-two accessions to the church. I think we have more prayer meetings and more family altars, perhaps, here on my work than it has ever been my pleasure to note, owing, to my limited experience. We have five regular prayer meetings, most of them very largely attended; great interest taken; much good being done; one or two Sabbath-schools doing well. I think I can safely say there are more than twenty family altars erected on the work.

We lack six of doubling the membership this year, having received into the church within the bounds of my labors, two hundred and nine up to date. Pray for us, that we may be faithful.

J. J. KELLY.

LAUDERDALE, MISS.

Mr. Editor: I see reports coming from all points, and I will say a word from Lauderdale. I have closed my last meeting. They were all a success. The Spirit was present in great power at every point, and the results have been grand. We have had about thirty-five accessions, and about seventy-five or one hundred conversions and reclamations, many of whom began at once to work for the Master in public and in private. Many family altars have been erected and homes made happy during this year on the Lauderdale charge. We are under many obligations to the following brethren for assistance rendered during these meetings: W. W. Simmons, N. M. Clark, J. D. Crymes and H. Brown.

We have been at work—at least, the ladies have been—improving the parsonage and making the preacher comfortable. They have ceiled the two front rooms and the front of the house, making quite a change in the looks, and there is comparison between the comfort now and before the work was done. Besides the work on the house, which cost them $85, they have made and put in the parsonage four quilts. Thus you see they do not intend that their pastor shall sleep cold. And besides all of this, they did not forget that sometimes the preacher comes in tired, and they put two nice easy chairs in the parsonage, that he might rest. May God bless and reward these noble women! May they live long to make the servants of God happy!

D. F. GUICE.

MINTER CITY AND STRATHMORE, NORTH MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.

Mr. Editor: We have just closed perhaps the most gracious revival that was ever held on Tallahatchie river. The meeting was held at Strathmore, and that church and community received the largest share of benefit; but its influence has gone throughout this entire section. There were forty-one professions and accessions to the church, the majority of whom were men. In this Delta country, where but few white people live, an ingathering like this means nearly everybody in reach of the church. Bro. Joe Jones, who assisted me in the meeting, and who did all the preaching, is a man of God. He has a rich experience and undaunted courage. I have never heard plainer or more practical preaching, and I have rarely, if ever, seen more satisfactory results. Bro. Jones has the hearty endorsement of myself and my good people. J. W. MALONE, P. C.

BOOKS.

The Nursery Lesson Book. By Philip G. Hubert, Jr. G. P. Putnam's Sons, New York. Eyrich, 130 Canal St., New Orleans.

This is a "guide for mothers in teaching young children:" containing fifty easy lessons, "each lesson combining simple and progressive instruction in reading, writing, arithmetic, drawing and singing." The method of teaching pursued in this book has been approved by many modern teachers of experience and intelligence as the simplest and the best for the young. The object is to enlist the attention by awaking interest in what is taught. An object-lesson is the easiest lesson learned and the one best retained. A child learns to read before learning an artificially arranged alphabet. At the same time and in the same lesson he learns writing, arithmetic and drawing. Verily, the world is moving in more directions than one.

Drifting from Mid-Ocean. Character Studies by Rose Porter. Anson D. F. Randolph & Co., New York. Price, $1 25.

This pleasant little book is a sequel to Summer Driftwood and The Winter Fire, and will help beguile the winter evenings. The style is easy, and the sketches of character are, in the main, quite entertaining. A vein of deep, evangelical piety pervades the book from beginning to end, and renders it a helpful companion while it entertains us with its "sketches."

PERIODICALS.

—Christian Thought, for October, has an exceptionally good table. Indeed, we have come to value this bimonthly above many more pretentious periodicals. In the present number we have, The Necessity of Faith, by Alexander Mackay-Smith, S. T. D.; Woman's Work in the Modern Church, by Jane M. Bancroft, Ph. D.; Is There Any Other Science Than Physical? If So, What and Why—a Symposium in which Prof. Noah Davis, Rev. Joseph Cook, Prof. F. H. Smith, Prof. Simon Newcomb, Sir J. W. Dawson and Dr. R. B. Fairbairn take part. The Cash Value of Conscience, is by G. M. Powell; and Man's Inheritance in the Sabbath, is by Rev. G. R. Pike. Dr. Rivers contributes, No Substitute for Christianity. The editor has the usual Reviews. W. B. Ketcham, 13 Cooper Union, New York. Price, $2; clergymen, $1 50.

—St. Nicholas, for November, is full to overflowing. It is a new volume with new type and more pages. It is the most beautiful specimen of a magazine that art and taste and money can send out. Always a favorite with the boys and girls, it will now take a deeper hold upon their affections. Century Company, Union Square, New York. Price, $3.

PAMPHLETS.

—Campbellism not of God, is a pamphlet of 16 pages issued by our House in Nashville, for ten cents. It is written by Rev. J. S. Smith, of the Missouri Conference.

—The Elocutionist's Annual. No. 17. This is one of the best series of Speakers published. Published by the Penn Publishing Company, Philadelphia. Price: cloth, 50 cents; paper, 30 cents.

The same company sends us, Tableaux, Charades and Pantomines. The price is the same.

The same company sends us, Jokes, gathered by Henry Firth Wood. Price, 25 cents.

The same company sends us, Handbook of Pronunciation and Phonetic Analysis, by John H. Bechtel. This is a valuable book, showing the correct pronunciation of five thousand words.

Missionary.

THE MISSIONARY'S CALL.

BY REV. N. BROWN.

My soul is not at rest. There comes a strange
And secret whisper to my spirit, like
A dream of night, that tells me I am on Enchanted ground. Why live I here? The vows
Of God are on me, and I may not stop
To play with shadows or pluck earthly flowers,
Till I my work have done, and rendered up
Account. The voice of my departed Lord,
"Go, teach all nations," from the eastern world
Comes on the night air, and awakes my ear.

And I will go. I may no longer doubt
To give up friends, and home, and idol hopes,
And every tender tie that binds my heart
To thee, my country! Why should I regard
Earth's little store of borrowed sweets? I care
Have had enough of bitter in my cup
To show that never was it his design
Who placed me here that I should live in ease,
Or drink at pleasure's fountain.

Henceforth, then,
It matters not if storm or sunshine be
My earthly lot; bitter or sweet my cup.
I only pray: "God fit me for the work:
God make me holy, and my spirit nerve
For the stern hour of strife!" Let me but know
There is an arm unseen that holds me up,
An eye that kindly watches all my path,
Till I my weary pilgrimage have done;
Let me but know I have a Friend that waits
To welcome me to glory, and I joy
To thread the dark and death-fraught wilderness.

And when I come to stretch me for the last,
In unattended agony, beneath
The cocoa's shades, or lift my dying eyes
From Afric's burning sands, it will be sweet
That I have toiled for other worlds than this;
I know I shall feel happier than to die
On softer bed. And if I should reach heaven;
If one that hath so deeply, darkly sinned;
If one whom ruin and revolt have held
With such a fearful grasp; if one for whom
Satan has struggled as he hath for me
Should ever reach that blessed shore, oh, how
This heart will glow with gratitude and love!
And through the ages of eternal years,
Thus saved, my spirit never shall repent
That toil and suffering once were mine below.

Why Should I Give to Missions?

BY J. C. HIDEN, D. D.

1. Because, if Christianity is true, we are bound to feel interested in the well-being of every human creature. When the author of our religion was illustrating the meaning of the word "neighbor," he told a story in which a Jew and a Samaritan figure as the most prominent characters. The Jews and Samaritans were on the worst possible terms. For generations they had been trained in hereditary hatred. Now the parable of the "Good Samaritan" gets much of its point from this hereditary hatred. The humane Samaritan traveler felt the claims of a brother-man who was in sore need of help, and thus he behaved in a neighborly way.

Dr. Thos. H. Skinner, of Raleigh, N. C., is said to have approached a man, and asked him for a contribution to foreign missions. "No," said the man, "I have enough to do to help my neighbors." "Well," said Dr. Skinner, "who are your neighbors?" "The people who join hands with me," said the farmer. "Very well," said Dr. Skinner, "and how far down does your land extend?" "To the centre of the earth, I suppose." "All right. Now the man who joins hands with you on the other side of the globe is living in heathenism, and I want you to give me something to help to send him the gospel." Christianity teaches that every man who needs your help is your neighbor.

2. Because it will help my own soul. This is not a selfish, but a thoroughly Christian motive. Anything that will broaden our souls and open them, and expand within them the purer, more unselfish instincts of our nature, is a good thing for us to do. "Charity" does not "begin at home." The comfort, convenience and happiness of your own household are so much a part of your own personal happiness, that "charity" is really never thought of when you pay for your wife's new shoes, or your daughter's new piano. But when you put your hand in your pocket to help a man who has no claim upon you, except that he is a human being, then you are doing a charitable act; and it is by training ourselves to sacrifices of this kind that a really broad and Christian charity is built up within us. If it is ever to be worth much to us, or to the world, it must be a growth; and this growth requires careful, painstaking cultivation. If this is not true, why should Paul have taken the trouble to write such a passage as the thirteenth chapter of I. Corinthians?

3. Because Christ commands it. "How shall they hear without a preacher?" and "How shall they preach except they be sent?" These questions are arguments, made by one of the closest of all reasoners, and based upon the assumption that the spread of the gospel is a part of the gospel; that the good news must be circulated.

The life of Christ, as given by the evangelists, was really a missionary tour. The Acts of the Apostles is a missionary magazine, containing little but missionary intelligence. The epistles are mostly letters written by missionaries to the mission churches they had founded. The Apocalypse ("Revelation") is full of instruction and warning to mission churches. The whole New Testament is a mission document. Can you be an intelligent, conscientious Christian and not help missions?—Watchman.

MISSIONARY WORK OF THE WORLD.—"The missionary work of the world now includes 100 societies—fifty American and fifty European—which report an income of $9,723,850, of which $4,420,613 came from America, and $5,303,237 from Europe. The American societies report 675 ordained missionaries, 129 lay missionaries, 1,133 female missionaries, 1,102 lay ordained native preachers, 10,630 other native helpers, 248,070 communicants in churches. In connection with the European societies there are 1,780 ordained missionaries, 248 lay missionaries, 1,030 women missionaries, 1,241 ordained native preachers, 15,120 other native helpers, 276,715 communicants in churches. The total Protestant missionary work of the world has, therefore, 2,755 ordained missionaries, 2,162 women, 2,243 ordained native helpers, and 644,584 communicants in churches. These total show a gain over the preceding year of 3659,350 income, twenty-five ordained missionaries, seventy lay missionaries, 140 women, 133 ordained natives, 8,637 native helpers, and 26,137 communicants."

LESSON VII.—November 17.

DAVID'S LAST WORDS.

II. Sam. xxiii, 1-7.

GOLDEN TEXT.—He hath made with me an everlasting covenant, ordered in all things, and sure.—II. Sam. xxiii, 5.

TIME.—B. C. 1018.

PLACE.—Jerusalem.

1. Last words—That is, his last psalm, his last "words of song" (xxii, 1). The insertion of this psalm, which is not in the Book of Psalms, was probably suggested by the insertion of the song in chap. xxii. The epithet last is in contrast to the preceding psalm, which belongs to a comparatively early period of David's life. Son of Jesse—So he remained to the end; always with his family affections fresh and bright; his father and his early kinsmen never forgotten amidst his subsequent splendor. Said—The word for "said" is neum, which is used between two hundred and three hundred times in the phrase, "saith the Lord," designating the word of God in the mouth of the prophets, and almost always following the words to which it is applied. Raised up on high—This feeling, too, never deserted him; the sense of the marvelous change which had placed a shepherd-boy on the throne of a mighty empire. The sweet psalmist of Israel. Literally, he that is pleasant with or by the psalms of Israel. The psalms of Israel are the matter in respect of which, and from his relation to which, as their composer, David was entitled to be called pleasant.

3. God of Israel ... Rock of Israel—These parallelisms mark the high poetic style. To indicate that the contents of his prophecy relate to the salvation of the people of Israel, and are guaranteed by the unchangeableness of God. Must be just—The meaning is clear. Under the righteous rule of the person here described no worthy subject shall go unrewarded, no offender escape the strictest penalties of law. The prominent virtue of the model ruler and magistrate is righteousness.

4. As the light of the morning—The subject is not the Messiah, as was held by several early expositors, who took "the sun rises" as the principal sentence, and the "sun" as figure of the Messiah (after Mal. iii, 20); "as the morning light will the sun rise;" this is forbidden by the collocation of words, and by the fact that this comparison would involve a tautology. It is rather an impersonal expression, the subject being left undetermined. Tender grass springing—In Psa. lxxii, 6, Solomon takes these words of David as the basis of his comparison of the effects resulting from the government of the true Prince of Peace to the coming down of the rain upon the mown grass.

5. Although my house—The fifth verse is admittedly difficult of translation. Not a few modern commentators take the clauses interrogatively: Is not my house thus with God? For he hath made with me an everlasting covenant, ordered in all, and sure: for all my salvation, and all my desire, shall he not cause it to spring forth? The covenant is represented as being "ordered in all," the idea being that it is formed on the pattern of a carefully detailed legal document providing for any contingencies, and so explicitly worded as to prevent any misconstruction. Each of the two clauses contains a distinct thought. That of the first is, "Does not my house stand in such a relation to God that the righteous ruler will spring from it?" This is then explained in the second: "For he hath made an everlasting covenant with me." David calls the promise in chap. vii, 12, sqq., that God would establish his kingdom to his seed forever, a covenant, because it involved a reciprocal relation; namely, that Jehovah would first of all found for David a permanent house, and then that the seed of David was to build the house of the Lord.

6. Sons of Belial—He contrasts the distinction of the sons of Belial with the stability of Christ's kingdom. As thorns thrust away—The reference is to thorns that men root out, not to those which they avoid on account of their prickles. The expression refers not to the attacking and overcoming the ungodly, but to their final destruction, set forth by the burning of the thorns, to which this seizing and heaping up is preparatory.

7. Fenced with iron—The poetical discourse names the various parts of the implement with which the thorns are seized and thrown into a heap. A beautiful picture of the equipment of a destroyer of evil is given in the seventh verse. ... The meaning is that the thorns are to be handled with an iron hook at the end of a spear-staff. Men are not to venture to take hold of some things with their own hands; they are to use the implements which have been provided by a gracious Providence. Staff of a spear—The long wooden handle or staff by which the husbandman may lop the brush and cut its roots without being hurt. Thorns thus cut were used for burning lime. (Isa. xxxiii, 12.) Dr. Thomson saw people in the north of Palestine cutting up thorns with their mattocks and pruning-hooks, and gathering them into bundles for the lime-kiln. In the same place—They are consumed "at the dwelling"—that is, as Kimchi explains, at the place of their dwelling, the place where they grow. It is a curious fidelity to real life that, when the thorns are merely to be destroyed, they are never cut up, but set on fire where they grow.

The druggists say Salvation Oil has no faults. It always relieves pain instantly.

"It is alleged by some one that Dr. Mary Walker prescribes Dr. Bull's Cough Syrup."

Temperance.

"The Cities of the Black River," is the title of a vivid lecture recently delivered in different parts of England. The river is alcohol with its three dark tributaries—wine, beer and spirits. "Last year," said the lecturer, "the English people actually swallowed 29,000,000 gallons of wine, 965,000,000 gallons of beer, and 36,000,000 gallons of spirits, the whole being sufficient to form a lake 15 feet deep, 120 feet wide, and 10 miles long. In spending £125,000,000 upon this, the country has created the "city of reeling men," with 1,000,000 inhabitants and 130,000 licensed houses to increase their number; "the city of the bloodstained hand," with its 700,000 criminal inhabitants; "the city of the iron doors," with its 30,000 human beings confined in prisons; "the city of the men in blue," with its 51,000 policemen required mainly through drink; and costing more than £3,000,000 every year; "the city of the pale cheek," requiring 18,000 doctors in the United Kingdom, when 4,000 would be sufficient but for alcohol; "the city of the restless foot," with its roving army of 50,000 vagabonds, and not a dozen teetotalers amongst them; "the city of the dreless grate," and all the misery which helped to raise the bitter cry of outcast London; and "the sad city of the midnight street," with its 400,000 ruined young girls; "the city of the starving poor," with its million of paupers; and "the city of the drink-slain dead," with its daily average of 330 victims. Shall it be said of this "Black River"—

"Men may come and men may go,
But I flow on for ever?"

When, twenty-five years ago, Alfred Love first advocated the principles of arbitration to settle difficulties, some person said: "As well might one attempt to drive a span of fiery steeds with white ribbon reins." This is just what the W. C. T. U. expect to do. We have harnessed the two "fiery steeds," War and Intemperance, together, and with the power of the white ribbon and the inspiration of our beautiful banner hovered over by the white dove of peace, we expect to drive them from our beloved country, and finally, from the world.—Hannah J. Bailey.

The present movement may be only a shower, but the saloon must get ready for the flood; its Conemaugh Valley will come! We shall close up ranks, the Christian men of America, for we hold the balance of power. We shall not much longer endure this indignity to woman, this pollution of heredity, this degradation and danger of environment.—Rev. Dr. Graham Taylor.

An Episcopal rector recently opened a temperance meeting by reading the ten commandments, prefacing the act with these suggestive words, "I will read the Decalogue, every one of whose commands is constantly violated in the saloon."

The keeper of the morgue in New York city states that four-fifths of the five thousand bodies that reach the city dead-house every year are sent there by drunkenness.

Thousands of people have found in Hood's Sarsaparilla a positive cure for rheumatism. This medicine, by its purifying action, neutralizes the acidity of the blood, which is the cause of the disease, and also builds up and strengthens the whole body. Give it a trial.

A boy five years old was treated in a private hospital at Berlin last year for delirium tremens.

Take Hood's Sarsaparilla 100 Doses One Dollar

The Chief Reason for the great success of Hood's Sarsaparilla is found in the fact that Merit Wins. It is the best blood purifier and actually accomplishes all that is claimed for it. Prepared only by C. I. Hood & Co., Lowell, Mass.

Just before we closed the forms we received the following dispatch from Greenville, Miss.:

Thousands hear Sam Jones; scores are coming to Christ; the greatest meeting in the history of the Delta. J. A. BOWEN.

Notice from the Publisher.

The NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE will be furnished new subscribers for $2 from date to January, 1891.

The money may be handed the preacher in charge, who is our authorized agent, at any time prior to the meeting of the Annual Conference.

Briefs.

Charles Kingsley is said to have been one of the best of pastors. In this important work, the sentiment that ruled him he gave in these words: "I try to catch men by their leading ideas, and so draw them insensibly to my leading idea."

What curious minds some people have, and what curious calculations they do make! Just read this:

It is estimated that the population of London, in their daily abrasion of its streets, wear off a ton of leather particles from their boots and shoes. In a year this would form a leather strip an inch wide long enough to reach from London to Boston.

Our own Conferences will soon be on us. That will be the testing time. Our work will be brought to view in open Conference and be specially canvassed in cabinet meetings. It behooves each one of us to be ready. It will be well for each of us if we can say, "Collections all full; net gain in membership so many." The man who has to read more than that—what will the brethren think of him?

The American Board of Foreign Missions sent out the past year twelve missionaries and forty assistants, thirty-six of whom are women. The receipts from all sources were $686,001 42, and the expenditures $683,152 98. The committee ask for $200,000 more for the coming year. Verily, the mission spirit is pervading all branches of the church and the mission field is broadening!

The annual meeting of the Publishing Committee of this paper was held in the office, 112 Camp St., October 30. Every member of the committee was present on time, and the usual annual review of the business of the paper was had. The publisher's report revealed a gratifying increase in the business. The number of subscribers has largely increased since the last meeting, and the prospect of still further increase is hopeful. A bad feature of the report is the large number of subscribers who are in arrears in subscription. We hope each subscriber will see to it that the amount due by him or her will be remitted as soon as possible. The committee adopted resolutions looking to a more thorough canvass for the paper than has yet been made. Also resolutions commending the editor, publishers and printers were adopted. So all of us here in the office, being encouraged by commendation after careful scrutiny into the year's work, lay to our energies and capacities to make the paper still more worthy of the patronage of the church. In this we hope for the earnest cooperation of every lover of the cause of Christ in our bounds.

The Joyfulness of Religion.

It is not enough to say that there is peace and hope for the Christian, for these are not the highest degrees of religion. As deep and all-pervading as is the peace—as high and bright as is the hope, there is more than even these. For the Christian there is a "joy unspeakable and full of glory." Religion in its final result upon the human spirit produces positive joyfulness. The prophet said: "The ransomed of the Lord shall return and come to Zion with songs and everlasting joy upon their heads." Religion exerts a jubilant influence upon the mind. It drives away moroseness, kills melancholy and turns the heart into a bubbling spring of gratitude. If a man has any music in his soul, religion brings it out with a freshness and power that is delightful to hear. If he has none, she will sing to his trusting soul the sweet melodies of heaven, and daily he will hear a harmony more inspiriting than the fabled music of the spheres.

Ah! it is a great mistake to suppose that the religion of Jesus is a tax upon human enjoyment! It would be a grievous thing to the great, tender heart of God to bestow upon his children a religion that would wrap them in gloom and sadness! God has not exhibited his most wonderful love, nor has Christ wrought his mighty work to fasten more firmly upon the children of men the manacles of serfdom! The redemption of Jesus is something more than commutation of punishment into a life-long imprisonment in the gloomy dungeons of despair, shut in by a darkness impenetrable by divine love! The old mount that burned with wrath and emitted the terrible flashings of divine righteousness, and was swept by the tempest of indignation, is not brought into such prominence by the religion of Jesus as to frighten the children of God back into a "waste howling wilderness," from which there is no escape! Nay, verily. On the contrary, the manacles of serfdom have been broken—the punishment due to sin has been nailed to the cross and Christians are "led of the Spirit" to Mount Zion, the very joy of the whole earth. They obtain joy and gladness; a joy produced by the deepest and broadest work of the Holy Ghost; a joy in comparison with which all other joy is as the rich melody of a trained voice to the music of a penny-whistle. Yea, whenever the Divine Spirit is given free and unrestrained entrance into the human heart, all its emotions and sensibilities are fused into one great, deep, all-pervading passion of joy in the Lord. Under the magic touch of religion's rod the barren and ugly rocks pour out their treasures of enjoyment upon the trusting soul. And as the soul expands under the influences of the Spirit's work, the enjoyments enlarge, and this process goes on "from glory to glory," from joy to deeper joy, until the transition to the region above, where "everlasting joy" sits upon every head. The religion of Jesus gives peace, great peace in its beginning, and results in "unspeakable joy" at the end! Reader, is it yours?

Tennessee Conference.

BY W. M. LEFTWICH, D. D.

The recent session of the Tennessee Conference, at Murfreesboro, was a pleasant and profitable time for the "Old Jerusalem." The hospitality was gracious and large; the social life was cordial and free; the Conference discussions were kindly and strong; the rush of business was hasty and full; the fellowship of believers was glowing and good; the preaching was unctious and able; the communion of saints was holy and high; the presidency of Bishop Keener was serene, witty and wise, and the whole session, in all the work and worship of the body, stands grandly for Methodism and Christianity in earnest. Twelve were received on trial; sixteen continued on trial; three admitted into full connection; two received by transfer; thirteen ordained deacons; eleven ordained elders; one located; nine supernumerary; eighteen superannuated; four have died; 1,090 infants baptized; 2,857 adults baptized; 57,791 local preachers and members; 503 Sunday-schools; 3,481 teachers; 31,026 scholars; $5,523 90 collected for superannuated preachers from all sources; $4,034 08 for church extension; $21,083 61 for foreign missions; $4,694 48 for domestic missions; $4,789 16 by Woman's Missionary Society—total, $30,567 25. This is the highest figure reached by this Conference in any one year of its history. While it would be but a small thing for this Conference to contribute annually one dollar per member, and some of us will not be satisfied until we realize that much, and not then; yet the advance along this line in the last ten years is most encouraging. In 1879 the Conference contributed for missions a total of $6,890 11. By 1883 we had reached $11,280 64. In 1884, $11,882 80; 1885, $17,711 44; 1886, $20,247 72; 1887, $24,829 17; 1888, $29,890 17; 1889, $30,567 25. Of these aggregates, the Woman's Board raised in 1885, $1,762 59; 1886, $2,735 72; 1887, $3,170 60; 1888, $5 266 15; 1889, $4,789 16. Can any other Conference make so good a showing? Church extension has marked a gradual increase from $2,763 24 in 1886, to $4,034 03 in 1889. Bishop Hargrove was present seeking men for the Pacific Coast. He obtained two—W. T. Haggard and G. H. Briggs—who were sent to the Columbia Conference. Three young men transferred to the West Texas Conference—E. K. Denton, R. M. Chennault, and Thales B. Reams; John F. Triplett to the St. Louis Conference, John L. Ray to the South Carolina Conference, and J. A. Hearn to Little Rock Conference. The transfer of these eight preachers leaves the Conference full to the brim. S. A. Steel was transferred to us from the Southwest Missouri Conference, and J. L. Teague from the Holston Conference. The session was enlivened by the visits and services of Chancellor Garland, Bishop Holsey, Drs. Fitzgerald, Morton, Cunnyngham, Cottrell, Smith, Dunlap, and others too numerous to mention. Delegates to the General Conference: D. C. Kelley, T. A. Kerley, K. R. Brown, J. M. Wright, B. F. Haynes, T. J. Duncan; reserves—R. A. Young and H. B. Reames. Lay: E. H. East, J. V. Irwin, T. B. Holt, S. V. Wall, R. H. Pickering, E. V. Cole; reserves—L. C. Garland, B. J. Tarver. Two memorials were sent up, one on ordaining all pastors, the other on the boundary line between the Tennessee and Holston Conference.

Pulpit Illustrations.

Dr. William Mathews, in the Standard, says that S. S. Prentiss used to say that Lempriere's Classical Dictionary was "unrivaled as a means of giving interest and effect to a stump speech. When all other illustrations were powerless, he never knew the shirt of Nessus, the labors of Hercules or the forge of Vulcan to fail in bringing down the house." The Doctor then gives a hit of his own experience in the pew, as a listener:

Do not some preachers hold a similar opinion regarding certain pet illustrations which they have found apt and effective; and is it not about time to pension off, or, at least, to grant a furlough to, some of the seedy ones that bear the scars of long and honorable service? For example, there is the anecdote of the old soldier of Napoleon, who said to the surgeon who was probing his wound: "Cut deeper, and you'll find the Emperor." The story is a striking one, and serves happily to point a moral; but may not one tire of the aptest illustration, if he hear it often, as the partridge-loving French ahhe tired of the toujours perdrix at his meals? There was a time when I could hardly hear sermons for two Sundays in succession, without hearing of the old grenadier. He was already an old acquaintance when my pastor introduced him. He (my pastor) went to Europe, and the Rev. Dr. T. preached with much ability in his place. To the Doctor's credit he it said, that he preached a considerable number of discourses without once resurreeting my old friend, the grenadier; but the inevitable came at last, and I preserved my gravity as well as I could. Then Dr. G., from a neighboring church, supplied our pulpit for a single day; and for the first twenty minutes of his morning discourse, I was foolish enough to fancy that I had escaped from the customary illustration; but lo! the old moustache marched in at last, and with as much formality and stateliness of step as if he had never figured in any pulpit before. How many times I have encountered him in other churches and in books, newspapers and magazines, it is needless to say.

Among the Papers.

After this wise Zion's Herald endeth an elaborate article on "The Church Snob."

Certainly the modern Pharisee is not a winning figure in the church. The "I-am-better-than thou" air does not seem to attract people; and no matter how notorious a man's personal piety may be, or how readily his purse strings may unwind at the magic word, "missions," he will never succeed in attracting people into the church until he strips the kid gloves off his hands, takes his place at the church door, and when his timid new clerk comes along, gives him a hearty handshake, and says, "God bless you, John! I'm glad to see you here. Come right up and take a seat in my pew!"

Let us hope that the time is coming when snobbery will cease to sit in high places in the house of God; when the man who is too immaculately good and too piously important to shake hands with the poorly dressed stranger or the sinner from the slums, will be appraised at his real worth to the church and disciplined as an incorrigible hypocrite. He certainly keeps more people out of the church than the value of his contributions to the heathen can ever offset. For it isn't so much the people who are good at long-range Christianity that we want in these days. We want men who, within the more vital circle of their own personality and influence, will try to win men unto Christ by making his example the rule and the inspiration of their lives.

Speaking of the bearings of some recent discoveries in the East upon Biblical criticism the Standard says:

Are we not always made to feel greatly more interested in a book, of whatever kind, which we enjoy reading, or the reading of which we have found profitable, when such details as to its author and the circumstances under which it was written come to our knowledge as we gain from our ordinary histories of literature? Many of us must have turned with new zest to a book which we have read, perhaps, many times over, when something new and interesting has come to light touching its authorship. The circumstances as connected with the books of Scriptures are such in their nature as to supply perennial sources of new and fresh interest in their contents. We have all of us, for instance, encountered, many times, in our reading, the name of that ancient town mentioned in Joshua and Judges—Kirjathsepher. We may have been aware of the meaning of the name, "Book-town." Yet the recent discoveries which make it certain that the period during which Kirjathsepher was a flourishing city was a period of great literary activity all through that eastern world invests the name and every allusion to it with fresh interest; not only so, it supplies fresh interest for the biblical books belonging to a period so interesting, while helping us in meeting any question of possibility for compositions of this kind at a date so early. This is one example out of many, various in character, going to show how much was to be learned of these books when the study of them as literature was first taken up, and how, as knowledge of the times in which they were written increases their value in every point of view becomes more evident.

The Southern Christian Advocate advocates an advance in the matter of support of our worn-out preachers. The idea which has obtained and been acted upon by Boards of Finance is simply to make the provision for them which was made generations ago. The Advocate says:

In the early days of Methodism, when the preachers engaged in the active work of the ministry could live in some comfort on one or two hundred dollars a year, an appropriation of one hundred or one hundred and fifty dollars to each superannuated preacher was, perhaps, all that was necessary. Since that day the expense of living and the demands on the pastorate have increased to such a degree that a salary of from six hundred to a thousand dollars is now barely sufficient to meet the actual necessities of the average Methodist preacher and his family. The church has recognized this changed condition of affairs and has made provision for the active ministry accordingly. What charge in the South Carolina Conference would be so short-sighted and niggardly as to attempt now to place their pastor on the short "allowance" that was considered sufficient a generation ago? It is recognized on all sides that this is impractical; and hence the liberality of the church in the matter of ministerial support has kept pace with the changed condition of affairs.

But while this is true, there has been, until quite recently, but little, if any, advance in the estimates made for the superannuated preachers and the widows and orphans of deceased preachers. The same meagre sums that were supposed to be enough to provide modestly for their actual necessities a generation ago were adjudged sufficient to meet the demands of to-day. Hence, for years upon years the Joint Board of Finance continued to make their assessments for the Conference fund on the basis that had been established almost in the infancy of the church. No argument is needed to show the inequality and unfairness of this plan.

Our Japan Fund.

By referring to another column, the reader will see that our collection to send another missionary to Japan has passed beyond $800. A brother, in a private note about this matter, says: "This will be the second foreign missionary you have sent out in the very few last years! We hail you as quite a successful 'auxiliary' to the Parent Board. I am gratified at what you are accomplishing." We are also much gratified, but take no credit to ourselves. We have simply placed the matter before the readers of the ADVOCATE, and they have responded to the call. The success of the collection is evidence of the enlarging view our readers are taking of the Spirit's work in evangelizing the world, and of their privilege to co-operate with him. We don't want to raise more than a thousand dollars; so, if you have not sent your contribution, you had better hurry, or you will miss your opportunity.

Rev. Joe Jones at Felicity Street Church.

Bro. Jones, received by many with great timidity, has steadily won upon Felicity people and the public. He has had full congregations from the start, and, though he has said severe things, he has impressed all as a man of great sympathy and sweet spirit. While many have, from among the outsiders, promised to lead better lives, yet so far the main work accomplished has been with the church. The Christians from all denominations have been greatly blessed. The coming of Bro. Jones has been attended with gracious results. He leaves Friday to meet his brother Sam in Vicksburg. S.

Notes.

The Conferences are drawing nigh. It is generally a time of many and significant resolutions. The Mid-Continent says: "There is nothing that satisfies the average conscience like a series of resolutions. The resolutions once passed, the work seems done and everybody quits." One of the English poets speaks of a man, who

"Resolves and re-resolves and dies the same."

There is a large amount due this paper by our subscribers. The want of this money is hindering our work in several important particulars. To each subscriber who is in arrears it is a small matter—only $2; but when you multiply $2 by about 3,000 subscribers, it means a good deal to us. So now look at the label on your paper and see if you are in arrears; and if so, please send the amount due. It will help us amazingly.

If every one of our five hundred and sixty preachers that receive our paper would send us just two new subscribers before Conference, what a good thing it would be! And if the preachers in charge in our Conferences would spend a whole day in collecting dues on subscriptions among their people, what a good thing that would be! Brethren, help us in this matter, and help us right away. We are in need of what is due us, and we rely upon you to supply that need.

The Wesleyans in England have three connexional evangelists. They are Revs. Thomas Waugh, Thomas Cook, and Edward Davidson. They were set apart by the Conference for that work, and travel all over the kingdom holding revival services. Mr. Waugh, who has been six years in this work, said recently that he had seen, in that time, 25,000 adults seeking Christ. He said further that, by comparing information obtained from different ministers of the gospel, he had come to the conclusion that seven out of ten members have been the results of revival meetings. In regard to success he said, "I always pray and work for depth and don't trouble much about the breadth."

The English correspondent of The Critic says:

London does without any sort of Sunday post. No letters are taken in after ten o'clock on Saturday night, nor sent out before three o'clock on Monday morning. There is a complete deadlock, to the infinite joy and relief of thousands, and who is the worse for it? Not our busy men: they hail equally immunity from toil and strain. Not our pleasure seekers: even they own themselves better for one day free from notes, invitations and arrangements."

If that can be done in London, it can be done in every city in this country, and it ought to be done. The Sabbath Rest movement is working on that and parallel lines, and expects the sympathy and cordial support of all the friends of labor. The universal prayer of the working people is for a day of rest.

It takes a long time to uproot the prejudices which are strengthened by the growth of centuries, but China is gradually rooting them out. These prejudices have kept that wonderful nation far in the background as to the use of the inventions and discoveries of modern civilization. It has been a hard and determined effort for the advanced men of the nation to succeed in inaugurating the railway system; but they have persevered through all difficulties, and their perseverance is about to be rewarded. The Emperor has issued an edict which authorizes the building of a railroad between Pekin and Han Kow, and there are rumors of other railroad projects awaiting the Emperor's sanction. These edicts indicate the triumph of the progressive party, and an era of great prosperity is opening to the millions of the Celestial Empire.

The rector of an Episcopal Church in New York has announced that the usual Sunday evening services will be discontinued because of the invasion of the neighborhood of persons of vicious character, and expects to be compelled by it to move the church away altogether. Whereupon the New York Sun remarks:

It strikes us that this resolve on the part of the rector is little better than a retreat in the face of the enemy of souls. The founder of Christianity came to call, not the righteous, but sinners to repentance, and instead of running away from the sinners or remaining silent in their presence, he sought them out in their haunts, and went about among them, preaching to them and seeking to do them good. His disciple, in this case, seems to possess neither his courage nor his benevolence. He gathers his garments about him and passes by on the other side of fallen and suffering humanity, for the very reason that it is fallen and suffering.

Personal and Otherwise.

There are 119 girls in the Harvard Annex, but only ten are taking the regular course.

The largest gun has just been turned out of the Krupp Works in Germany. It will fire twice a minute and send an 1,800-pound ball eleven miles.

There are five millions of boys in India in the English-speaking government schools. That is a tremendous fact.

Boston has twenty-three public and twenty-five circulating libraries containing about one million volumes.

Mrs. "Stonewall" Jackson is said to be engaged in writing a biography of her distinguished husband, which will contain many previously unpublished facts in his life.

The Chautauqua idea has even invaded the prisons. We read of a "Reading Circle" of twenty-five in the State prison of Nebraska.

In Madagascar you can keep house, live well and have three servants for about seventy cents per week.

We print the above for the benefit of those people who are forever "harping" about "hard times" and expect to end their days in the poor house.

Bishop Vincent presents all the preachers he ordains this year with an $8 Oxford Bible. Two prominent laymen supply the money to buy them.

Robert Burdette is now on the editorial staff of Lippincot's Magazine. He is a Baptist, a lay preacher, and an inimitable humorist.

Andrew Carnegie, the millionaire iron manufacturer, proposes to build for Pittsburg a fine library building, to cost $750,000.

Our Sunday-school periodicals for November are on hand in good time, and the contents are such as will meet all the demands of our Sunday-schools during the month.

Our pastor at Bay St. Louis, Rev. V. V. Boone, has been taking unto himself a "helpmeet" for the itinerancy. His presiding elder, Rev. T. S. West, united him in marriage with Miss Lillian May Hall, of Bay St. Louis, October 30. Our best wishes go out to the young couple for a long and prosperous life.

Rev. John M. Leavitt, D. D., of New York, for forty-one years a minister in the Protestant Episcopal Church, has withdrawn from that body to unite with the Reformed Episcopal Church. The reason assigned for the change was the high-church tendencies of the Protestant Episcopal Church.

A priest of the Armenian Church has come to this country to look after the scattered members of his church. He is at work in Boston.

Bro. Van Valkenburgh requests us to say to the brethren that he has a full supply of the "Special Pew," 75 cents and annotated $2 editions of our new hymn book on hand; that a fine supply of the 24 mo. Morocco $1 50, $1 75 and $2 styles are on the way here, and that he expects very soon enough of the cheaper styles to fill all orders now on file and some over.

The Supreme Court of Indiana has decided that bicycles are vehicles, and a person has no more right to propel one on the sidewalk than he has to ride a horse or drive a team there.

Some numbers of our paper, last week, contained an error in regard to Sam Jones' meetings in Vicksburg and Meridian. Bro. R. J. Jones, of Vicksburg, informs us that the meeting in Vicksburg is on November 10, and Meridian, November 20.

The Nashville Advocate will assume an enlarged form and put on a new dress the first of next January. A larger-sized type will be used for much of the reading matter. The price is to remain the same. We are glad that these improvements are to be made. Our connexional organ ought to be the largest and best paper in the church.

Rev. F. S. Parker has been transferred from the West Texas Conference to the Louisiana Conference. We welcome "Jerry" back, and assure him of a warm reception.

At the banquet given, last Sunday, by the Sultan of Turkey to the Emperor of Germany, the dispatch states that "the Empress Augusta Victoria sat at the right of the Sultan and the Emperor on his left;" but does not say a word about the Sultana! Where was she?

A good brother writes: "I am going to pray for you; not that you are an object of prayer from weakness, but that the editor ought to share our prayerful regards as well as others." It "helps us mightily" to know that the brethren "remember us at the throne of grace."

President Fitzhugh, of Whitworth College, gave us a call last week. He says the college is moving off on this session's work more satisfactorily than ever before. We trust it may thus move up through the whole term.

—Dr. W. T. J. Sullivan writes from Centenary College: "I am looking around Centenary. Here are ample and interesting grounds, a hundred acres, a forest glory, and competent, enthusiastic instructors, an able, versatile, energetic president, and a body of one hundred and thirteen students, earnestly engaged in their work; orderly, studious, reverent. The atmosphere here is that of a genuine Christianity, and all members of the college seem to breathe this air. Christianity is a lesson and a practice here. The student is gently and naturally drawn into its ways and catches its spirit. What a power for good to these young men! What a blessing to the land! Centenary will pay manifold to Church and State for all that is done for her."

—Rev. C. F. Staples, writing from Indian Village, La., says: "The Lord is doing great things for us, whereof we are glad. We have had a glorious revival at almost every appointment on our work. The churches have been graciously revived, and many precious souls have been born again. We have had one hundred and thirty accessions up to date, and the good work is still going on. Praise the Lord!"

—Rev. J. A. Parker writes from Baton Rouge: "This will inform you that I preached two and a half hours—not at one time—yesterday, administered the Sacrament, received three members, and recommended two of the brethren for license to preach. Don't you think I am thriving physiesily. Feel as fresh as a young hare."

A Chance to Make Money.

MR. EDITOR: I bought one of Griffith's machines for plating with gold, silver or nickel and it works to perfection. No sooner did people hear of it than I had more spoons, knives, forks and jewelry than I could plate in a month. The first week I cleared $31 30, the first month $167 85, and I think by April first I will have $1,000 cash, and give my farm considerable attention too. My daughter made $27 40 in four days. Any person can get one of these machines by sending $3 to W. H. Baird & Co., Zanesville, O., or can obtain circulars by addressing them. You can learn to use the machine in one hour. As this is my first lucky streak I give my experience, hoping others may be benefited as much as I have been.

Yours truly, M. O. MOREHEAD,
RICHMOND, Indiana.

Our old friend and patron, Mrs. F. R. Hardon, again announces her readiness to serve our readers with the finest and most fashionable styles of millinery. Mrs. Hardon's extensive establishment is the resort of the fashion ladies of New Orleans and the many visitors of our city. Purchasers can rely on her statements as to prices and in obtaining the latest styles. Her assistants are polite and attentive.

Mrs. Dr. A. T. L. Thomas, whose card appears elsewhere in this paper, a graduate of the Chicago Medical College, was born and raised in New Orleans, and her numerous patrons speak in the highest terms of her skill and ability. She has recently purchased a centrally located residence on Jackson avenue, near Trinity Episcopal Church.

The card of H. P. Buckley, Esq., the well-known and reliable watch and clock dealer, jeweler and repairer is to be found in another column of the ADVOCATE. He is a gentleman of high repute, reliable, honest and straightforward in his dealings.

Enterprise to the Fore.

The labor-saving implements of the household have received no more useful addition than the Enterprise Meat Chopper, an advertisement of which (describing a small family size) will be found in this paper.

Its uses are manifold, such as chopping Mince-Meat, Sausage Meat, Hash, Hamburg Steak for dyspeptics, Codfish, Tripe, Hogs-Head Cheese, Clams, Suet, Chicken Croquettes, Chicken Salad, Scrapple, Peppers, Scrap Meat for Poultry, Corn for fritters, Cocoanut, Stale Bread for Bread Crumbs, etc. Also for making Beef Tea for invalids, Mashing Potatoes, Pulverizing Crackers, etc.

The ease with which the chopper may be taken apart and cleaned should be appreciated by the housekeeper. Its simplicity naturally follows because its parts are few, and if, after long use, should any of the parts need replacing, a trifling outlay will secure their duplication, all being interchangeable. Its capacity of one pint one pound of meat per minute may surprise our readers, but it is nevertheless a fact, and a recent improvement in the perforated plate at the end of the chopper, makes it capable of chopping even faster, finer and easier than the old style machines.

A perusal of the Enterprise Manf'g Co.'s Catalogue, obtained by sending to 3rd and Hamphin Streets, Philadelphia, Pa., may help our readers to understand better the good points in this and other ingenious devices, and we are positive you will learn something to your advantage should you follow the above advice.

The Safest

AND most powerful alterative is Ayer's Sarsaparilla. Young and old are alike benefited by its use. For the eruptive diseases peculiar to children nothing else is so effective as this medicine, while its agreeable flavor makes it easy to administer.

"My little boy had large scrofulous ulcers on his neck and throat from which he suffered terribly. Two physicians attended him, but he grew continually worse under their care, and everybody expected he would die. I had heard of the remarkable cures effected by Ayer's Sarsaparilla, and decided to have my boy try it. Shortly after he began to take this medicine, the ulcers commenced healing, and, after using several bottles, he was entirely cured. He is now as healthy and strong as any boy of his age."—William F. Dougherty, Hampton, Va.

"In May last, my youngest child, fourteen months old, began to have sores gather on its head and body. We applied various simple remedies without avail. The sores increased in number and discharged copiously. A physician was called, but the sores continued to multiply until in a few months they nearly covered the child's head and body. At last we began the use of Ayer's Sarsaparilla. In a few days a marked change for the better was manifest. The sores assumed a more healthy condition, the discharges were gradually diminished, and finally ceased altogether. The child is livelier, its skin is fresher, and its appetite better than we have observed for months."—Frank M. Griffin, Long Point, Texas.

"The formula of Ayer's Sarsaparilla presents, for chronic diseases of almost every kind, the best remedy known to the medical world."—D. M. Wilson, M. D., Wiggs, Arkansas.

CATARRH HAY FEVER CATARRHAL DEAFNESS

A NEW TREATMENT.

Sufferers are not generally aware that those diseases are contagious, or that they are due to the presence of living parasites in the lining membrane of the nose and eustachian tubes. Microscopic research, however, has proved this to be a fact, and the result of this discovery is that a simple remedy has been discovered which permanently cures the most aggravated cases of these distressing diseases by a few simple applications made (two weeks apart) by the patient at home. A pamphlet explaining this new treatment is sent free by A. H. Dixon & Son, 215 West King Street, Toronto, Canada.

Our Young People.

IF! IF!

If every boy and every girl
Arising with the sun,
Should plan this day to do alone
The good deeds to be done:

Should scatter smiles and kindly words;
Strong, helpful hands should lend.
And to each other's wants and cries
Attentive ears should bend;

If every man, and woman, too,
Should join these workers small—
Oh what a flood of happiness
Upon our earth would fall!

How many homes would sunny be,
Which now are filled with care!
And joyous, smiling faces, too,
Would greet us everywhere.

I do believe the very sun
Would shine more clear and bright.
And every little twinkling star
Would shed a softer light.

But we, instead, must watch to see
If other folks are true.
And thus neglect so much that God
Intends for us to do.

—Golden Days.

The True Story of a Smart Dog.

One afternoon a group of little children were playing on a pier which ran far out into the water of a deep lake.

While engaged in a game of romps one of the boys stepped back and fell into the water. His little friends could render him no aid, and cried loudly for assistance. But no one came.

As he was sinking for a third time, however, a noble Newfoundland dog rushed down the pier, jumped into the water, and pulled the little boy out.

The children now divided into two bands. One was to take the rescued child to his mother and father. The other was to lead the dog to a baker's shop, where he was fed on cakes and other sweets until he could eat no more.

The next afternoon the same group of children were playing on the pier. The brave dog came trotting down to them with many friendly wags and nods.

The children stroked and petted him, but offered no refreshments. "Why do they give me nothing to eat?" the dog asked himself. "Ah, I see! it is because I have pulled no little child out of the water today."

Upon this he went up to a little girl who stood near the edge of the pier, and gave her a gentle push into the water. Then he sprang in after her, and gravely brought her to the shore. Of course he was treated to cakes and candies again.

But on the next day the children were forbidden to play on the pier, so he had no further chance to earn his supper by rescuing a child from the water. Was he not a smart dog?—Jennie S. Judson, in Our Little Ones.

A Mother's Counsel.

The great men of the world have generally owed much to the character and training of their mothers. If we go back to their childhood, we see there the maternal influences which formed the aims and habits of their future life.

Bayard, the flower of the French knighthood, the soldier without fear or reproach, never forgot the parting words of his mother when he left home to become the page of a noble man. She said to him, with all the tenderness of a loving heart: "My boy, serve God first. Pray to him night and morning. Be kind and charitable to all. Beware of flatterers, and never be one yourself. Avoid envy, hatred and lying, as unworthy of a Christian; and never neglect to comfort widows and orphans."

When Bayard was foremost in battle, confessedly the bravest warrior in the field, or when in his own great thirst he was giving water to a dying enemy, he was only carrying out his mother's counsel, and striving to be worthy of her name. The memory of a mother's love is a talisman against temptation, and a stimulus to a good life.

SHOOT THE LION.—A minister once announced as his text, "The slothful man saith, there is a lion in the way." As he paused he heard a lad in the gallery whisper, "Shoot the lion." With ready wit he turned to the boy and said, "You have given in three words the sum of my sermon, and that all may remember, I will repeat your summary." Then turning to his audience, he said, "The slothful man saith, there is a lion in the way." After a pause he went on, "My young friend in the gallery says, 'Shoot the lion.' This is the exact thing to do. Let us pray."

MR. EDITOR: I am a little girl ten years old. Papa takes the ADVOCATE, and I like to read in the children's corner very much. Our pastor is Bro. J. H. Holland, and we like him very much. Papa is a farmer. I go to Sunday-school every Sunday; our superintendent is Uncle Timothy R. Welch. I have one sister and one brother living; one brother dead. Sister's name is Mary Frances; brother's name is Marvin. He says his name is Bishop, and he says he is going to make a "Mesodis peacher." He can not say "Methodist preacher." I will close by asking the little cousins a question: Where in the New Testament is the word "Lord Brother" found.

ELINOR GIEGER.

WELCH, Mississippi.

MR. EDITOR: You will be surprised to see a letter from me; as much so as my papa. He does not know I am writing. I am ten years old and go to school every day. I have such a good teacher, and we all like her so much. Her name is Miss Carrie Hungerford, of Keachi, La. I am sorry to say we have no Sunday-school. Bro. Harp is our pastor; we like him very much. My papa is a local preacher. I have such a nice little pony. I hitch him to a slide and haul wood and cotton seed. My little brother Lane helps me. As all the little boys dread the waste-basket, I will beware. With best wishes,

Your little friend,

I. T. NELSON.

STONEWALL, Louisiana.

MR. EDITOR: I am a little girl nearly thirteen years old. I live way out in the country. I am not going to school now, but will start in a few days. Bro. Armstrong is our preacher now; we have preaching once a month. I have one brother; no sisters. My mother takes your valuable paper. I will now answer Amy Reily's question. It was Queen Jezebel that was eaten by the dogs. It is in II. Kings, ix, 10. As this is my first letter to the ADVOCATE, I hope to see it in print.

Your little friend,

WILMINA OSBORN.

COMO, Louisiana.

MR. EDITOR: I am a little girl ten years old and live in Shiloh, a small town twenty miles from the railroad. Have three little sisters—Belle, Abor and Florence, and two smaller brothers—John Sawyer and Bob. Papa is a preacher and has the Summerfield circuit. He is nearly always gone, and we get very lonely. Sister Belle and I are going to school to Miss Ada Hodge, and love her very much. My little friends and I had a doll dinner not very long ago, and cooked the dinner and had a nice time. Good-by!

Your little friend,

EULA BARR.

SHILOH, Louisiana.

MR. EDITOR: It has been a long time since I wrote to you. I have a little brother, a cart, a dog and a white kitten. We have two nice new rooms at the parsonage. I am reading in the second reader. I have four or five real pretty books. I have the Menagerie. It is a fine book, especially for boys. I live at Winona. It is a fine town and has some splendid people. Sister Swentman came to see us yesterday. She is always sending us something nice; so is Sister Grider, and some others.

Household.

Something to Think of.

Parents love to provide for their children; and the great object of many parents' lives is to have their children prosperous, comfortable, respectable and happy in years to come. What is the best thing we can do for our children? Is it to gain wealth and leave it to them? Some persons of wide experience question this. It is one of the easiest things in the world to get rid of money, and young people will find plenty to help them about it; and a young man who has never earned a dollar in his life, inheriting a fortune, will often fool away more money within six months than his father spent needlessly in forty years.

And a fortune given to a young woman exposes her to dangers from which we might well pray that our children might be spared.

Says Bishop Duncan: "I think I can say without hesitancy that to seventy-five per cent. of the children to whom parents leave property the legacy is a positive curse. Put it in that boy's, that girl's head, and they have something the sheriff can not take from them, and if you put them on a barren island they can make a support."

Education is not, however, wholly of the head. Here is a man who reads half a dozen languages—sober, honest and intelligent, who never was taught to work, and who has probably never done a fair day's work in his life, but who eats the bread of charity because his flabby hands are unfit for toil.

Another man, the son of a German professor, widely educated in many languages and in many lands—a walking encyclopædia, a poet and translator—living in a wandering, aimless life, and died in the street of a Pennsylvania town. He had never been taught to work!

Teach your children. Teach them, first, the Word of God and that fear of the Lord which is the beginning of wisdom. Teach them what to do and how to do it, giving them opportunity for honest labor, till, by earning money, they know the worth of it. Teach them good manners, good habits, good literature, art, science and everything good. Teach them to take care of health, and preserve life, and make the most of it for God and humanity. Teach them to trust in God and to do good to men.

As for money, that was a wise plan of the man who used to say, "I am going to deposit money for my children in a bank, where they will have to draw it out on their knees."

The best investment that many a man makes for his children is the money he gives away. The children who are heirs to such wealth are beloved for the fathers' sakes; and in the hour of their waywardness, or sorrow; or need God has wondrous ways of repaying to children the kindness their parents have shown to others.—The Christian.

A CHILD'S QUESTIONS.—A mother writes, "Ought I to answer all my child's questions?" Well, that depends. To reply to every question asked by a little child in this world of wonders would be a very difficult task, for a child's innocent curiosity sometimes baffles the wisdom of the sage and seer. Very often the only way open to a parent is the frank explanation, "My dear, you will understand all about this when you are older. At present I can not explain it." Children should not be allowed to interrupt the conversation of their elders needlessly; it is a useful part of childish discipline to learn how to wait. But the mother, by a gentle word, or look, or the loving clasp of a hand, or pressure of the arm around her darling, may show the sensitive little one that he or she is not neglected; that by and by attention will be paid to whatever request is preferred by the eager voice and heart. Whenever a child can be answered, by all means let it be done, kindly, clearly and truthfully.—Intelligencer.

The world is full of shoddy and shams, but real merit is always recognized. Thirty years ago Dr. Shallenberger discovered an Antidote to the poison of Malaria, which has had an immense sale although until recently it has not been advertised in a single newspaper. Merit alone has sold it all these years, because it cures when all else fails, and is just what is claimed for it. It infallibly destroys Malaria and could not harm an infant. Sold by Druggists, or sent by mail for one dollar. Address, DR. A. T. SHALLENBERGER, Rochester, Pa.

Color-Blindness.

An ingenious device for testing color-blindness has recently appeared. It consists in a combination of two adjustably-attached cards or surfaces, one made up of different color sections, and the other containing an opening or aperture upon a white surface, the card containing the color sections being arranged so that the several sections can be brought to pass beneath the opening of the card. The subject of color-blindness has been receiving much attention, and many of the government employees are now obliged to submit to a color examination before they can secure an appointment. It is found that forty men out of every 1,000 are color-blind. A color-blind would be useless were the selection of colors to enter into his life-work. It appears strange that color-blinds make the best etchers, steel engravers or wood engravers, but such is the case; by the law of compensation, they possess what is known to their profession as the "recognition of tone." But two women in 1,000 are color-blind. The savage races possess the perception of color to a greater degree than the civilized races. It is quite possible that color may some day play a role in medicine. Dr. Brodham, who has devoted himself largely to investigations on the fundamental law of psychophysics in connection with the sense of sight, says: "If it can become known certainly that the perception of color has a distinct and important influence upon the arraugement and interaction of the brain cells upon each other, we shall be able to drop the use of drugs to a great extent, and get our curing, as we get our ailments, largely through the eye." This quotation has more pith in it than might at first be surmised. Many instances are on record of the effects of certain colors upon different subjects. A case is recently reported where the color yellow invariably produced nausea, and even an exceedingly bright day would bring about the same affection. In this case a pair of Arundel-tinted glasses gave relief.—Ex.

TELEGRAPHING TO A MOVING TRAIN.—The idea of telegraphing to moving trains had its inception as early as 1853; but of the many forms suggested all were impracticable in that they involved a mechanical contact between the train and the stationary conductor. Obviously, it is not feasible to make a circuit, either through a sliding arm projecting from a car, or by so modifying the track of a railroad that its rails may be utilized as electric conductors. But that this may be done by induction there can be no doubt, for its feasibility has been shown in daily practice upon the lines of the Lehigh Valley railroad for the past two years. A moving train may now receive messages passing along a neighboring wire almost as readily as New York communicates with Philadelphia by ordinary methods. Nor does the great speed of the train interfere with successful communication. If it could attain the velocity of a meteor, signals upon the wire would fly across the intervening space, inductively impressing themselves upon the metal roofs of the cars with the same certainty as if the cars were motionless upon a side-track; and it is not even essential that the train and the line be separated by a clear air-space, for non-conducting or non-magnetic substances may be interposed without impeding transmission. During the memorable blizzard of March, 1888, the capacity of the system, in this particular, was subjected to an instructive test on the Lehigh road.—Scribner's Monthly.

EIGHT HOURS UNDER WATER.—During some interesting experiments at Cherbourg, France, recently two sailors belonging to the French navy were under water at a depth of 10 meters, from 9 in the morning till 5 in the evening, on board the submarine torpedo boat Goubet. The commission of examination were enabled by telephone, minute by minute, to receive the impressions of the two men who were quite fresh when they came up. Not a drop of water had entered the boat, and there was not the faintest odor perceptible. There seems every likelihood that submarine navigation, either by electricity or by means of oars worked from the interior which can be placed on the boat's sides, will soon be generally adopted for torpedo use.

VENABLE—On August 26, 1889, Mrs. LOUISA E. VENABLE (nee Roberts) departed this life. She was born in Amite county, Miss., April 1, 1859. She was married to George W. Venable, October 23, 1879. She leaves a husband and four children. She was reared by pious Methodist parents. Early in life she accepted Christ as her Savior and joined the Methodist Church. From that time till her death she lived a consistent Christian life. She was a dutiful child, a loving wife and an affectionate mother, and when she came to die God honored her with an exceptionally triumphant death. The physician (who is a Christian gentleman) who attended her during her last illness, says that in all his experience as a practitioner of more than fifteen years, he has never seen any death that equaled hers in its triumph. He says she was perfectly free from the influence of an opiate and perfectly conscious when he notified her that she could not last long. Her calm and deliberate reply was, "That is all right;" saying that she was ready and there was nothing between her and her heavenly Father, and that she had been living with a view to that hour for several years. She then talked calmly to her husband about training the children and advised the children how to live. Then she kissed them good-by. As her husband wept at bidding her farewell, she said to him, "Don't weep for me when I am gone;" remarking that the death of a Christian was not a thing to weep over, for she was only going to make a happy exchange, and would soon be with the Savior. This same physician says she left evidence sufficient to convince even the most skeptical that there is a reality in the religion of Jesus Christ. Thus this Christian woman "fell asleep in Jesus." Is this death? Yes; but it is death robbed of its victory and the grave of its sting. Thank God for such deaths! Thank God for those who, while they are crossing death's turbid stream, send back the notes of cheer to those on this side, that all is well, and that they see the lights on the other shore!

May these facts connected with the death of Sister Venable cheer and encourage those who may read these lines, and the loved ones she leaves behind, to press on to meet her in that land above, where parting will never be known. Her pastor,

M. H. MOORE.

DUNBAR—Died, near Harriston, Miss., September 23, 1889, of swamp fever, WILLIS ORREN DUNBAR, son of J. O. and M. R. Dunbar, in the nineteenth year of age. "Youth and the opening rose may look like things too glorious for decay," but thou hath all things for thy own, O death. Dear Orren had left us but a few days, buoyant with life and hope. When the sad summons came to his mother that he was sick, she hastened to her loved boy, and, with tender, loving care, with other kind friends, nursed him until the eighth day of his sickness; and while the silent shadows of night gathered dimly around, the angel of death hovered over our loved one, closing his bright eye and stilling his kind and noble heart forever.

O death, oh cruel visitor, why dost thou pluck our fairest flowers! Sad, weeping, heart-broken mother, we know you have lost your pride and your joy. To you he was tender and true, and to his brother he was faithful and unselfish—a true and honest friend; and he who has inflicted the wound will surely bind it up. May you find peace; if not that peace which brooded over Eden, that which crowned Gethsemane.

Orren joined the Methodist Episcopal Church when a boy at Ebenezer. The day before he died he prayed earnestly, and asked his mother and also a gentleman friend who sat by his bed to pray for him, too. We do not mourn for our dear lost one without hope, but our hearts echo, "We shall meet again."

One who loved him, E.

MORRIS—MARION MIRES MORRIS, son of Daniel Straub Morris, of West Nebraska Conference, of Methodist Episcopal Church, was born July 10, 1856, and died in great peace, October 24, 1889, in Copiah county, Miss., and was buried at Rehoboth Church. Mr. Morris did not attach himself to the church after coming South, mainly because he was unsettled. During his short stay, of only a little over one year, he proved himself to be an honest, hard-working and good citizen, esteemed and respected. He died of swamp fever. Dreading to take calomel, of which he had never taken a dose, he waited too long to call in medical aid. When he became conscious that he had to die, he called for the preacher and for a service of song, "Happy on the Way," and others. While we sung, "Come, thou Fount of every blessing," though very weak and emaciated, blind from death, and almost voiceless, he raised his cold hands up and clapped them together, as an expression of over-joy, saying, "I am drawing near to God." He left a wife and three children. Peace to his dust until the resurrection morning! May God bless and save his wife and children! J. W. ELLISON.

FEARN—On Sabbath morning, October 27, the Methodist Sabbath-school of Jackson, Miss., adoped the following preamble and resolutions unanimously by a rising vote:

Whereas, It hath pleased Almighty God in his infinite wisdom to call from this school our beloved sister, Miss BESSIE FEARN; And, whereas, Her faithfulness as a member, her devotion as a teacher and her earnestness as a Christian make it a melancholy pleasure to pay loving tribute to her memory; therefore, be it,

Resolved, That in the death of Miss Bessie Fearn this Sabbath-school has lost a faithful teacher, the church a zealous worker and society a valued member; and while our hearts are all bleeding and torn, and we mourn because of her absence, it is sweet to know that in life her highest ambition was to "look and live" in the promises of a risen Savior, and that in death her sanctified spirit is borne by the "angel band" to an "immortal home," where all is joy and peace and love.

Resolved, That while we deeply deplore the loss of our sweet-spirited sister and co-laborer in the Master's vineyard, and while we will see her no more in her accustomed seat guiding her class in the ways of wisdom, yet we feel resigned in knowing that he that gave hath taken away, and that whatsoever he doeth, "It is well."

Resolved, That the above preamble and resolutions be spread upon our minutes and published in the city papers and NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE, and a copy furnished to the family of the deceased.

ROBB—MARY ROBB, daughter of William Hazlip, was born near Washington, Miss., October 14, 1801, where she lived until her death, which occurred September 28, 1889, at the residence of Mr. Hazlip, her nephew. She was buried in the first consecrated Catholic graveyard in this country, over one hundred years old, but is now used as a general burying-ground. She was married, in 1826, to John Robb. To them were born two children, both of whom, with the husband and father, preceded Sister Robb to eternity. She lived beyond the fourscore years allotted to man, being nearly eighty-five years old at her death.

God had a wise purpose in letting her live so long, and when that purpose was accomplished he took her to himself. She died as she lived. Having lived a quiet, consistent Christian and member of the Methodist Church since 1833, she met death in great peace, as a messenger from God. May God grant to the kindred and friends grace, that they may live so as to have a house not made with hands, eternal in the heavens!

R. F. LEWIS.

WATSON—BILLY WATSON, son of W. H. Watson, of Western Copiah, Miss., died October 15, 1889, in the Yazoo Swamp, near Yazoo City, of swamp fever. Billy was a good young man and greatly beloved in his family. Some four or five years ago he left home to start in life for himself, and went to that dreadful swamp—dreadful to most all people who have been raised in the hills—to make his start. He had met with marked success, and gained the esteem of his new neighbors, and, while in the prime of life, fell a victim to that dread disease. In the midst of a large number of friends and mourning relatives, he was laid to rest, after the burial service was conducted by the pastor of the charge, in Western Copiah, in the family graveyard. May God bless and save the surviving family, and bring them together again where partings will be no more! He was a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, having moved his membership from this county to that in which he died. J. W. ELLISON.

AUSTIN—Little OLIVE ESTELLE AUSTIN, youngest child of Bro E. G. Austin, was born in Smith county, Miss., September 19, 1882, and died at home, in said county, April 1, 1889. She was in the field with the children burning logs when her clothes caught on fire, and before her father could get to her and extinguish the flame she was so badly burned that she could survive but twelve days. She had frequently told her mother that she wanted to be an angel.

A. C. FLOWERS.

REMBERT—Bright little LILLA GERTRUDE, only daughter of John P. and Georgia A. Rembert, of Wesson, Miss., was born May 31, 1887, baptized August 28, 1887, and died October 17, 1889. Suddenly the messenger came and bore the precious child away. An earthly home is darker, but heaven is brighter and so much nearer since "little sister" went home to God.

COWAN—ELLIS COOPER COWAN, infant son of Rev. J. M. Cowan, was born November 1, 1888, and entered heaven September 1, 1889. This beautiful, lovely babe filled the parents' hearts with joy while living, and since his departure they are thinking oftener of heaven. They understand better now what is meant by the passage, "God so loved the world that he gave his only begotten Son."

I. W. COOPER.

WILLIAMS—Born August 20, 1887, baptized and died October 19, 1889, spans the life of LUCILE, the sprightly and loving little daughter of W. H. and Nettie Williams, of Wesson, Miss. "The Lord gave, and the Lord hath taken away; blessed be the name of the Lord!"

Dumplings with Royal Baking Powder

No dessert is more delicious, wholesome and appetizing than a well-made dumpling, filled with the fruit of the season. By the use of the Royal Baking Powder the crust is always rendered light, flaky, tender and digestible. Dumplings made with it, baked or boiled, will be dainty and wholesome, and may be eaten steaming hot with perfect impunity.

RECEIPT.—One quart of flour; thoroughly mix with it three teaspoons of Royal Baking Powder and a small teaspoon of salt; rub in a piece of butter or lard the size of an egg, and then add one large potato, grated in the flour; after the butter is well mixed, stir in milk and knead to the consistency of soft biscuit dough; break off pieces of dough large enough to close over four quarters of an apple (or other fruit as desired) without rolling, and lay in an earthen dish (or steamer) and steam until the fruit is tender. Bake if preferred.

In all receipts calling for cream of tartar and soda, substitute Royal Baking Powder. Less trouble, never fails, makes more appetizing and wholesome food and is more economical. Royal Baking Powder is specially made for use in the preparation of the finest and most delicate cookery.

AGENTS WANTED.
AN EXTRAORDINARY OFFER.

We want live, energetic agents in every county in the United States and Canada to sell a patented article of great merit, on its merits. An article having a large sale, paying over 100 per cent. profit, having no competition, and on which the agent is protected in the exclusive sale by a deed given for each and every county he may secure from us. With all these advantages to our agents, and the fact that it is an article that can be sold to every house owner, it might not be necessary to make "an extraordinary offer" to secure good agents at once, but we have concluded to make it to show not only our confidence in the merits of our invention, but in its salability by any agent that will handle it with energy. Our agents now at work are making from $150 to $300 a month clear, and makes it safe for us to make our offer to all who are out of employment. Any agent that will give our business a thirty days' trial, and fail to clear at least $100 in that time, above all expenses, can return all goods unsold to us, and we will refund the money paid for them. No other employer of agents ever dared to make such an offer, nor would we if we did not know that we have agents now making double this amount. Our large descriptive circulars explain our offer in full, and those we wish to send to everyone out of employment who will send us three one cent stamps for postage.

NATURE'S MINISTRY.

BY DANT FAIRTHORNE.

How genlly Nature guides us! Take her hand
And she shall lead thee through the fairy-land
Of beau'ful existence. Round thy head
Fancy will weave her garlands; for thy tread
A carpet of delight and a sweet hint
Of life renewed shall glow in thy cheek's tint,
Soft, bright and luminous; and thy glad eye,
In which a love of life's delights shall lie,
Shall shine as a new luster, as the stream
Takes on new light with each bright penciled beam.

To Nature's influence ope thy bosom's door,
And likelier guests shall bide there than before;
A heaven-born love illuminize everything;
Sweet thoughts borne upward on thy spirit's wing;
And aspirations which all heavenward yearn,
Like the sweet odors of some incense urn.

Ah! life has deeper, purer, holier springs,
And all created seem as sacred things
When we draw nigh unto sweet Nature's heart,
And feel the Antean strength she can impart.
How all her votaries she loves to bless!
She leads to health, and hope, and happiness,
And by her tender touches tunes the strings
Of the heart's hard-worn harp, until it sings
The melodies of heaven. Calm must they lie
Who would know most of Nature's ministry.

That soul knows truest worship who can find
The link which binds to God all human kind;
Sweet hope and aspiration fill his life
Too full of joy to be at outward strife,
And all his being sets with steady force
Through life's short circuit to its heaven-born source;
While faith, like a fair angel, flits before,
To ope, with love's bright key, heaven's golden door.

The Race Problem.

BY D. W. FOSTER, M. D.

We have well-authenticated instances of peoples having been subjected by the Almighty unto others for discipline. And it would seem that the Africans were providentially put, in bondage in this country for the same purpose, and were benefited by it. They were brought up from heathenism to civilization and Christianity. History informs us that, in the case of others, they were providentially delivered after they had served out their time, and again afforded opportunity to work out their destiny. And is it not a reasonable inference to suppose that Providence will pursue a similar course with the Africans that are now in our midst? While other people were in bondage to other nations, they were "hewers of wood and drawers of water." Has there even been an instance of two peoples occupying the same country together, on equal footing, and in harmony? Is not the antagonism between different races natural? Is it not universal? It is a law in physics that two bodies can not occupy the same space at the same time. And is it not equally a law in ethnology that two races can not occupy the same country at the same time on equality? One must predominate and rule the other, it seems, as long as they dwell together. In our case, which is the superior race? Which should predominate?

Some apparently well-meaning people seem to think that we ought to educate the negroes, and some even seem to think we ought to admit them on equality! As they have souls, we ought to Christianize them. But "the way to heaven is so plain that a wayfaring man, though a fool, need not err therein." And the negroes can be taught the Christian religion without scholastic education. And it is a well-known fact that the more a negro learns from books, the more averse he is to manual labor to make an honest living. As soon as he learns to read a newspaper, he wants to be a political gentleman (so called), and eke a precarious living by trafficking in votes, or doing any dirty work for some party, or get a living any other wise than by working for it. The more plainly he sees the inferiority of his race, the more clamorous he becomes for forced equality to make up for the deficit. And some people, perhaps well-meaning, but egregiously mistaken, seem to think that by forcing them upon a social level with the whites will make the colored people equal in reality! What God has not made equal, man can not. And the attempt, however well meant it may possibly be, is not only impracticable, but unnatural and detrimental to both races. And the sooner it be abandoned the better, for the friction of such antagonistic contact is fast becoming too irritating to be endured; and it will, ere long, eventuate in a decisive war between the two races, if not remedied by wise and prudent measures beforehand. Already annoying conflicts are occurring all over the country, and before the trouble becomes general and exterminating, something that is natural, feasible and right ought to be done.

But education is not the remedy for the antagonistic state of things existing between the races. Book-learning would only make matters worse, and worse in proportion to the extent it be carried. The Christian religion will help sooth and quiet; and let that remedy be applied to the fullest extent practicable. That is our duty; but it is not our duty to educate the negroes, under existing circumstances. No, verily that can not be our duty, while not one white family in a hundred is able to educate properly its own children since the South was impoverished by the Civil War, and further bankrupted by employing trifling free-negro labor. And it would be unnatural and unjust to our own race, and absurd in the extreme, to undertake the education of the negroes here among us For whose benefit? It would certainly aggravate the antagonism between the races. Every dollar spent for that purpose is awfully misdirected, as it ought to go for the education of our own race, by all manner of means. Every negro child educated must leave a white child uneducated! And one or the other of the races must rule, and that one ought to be qualified to do so wisely and successfully. We can not educate but one of these races, as it ought to be educated to rule the nation. And we ought not, if we could, unless they be colonized. And which one ought it to be?—the Caucasian or the African? Can there possibly be any question? If both races could be educated, they would be only the more antagonistic as long as in contact here. The best teaching the negroes can have here (and all that they ought to have while among us), excepting the Christian religion, is how to get along on friendly and good terms with the white people, and to labor industriously and honestly to make a good, comfortable living as long as Providence may cast their lot among us. And the sooner they learn these important lessons, and profit by them, the better for them, as well as for us. They must be taught that, if they are not contented to remain and be our laborers and friends, they can not stay and be our equals and rulers; for if they don't learn and profit by these lessons of fate, they will inevitably have quite another experience before long—perhaps unfortunate here, perhaps otherwise elsewhere. The present state of things is fast becoming strained beyond human endurance; and in the name of common sense, and in the interest of our own race, let all good people stop talking (and thinking even) about raising money and means to educate the negroes, to say nothing about equality with the whites. Our own children need, and sadly need, every dollar that can be raised to save them from lapsing into ignorance and losing the prestige of their race. See how the institutions for the education of the white children are struggling for existence all over the Southern country. And while the white people are struggling hard to keep their heads above the water, persistent efforts are being made to help the negroes to clamber upon top of them! There are a great many people, well meaning, perhaps, who blindly misplace their sympathy and fruitlessly misdirect their philanthropy. We wish the negroes well; we wish the white people better. May the good Lord mercifully overrule and dispose of this whole matter for the best good of all concerned!

PLAISANCE, Louisiana.

A Terrible Impeachment.

BY REV. J. A. PARKER.

I had made up my mind not to write a line concerning the controversy which has been going on in your paper for some months past, touching the experience of sanctification; but, in his indiscriminate flings, Bro. Carradine has thrown over the head of Mr. Shakelford, and struck every preacher in the land whose experience of the sanctifying efficacy of the blood of Christ is not just as his own experience.

In the ADVOCATE, of last week (October 31, column five, second paragraph from top), he uses this language: "Don't listen to men who deny and oppose in various ways this experience: How can they speak advisedly and correctly of what they have never felt? Their confessed ignorance of the experience disqualifies them here as instructors and leaders, no matter how wise and good and excellent they may be as Christian men and ministers. How can a man lead in a way which he has never trod?"

If sanctification is not a doctrine taught in the Bible, it is nothing. If it is taught there as repentance, justification, etc., is, it can be correctly understood and correctly taught, just as Mr. Wesley understood the doctrine of regeneration before he felt his heart "strangely warmed" by it. I have never experienced anything about the "first man"—Adam—but I can teach all that the Bible says about him. Sun, moon and star-making is all beyond my experience; but, being facts stated in the Bible, I can understand, and I can teach these facts. I have never experienced "the fall of Adam;" still I know something about it—indeed, all, as far as it is written in the Bible; and I can teach it, and do teach it. And so does Bro. Carradine.

Perhaps the brother may explain by saying he spoke of sanctification specifically. True. Is it a doctrine taught in the Bible? If it is, why can I not understand and explain it without "the experience," just as I can the doctrine of the resurrection of the dead, or the doctrine of future rewards and punishments? I have no experience in these.

I want to call attention to the fact that while Bro. Carradine has written enough of late to fill about one-half of the ADVOCATE, he has written about an "experience," and not about a doctrine. I am willing to make a doctrine the basis of an experience; but I can never consent to make an experience the basis of a doctrine.

The poor, deluded Hindoo woman, returning from the murder of her child (having consigned it to the open jaws of the voracious crocodile), praising Allah, who has taken her offering, and whose favor she verily believes she has obtained by her pious (!) act, might, from Bro. Carradine's standpoint, challenge his competency to deny the righteousness of such conduct. He has no experience. She has "the experience," and declares it is quite the thing to do.

A phenomena attending the great religious excitements, some fifty or seventy-five years ago, was called "the jerks," an involuntary contraction of the muscles, by which men, in attempting to mount their horses, would, in the act of doing so, have the foot jerked from the stirrup, causing them to fall. It is said that the muscles of the neck jerked with such violence as to dishevel the hair of our grandmothers, and cause it to "crack like a whip." Few were converted who did not have "the experience" of the jerks. They had "the experience;" but did it follow that because of their experience, those who did not have the jerks were not converted?

In the paragraph quoted above, I think our brother acted as David did when he said, "All men are liars"—spake in his "haste."

Let us keep the distinction. Doctrine is one thing, experience is another. Doctrine depends on revelation; experience depends on human temperament. Do not interdict us for want of an experience.

Miss Bessie Fearn.

The Mississippi Conference Woman's Missionary Society of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, has been called to mourn the death this year of another consecrated officer. At her home in Jackson, Miss., Friday, October 25, 1889, Miss Bessie Fearn, our recording secretary, fell on sleep in Jesus. After weary weeks of suffering, borne with Christian resignation, she has passed away in the triumphs of that faith which hath despoiled death of its terror and the grave of its gloom. Like Paul, the apostle to the heathen, she could have said, "Thanks be to God, which giveth us the victory through our Lord Jesus Christ."

To the surviving loved ones of that household, now so sorely bereaved by the death of the sister who had so nobly and unselfishly filled the place of the mother's dead, we tender our sympathy and our prayer, that they may so live that when they shall pass from earth, it shall be to meet the loved ones gone before.

Another Call from Japan.

We present our readers with the following from the Nashville Christian Advocate. Read it prayerfully.

A WOMAN'S PLEA FOR WOMEN.

My Dear Doctor: I have been urging the claims of Japanese women upon the church ever since my return from the East. Partial response has been made to my appeals, and two ladies of our church are expected to sail next month to aid in the work that has heretofore been under the care of the wives of our missionaries and Miss Haines. For the support of these two ladies I am personally responsible. Besides the amount necessary for their support, it is imperative that means be provided to build a house suitable for the reception and instruction of Japanese women. Our mission residences are not sufficient to accommodate them.

Nothing can more distinctly emphasize my appeal than the subjoined petition from the wives of three of our best native members. The benefit accruing to themselves from the gospel, and their deep sense of the crying need of their countrywomen, have impelled them, without prompting or suggestion from any quarter, to send this request for help to our Board of Missions.

It must be remembered that our Woman's Board has no work in Japan, nor can it undertake anything until its resources are largely increased. Our Board of Missions can do nothing. At its meeting in May last it left the burden of this work on me. Can I be quiet? Shall I tell these Japanese women begging for help that our six hundred thousand Southern Methodist women will do nothing for them? That the ample wealth of our church is not available for their small need? Who can read this quiet, modest petition, whose tone is yet as deep as the voice of God's thunders, and refuse them their request? These petitioners are well known to our missionaries, who will answer for their sincerity and their Christian character. For Christ's sake read and respond to their and my call. Send your contributions, large or small, to me or to the treasurer or secretary of the Board of Missions, at Nashville, Tenn.

MRS. A. W. WILSON.

BALTIMORE, MD., Oct. 28, 1889.

To the Members of the Board of Missions of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, in the United States of America:

Dear Friends and Brethren: Feeling inexpressibly thankful, to our most merciful God for this, his great mercy and help in bringing us out of the misery of heathenism, and in carrying this glorious work of our Lord into this dark Gentile land, and bearing a sense of deep gratitude to the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, and especially to your honorable body, for all we have received for our good, we humbly beg leave to present to you our petition.

The field is wide open before us for woman's Christian work, and it has pressing needs of laborers to carry it on. We can not but cry out for help from beyond the great ocean to meet the demand. Precious souls are being swept on in the broad channel of destruction. We can not and must not lose time to win them to Christ, who died for them. Now is the time for us to do the grand work in this island empire, and it is now our most earnest request that your societies will sympathize with us, and take a speeding step to send out such lady workers as they see fit into the community of our sex in this part of our Lord's dominion.

We remain, dear friends and brethren, in earnest and prayerful expectation of a favorable response to our petition, your humble sisters in Christ,

MRS. Y. YOSHIOKA. MRS. G. HASHIMOTO. MRS. S. KINOSHITA.

Thanksgiving Day Proclamation.

President Harrison has issued the following Thanksgiving Day proclamation:

A highly favored people, mindful of their dependence on the bounty of Divine Providence, should seek fitting occasion to testify gratitude and ascribe praise to him who is the author of their many blessings. It behooves us then to look back with thankful hearts over the past year and bless God for his infinite mercy in vouchsafing to our land enduring peace, to our people freedom from pestilence and famine, to our husbandmen abundant harvests, and to them that labor a recompense of their toil.

Now, therefore, I, Benjamin Harrison, President of the United States of America, do earnestly recommend that Thursday, the 28th day of this present month of November, be set apart as a day of national thanksgiving and prayer, and that the people of our country, ceasing from the cares and labors of their working day, shall assemble in their respective places of worship and give thanks to God, who has prospered us on our way and made our paths the paths of peace; beseeching him to bless the day to our present and future good, making it truly one of thanksgiving for each reunited home circle as for the nation at large.

AUTUMN.

BY S. A. C.

The sumach weaves it brilliant leaves
Of varied hues together;
The forest gl ws like heart of rose,
In sweet autumnal weather.

The wooing breeze steals through the trees,
The blushing leaflets quiver;
The sunlight glints in mellow tints
Upon the flaming river.

On trailing vine, red with new wine,
Are purple berries peeping
From out their nest, where, lulled to rest,
The sunbeams warm are sleeping.

O'er gayest moods a sadness broods,
With spirit sweet and tender,
As silvery haze soft veils the blaze
Of nature's gorgeous splendor.

On tree and vine the late fruits shine,
In gold and purple gleaming,
And through the air their fragrance rare
Floats to me in my dreaming.

Let others sing the charms of Spring,
Or Summer's beauteous story,
But I will praise the wondrous days
Of Autumn's golden glory.

My Respects to Rev. J. B. Gambrell.

MR. EDITOR: Through the kindness of a friend, the Southern Baptist Record, of October 10, has just reached my mission home in this city. As a native Mississippian and a minister of the gospel for nineteen years, I am thankful that neither my character nor official administration needs any defense against the attack formulated by Mr. M. A. Dees, and published and endorsed by the Rev. J. B. Gambrell. And were it not for the ill-disguised purpose of these gentlemen to injure the Methodist Church by methods as ungentlemanly as they are unchristian, I should leave them to enjoy the pleasures of using an unbridled tongue.

As for Mr. M. A. Dees, I feel naught but pity, as did the large congregation assembled on the night to which he refers. He says: "At the close of this night's meeting Bro. Weems asked all who would pray for the means being used for the conversion of souls to rise. Most everyone rose. I did not. But I came home and wrote to Bro. Weems that I could no longer assist in or pray for the meeting, and entered my protest against taking professedly unconverted persons into the church."

So far as I could see, he was the only professedly praying person in that congregation who did not rise, and a large number of his own church were present. I felt then, and still think, that the motive influencing Mr. Dees' conduct was a desire to injure the meeting. A grave charge; and yet I think it fully sustained by his conduct. Two years after this I was holding a very interesting and successful meeting, and the pastor of the Baptist Church (a man full of zeal and the Holy Ghost, and now in heaven) was preaching for me every day, to the delight of my people and the conversion of souls, when Mr. Dees, who was away, came home, and, calling his church together, ordered the servant of God to close his lips. I had no other ministerial aid, and if any soul was lost through the agency of this high-handed churchly tyranny, over the conscience and labors of a minister of the gospel, I am sure it was not charged to the account of this sweet-spirited servant of God. I had known the venerable man of God from my childhood, and he came to me humiliated to a degree pitiable to behold, and said: "You know me, and that it is not my fault that I do not preach for you and your good people. I love you and them; so go on with your meeting, and I will pray for you. They can't keep me from doing that." Neither my opinion, nor my appreciation, nor that of my congregation was changed toward the dear, good man by this act; but of Mr. Dees, whose idea of Christian obligation is to compel the poor sinner to choose between a pool of water and the devil, I only feel a pity. It is true that Mr. Dees wrote his protest; but, as he was the only one, so far as I could learn, who placed such a construction upon the language of Bro. Atkinson, and as it was the opinion of all to whom I spoke about it that he only desired to get up a controversy for the purpose of injuring the meeting, I paid no attention to him then, and make but two observations now:

First. During the four years I was pastor of the Methodist Church in Moss Point, I received between seventy-five and one hundred members into the church, and I am quite sure that they have quite as good standing as Christians in that community as has Mr. M. A. Dees.

Second. Whoever states that I ever proposed or actually did receive members into the church on conditions other than those given in the Discipline, does so at the expense of the truth.

As for the Rev. Mr. Gambrell and his attempt to practice a pious fraud on his readers, I have a few very plain observations. He says: "If a knowledge of that fact sets others to putting up the fence, our purpose will be achieved." A knowledge of what facts? The following: "Below are two letters, which we print without comment, except to ask the reader to imagine one of these preachers rejecting candidates for membership, under this teaching, because the candidates could not make a profession of faith in Christ. Imagine it, if you can." Why does Mr. Gambrell wait until Bro. Thompson's lips are closed in death, Bro. Atkinson is transferred to Texas, and I to Mexico, to make this attack upon us? The reported conversation with Bro. Thompson occurred eleven years ago, and that of Bro. Atkinson and myself was ten years ago. Then why did he wait until he supposed we could not reply to his attacks before he made them? And has not an honorable and unbonored grave no sacredness for him? Then verily we shall no more sing:

"There is a calm for those who weep,
A rest for weary pilgrims bound;
They softly lie and sweetly sleep
Low in the ground."

Again he says: "If, when the evidence is all in, anyone believes we have slandered anybody, or violated the ninth commandment, we will try to live on the best we can." From this I infer he has coolly started out to make a point against "these preachers," and proposes to make it and then stand by it, regardless of public opinion in the matter. No doubt such a man would feel as contented and happy under the feeling that he had slandered a brother minister or a sister church as would a fish in water. But will he read this?

"Good name, in man and woman, dear my lord,
Is the immediate jewel of the soul:
'Who steals my purse, steals trash,' 'tis something, nothing,
'Twas mine, 'tis his, and has been slave to thousands;
But he that filches from me my good name,
Robs me of that which not enriches him,
And makes me poor indeed."

J. M. WEEMS.

CITY OF MEXICO, Oct. 19, 1889.

To the Members of the Mississippi Conference.

DEAR BRETHREN: It seems that my recent brief notice was not explicit enough. Hence I now write to suggest that your information concerning the Conference claimants be answers to the following questions:

1. What is the age and general health of the claimant?

2. How many members are there in the family?—their respective age, sex and general health.

3. Does the claimant own a home?

4. What income, if any, has the claimant? and from what sources?

5. Has the claimant any child or children in condition to afford the claimant a support?

Any other facts will be gladly received. Inferences are not desired. A statement that "the claimant is needy, worthy and deserving" has no weight with the Joint Board. Such a report once covered a comfortable home, two hundred and forty acres of land, and an able-bodied son-in-law who lived in the house and tilled the land. Let us have the facts and all the facts in every case. The fund is too small to be frittered away. It is a sacred trust fund, and must not be given to those who do not need it. The Joint Board are trustees who must comply with the terms of their trust. Those who do not need have no claims on it.

In conclusion, let me urge every preacher to bring up every cent of the assessment on his charge for this purpose. It is sorely needed. Don't fail, I beg of you! T. L. MELLEN.

A Review.

Some writer has suggestively and appropriately said: "Do not wait till after death to indite merited encomiums." It is not more strikingly applicable to any class than ministers; hence a review of some of those who have labored here: Rev. S. M. Thames, a thinker of earnestness and depth, imbued with the reality of religion and the fearfulness of sin, boldly and uncompromisingly proclaims the gospel. Rev. B. F. Phillips, characterized by a geniality of heart and manner, is evangelistic in protracted meetings; seeks the erring by the wayside, tells of God's love in the grog shop, cheers each home that he visits with prayer, and often charms the weary with melodious song. Zealous and fearless, his sermons rounded to rhetorical perfection, and a worker in Sabbath schools make up the salient points of Rev. H. R. Tucker. Rev. Q. A. Oates presents sermons full of didactic instruction, attacks the prominent evils of the day, and is a man of marked decision of character and uncomplaining self-sacrifice. Rev. J. L. Futrell is a worker and builder, specially gifted in prayer and a preacher of thought and illustration.

Of visiting ministers, we remember Bro. Howells' well-classified fire sermons. Rev. T. J. Newell, impressive, dignified and scholarly. Rev. S. D. Long, with a charm of manner, is potent in sermons and beautiful in example. "Gilderoy," with his facile pen, witticisms, earnestness and love of children, leaves a pleasing remembrance. Rev. J. D. Cameron, kindly in face and mien, estops the thoughtless and awakes the church member with his excellent sermons. Bro. Dye is a fine reasoner, with beauty of expression and earnestness of soul. Drs. Wier and Sullivan, cultivated and kind, their sermons bearing the impress of research, logic and analysis. Our recent minister, Rev. H. T. Gaines, preaches practical sermons, interspersed with homely illustrations attracting the careless, warning the wayward, cheering and comforting the weak. He is faith-inspiring; a devout, consecrated Christian. In a meeting held by him in September at Hebron Church, the membership was aroused and impressions made that will last to eternity. Bro. Gaines won the hearts of this people, and their wishes and prayers follow him. He is ripe in religious experience and good works, and he met the demand of all classes here. May he be sent to us again!

VANCLEAVE CIRCUIT, MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.

MR. EDITOR: It has been some time since I have written you about Vancleave circuit. I am happy this morning over the prospects that lie out before me on Vancleave circuit. The year is nearly at a close, and we are one year nearer heaven.

Our fourth Quarterly Conference has just been held. Quarterly Conference and New Prospect Camp Meeting were held together. The business of Conference was dispatched in a business-like manner by our beloved presiding elder. The stewards and all the officers of the Conference were examined as to what they have read during the year. Dr. West is doing good on this district. We are praying for him to be sent back next year. The local preachers and exhorters made fine reports. Their characters were passed and licenses renewed. Oh! what a noble band of local preachers we have on this circuit! I love these local preachers. I am about ready for Conference. All assessments paid but fourteen dollars; will have that soon.

Our camp meeting was a perfect success. My heart was made glad by the coming of Bros. G. D. Anders and L. R. Whittington from Centreville, my old home. They made many friends, and did some good preaching, which resulted in the conversion of many precious souls. Bro. B. Jones was with us, and preached once. We had fourteen preachers. Several precious Christian ladies from Felicity Street Church, New Orleans, were here, and did good talking, singing and praying at the altar. God bless those ladies! Bros. Walker and Miles and several brethren from adjoining circuits was with us, and did good. It is said by the brethren that this is the best meeting we had for several years. Bro. G. D. Anders preached a sermon from I. Chron. xxix, 5, on consecration. After services were over a good sister handed me fifty cents, and asked me to send it to you, to send another missionary to Japan. I suggested that she get more; so she and other ladies, after thirty minutes' work, handed me twelve dollars to be reported (collected by the ladies at New Prospect Camp Ground, twelve dollars). In the course of an hour an old father and mother in Israel handed me two dollars, to be reported to another missionary to Japan (Rev. John Flurry and wife, two dollars).

Oh! how happy I am here on Vancleave circuit! If the Conference sends me away from here, how sad I will be! If they send me back, Mr. Editor, I want you to come to our camp meeting next year. I know you will enjoy it.

I want to say to fathers and mothers, brothers, sisters, and my many friends in Wilkinson and Amite counties, that I appreciate all they have done for me. I am here among so many kind people. God has blessed me wonderfully. I am more determined to be a Christian, more determined to be self-sacrificing than ever before. May God's blessings still be upon Vancleave circuit!

M. L. WHITE, P. C.

FANNIN CIRCUIT, MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.

MR. EDITOR: Our protracted meeting at this church began September 14, and closed September 24, 1889. We had made arrangements to have Bro. Joe J. Jones with us, but for some cause unknown to us he did not come. For months many had been praying for a revival of religion in our midst. Accordingly on Thursday night, after six days incessant labor and prayer, during the altar exercise, the Holy Spirit was poured out upon us to the joy of many souls; sinners were justified and regenerated, and many Christians were made exceedingly happy. In an instant shouts of praises to God and expressions of overpowering joy in the souls of believers rang out above the voice of the young man of God who was leading in prayer. Others, for the first time in life, laughed with a "holy laugh" for hours after they had retired to their homes, while many others received the blessing quietly as a "refreshment from the presence of the Lord." I do not know the number who were born of the Spirit during the meeting. There were three adult baptisms, six accessions, and one yet to be received. The church was edified and more thoroughly strengthened in the faith, "that" they "henceforth be not more children, tossed to and fro, and carried about with every wind of doctrine, by the sleight of men," but "may grow up into him in all things, which is the head, even Christ." (Eph. iv, 14 and 15.) The church is in a state of brotherly love and kindness scarcely ever witnessed by the writer. There is a degree of reciprocation from these good people to their pastor, which makes him to feel that his labors are not in vain among them. If, in the providence of God, I will be elsewhere another year, my prayer to God is, that he will provide for them a pastor suited to their necessities. Many thanks to Rev. A. D. Miller, J. F. Robinson and C. A. Powell for valuable service rendered. Their preaching will bear fruit for years to come. And to our heavenly Father he all the praise. Yours in Christ,

J. N. TUCKER.

In Memoriam.

W. M. PATTERSON, D. D.

Our churches in the Southwest being so intimately connected with our mission work in Mexico, and that work having been first projected from our city, and Dr. Patterson having been connected with that work so long, we ask no pardons for giving our readers the following account of the funeral services in memory of Dr. Patterson, held in our church in the City of Mexico, September 22. We clip from the Nashville Advocate, October 31:

[Memorial service, held in the Spanish Church of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, in the City of Mexico, September 22, 1889. Translated from El Evangelista Mexicana, of September 26.]

September 22 the Church of the Messiah was filled with men, women and children, gathered together to participate in the services dedicated to the memory of Dr. Patterson.

The pulpit, walls, pillars and table were draped with black. Behind the pulpit were the letters, "W. M. P," artistically made, and surrounded by a crown of evergreens, presented by Mexican brethren. Underneath this was a most beautiful crown of white flowers, sent as proof of appreciation by the family of H. P. Webb, of this city, and below this another lovely crown from Mr. W. H. Blake and family. A cross of white flowers rested upon the pulpit, contributed by Mrs. Blake, and one upon the table, from Mrs. Birkland. The pillars were wreathed with white roses, the platform in front of the pulpit being covered with large bouquets, presented by Dr. Weems and wife, Mrs. E. Walker; the families of Mrs. Blackmore, Birkland and Watkins. There were many other bouquets as offerings from members of the church, being very conspicuous the magnificent one contributed by Miss Luisa Roldan. The organ was covered with white flowers and black lace, upon which rested a crown of forget-me-nots, presented by the church. The adornment of the organ seemed to reveal the love that the church retained for Mrs. Patterson, who for so many years had presided over it, directing the sacred service of song in the Church of the Messiah. It would be difficult to describe the many testimonials of affection for Dr. Patterson given by the foreigners present.

The memorial service began with the singing of the hymn commencing, "Jesus, lover of my soul," followed by the reading of John xiv, by Rev. Dr. Green, of the Presbyterian Church. A fervent prayer was then offered by Rev. Angel Blanco, Mexican pastor, after which the children sang, "We shall reach the summer land, some sweet day, by and by."

The little girl, Julia Roldan, niece of Miss Luisa Roldan, teacher of the girl's school for the past nine years, and a faithful and intelligent co-worker with Mrs. Patterson and Miss Clara Holloran, delivered an address. Lack of space prevents us from making more than a few extracts from this beautiful address, and the others that followed it. She said:

"The human form of our esteemed brother, our true and faithful friend, Dr. Patterson, has passed away from among us, but the remembrance of him is retained in our inmost being ....Our great and honored brother passed through this land as a star, as a sun, giving light and warmth to many souls, leaving behind him a track of light; for wherever he went he established a church, a school. As a flower is known by the perfume it exhales, so his steps were revealed by the good that followed them. The life of him who was our beloved pastor and friend was as a bouquet of flowers, whose sweet odors are still kept by the churches, and especially by the schools, for childhood and youth were ever the special objects of his love. The churches, congregations and schools are the living monuments that perpetuate his memory, the benefits and results of which will be eternal....He was a missionary of peace and progress. Providence brought him to Mexico. His life was constantly spent in working for the good of others, and he fell at his post of duty. Sleep in peace, beloved friend! Sleep tranquility under the shade of the laurels won on earth. Already thou art at rest, worker of progress, but thy works do follow thee. Thy mission was finished when thou didst close thine eyes, and thou canst now enjoy the glory of having put the foundation of a new social and religious era in our country....Our thankful hearts bless thee, and in proof of our gratitude and love I come to deposit this crown to thy memory in the name and representation of the evangelical schools. It has interwoven in it the sweet tears, kisses and sighs of our hearts."

The crown was then placed by Julia upon the table prepared for it.

Prof. Luis Cardena, of the Boys' School, in the name of his school, and Mr. L. Gubillaga, in behalf of the congregation of the Messiah, paid eloquent tributes to the memory of Dr. Patterson, followed by the English chorus, "Home at Last," after which Rev. D. F. Watkins delivered a discourse, from which we make the following brief extracts:

"'And their works do follow them.' (Rev. xiv, 13.) Dearly beloved brethren and friends, when I heard the sad news of the death of that valiant and faithful soldier of the cross, Dr. Patterson, the verse which I have quoted in part immediately came to my mind. ....Dr. Patterson was a worker, a worker known and blessed of God. I know not what human being selected him for the work in Mexico, but I know he was directed in that work by the great Master of all the work, as has been clearly demonstrated by the progress made in the work of regeneration in Mexico under his direction as superintendent....Dr. Patterson was a prudent, decided, intelligent, and energetic worker. The great danger of losing life in the early days of the history of this mission never deterred him from doing his duty. Once he was left for dead on the roadside, and a few days since he went down to the grave, bearing in his body the marks of the Lord Jesus. One of the most essential qualities in the character of a missionary is that he love the people with whom he labors, and Dr. Patterson possessed this quality in the highest degree. His love toward the people was fully returned by the ministers and members of the church in Mexico. His patience and gentle manners in dealing with the erring caused some to say that as superintendent it was his duty to treat them with more severity; but he would often say, 'I am here to help save them, not to condemn them.' Looking back on the missionary life of Dr. Patterson, we can do no less than say he was a rare and worthy workman....I infer from the words, 'Their works do follow them,' that the labors of good men are not lost. No, brethren; the many trips Dr. Patterson made over this country, reaching from Colima, on the Pacific Coast, to Vera Cruz, on the Atlantic, are not lost; they are traced and kept in the archives of God. His labors day and night, his sermons, even those in the cabins of the poor, his warning to the erring, his help to the wandering—they are not lost. No affection shown to the children, no prayer, no effort made to save the lost, not even a cup of water given to the least in the name of the Master is lost....The last words of Dr. Patterson, just before entering into the mansions of light were, 'Mother, mother.'.... He died safe in the tender arms of Jesus, beholding his mother awaiting him at the gate of the celestial city. Blessed are they which die in the Lord; blessed in heaven, blessed in the earth, and blessed forevermore."

The hymn, "Safe in the arms of Jesus," was then sung, followed by touching remarks from Rev. Dr. Green in reference to Dr. Patterson and the family of the deceased.

The Agnus Dei was rendered in a most exquisite manner by Mrs. Carruthers, of Galveston, Texas, and Miss Luisa Roldan, after which Rev. Angel Blanco spoke, and we make a few extracts:

"It gives me profound pain to speak on this occasion.... From the time that our beloved brother came to Mexico and until his death he displayed a most wonderful activity, born of the conviction that God had sent him to this land. His ministry was perfectly carried out, and on dying he could exclaim with Paul, 'I have fought a good fight, I have finished my course, I have kept the faith.' As an evangelical minister he had nothing to be ashamed of; all bear testimony that he fulfilled his duty. For many years he worked unceasingly with perseverance and self-sacrifice, in order to help evangelize this people....The churches scattered throughout the republic are witnesses of this truth, and to-day they weep over his death. The Methodist Church in Mexico has lost its best friend, and his place will be difficult to fill. The believers in all churches saw in him a true and loving brother. We are indebted to him for much, and he looked upon some of us as his children, knowing how to correct us with the balsam of charity and tenderness. The poor in particular were the special objects of his solicitude, and for them his heart and purse were ever open....Like all other great men, he had enemies;....but we all know that he labored many years unceasingly for the good of his brethren, and we know of the difficulties that beset him constantly, and which could not have been overcome by men of less faith than he possessed. His missionary career in Mexico was one of the most glorious, and the Christian triumphs of which sweetened the bitterness of any persecution from which he had to suffer....The Savior has received him into his bosom, and will gather the fruits of that which he sowed while on earth,....and while we think of our brother as entering the mansions of light, let us seek, by means of prayer, consolation for the many who weep because of the absence from the earth of our beloved father, brother, and friend, Dr. Patterson."

The following resolutions were proposed by Rev. Angel Blanco, and adopted by the large congregation, all standing:

"Friends and Brethren: It is a law that man must die, and we know that the hour is approaching in which we must also pay the last tribute. Death brings to the living a pain that only the precious promises of our heavenly Father can relieve. This has happened to us in the case of the death of our esteemed brother, Rev. W. M. Patterson, D. D., who died in Caracas, Venezuela, S. A., August 19, 1889; therefore, be it

"Resolved, 1. That we recognize in Dr. Patterson a true and devoted Christian, who spent his life, not for laboring to bring souls to Christ.

2. "That the perseverance and complete devotion of Dr. Patterson and his now bereaved wife in their constant work to benefit the people and inspires our hearts with acknowledgment and gratitude.

3. "That while we profoundly feel the death of our brother, we admire his virtues, and will not cease to pray for his afflicted wife and children.

4. "That a copy of these resolutions, together with a manifestation of our grief and sympathy, be sent to his family, and also to the Evangelista for its publication therein."

Dr. Green then offered a prayer, after which was sung the hymn, "O think of the home over there," and Rev. Wm. Watkins dismissed the congregation with the benediction.

THE LIFE-WORK OF THE AUTHOR OF "UNCLE TOM'S CABIN." By Florine Thayer McCray, author of "Environment," etc. Square 12mo, 440 pp., with 11 illustrations and ornamented cloth covers. Beautifully printed on heavy calendered paper. Price, $2. New York: Funk & Wagnalls.

The book before us is not strictly a biography, but rather a sketch of Harriet Beecher Stowe's literary career, with an outline of each of her works, including a commentary and criticism on them, and such facts and incidents as led up to their preparation and resulted from their publication. It also contains a digest of opinions by eminent reviewers; an account of Mrs. Stowe's travels, ovations, methods of work, personal appearance, and immense sale of her works.

"The Life Work" is written in a fluent, popular vein, which will make it fascinating to the young, while its inspiring lessons will be profitable to all. The author's admiration for her celebrated friend does not close her eyes to certain defects and eccentricities, for which great writers are often noted.

MITO YASUKE: A Tale of Old Japan. By Arthur Collins Maclay, A. M., LL.B. G. P. Putnam's Sons, New York. Eyrich, 180 Canal street, New Orleans. Price, $1 50.

Mr. Maclay has already won a high meed of praise by a former work, entitled, "A Budget of Letters from Japan," many of the critics of the day speaking well of it. The present work is on the order of fiction, "being a feudal romance descriptive of the decline of the Shogunate and of the downfall of the power of the Tokugawa family." Japan is now attracting the attention of the civilized world as no other country does, and this historical romance, showing, as it does in thrilling words, the downfall of the Tokugawa dynasty, will be read with great interest.

LESSON VIII.—November 24.

SOLOMON'S WISE CHOICE.

I. Kings III, 5-15.

GOLDEN TEXT.—Wisdom is better than rubies.—Prov. viii, 11.

TIME.—B. C. 1015.

PLACES.—Gibeon, six miles north of Jerusalem. Jerusalem.

PARALLEL PASSAGE.—II. Chron. i.

5. Appeared to Solomon—One of the first acts of Solomon was an alliance with Egypt, the greatest of the neighboring powers. He cemented the alliance by marrying the daughter of Pharaoh, the king of Egypt. Then he assembled the leaders of the people, the judges, governors, heads of the fathers, to a magnificent inaugural religious festival. It was at this time that the first of three recorded visions of God to Solomon took place. The second was at the height of his prosperity; the third upon his decline.

6. Kept . . . this great kindness—David himself had regarded this as God's crowning mercy to him. That which thou didst not reserve for Saul, whose posterity thou didst cut off from the kingdom.

7. But a little child—Not in years, but in knowledge. He humbly calls himself a little child, not only as if he were just twelve years old, as some rabbins say, but because his youth was audited for the great and arduous task laid on him. Moderns generally have supposed that he was about twenty, which is probably all over, rather than an under, estimate. For a youth of nineteen or twenty, known to be of a pacific disposition, to have to rule over the warlike and turbulent Hebrew nation, with a strong party opposed to him, and brothers of full age ready to lead it, was evidently a most difficult task. To go out or come in—This expression is proverbial for the active conduct of affairs. Go out: conduct of public life. . . . Come in: private life. That is, how to behave myself as king, or govern the people.

8. That can not be numbered—There seems to be a reference in these words to the promises made by God to Abraham, more especially to Gen. xiii, 16. Solomon regards the promises as fulfilled in the existing greatness and glory of the Jewish nation. The hyperbolical use of the expressions, "that could not be numbered," "countless," "countless as the stars of heaven," is common in all languages.

9. An understanding heart to judge—One of the chief functions of the oriental monarch is always to hear and decide causes. Hence supreme magistrates were called "judges"—shophetim or suffetes—not only by the Jews, but also by the Phenicians and Carthaginians. This understanding heart was a truly kingly heart, seeing that it had a rich and free fellowship with all kinds and classes of people; a sense of that which was common to them all; a power of entering into that which was peculiar to their crafts, localities, temperaments; a facility of distinguishing the person who was fittest for any particular service; in one word, a judgment which was not determined by anything external; which had its laws and principles in a world that the eye sees not.

11. Thou hast asked this thing—Although Solomon's choice was made "in a dream," we must regard it as springing from his will in some degree, and, therefore, as indicative of his moral character. In the particular phase of sleep known in Scripture as "dream," or "vision," it may be that the mind was sometimes in possession of all its powers, and that only the body slumbered. This thing—Wisdom. Hast not asked—The prayer of Solomon related entirely to his office, to his position as king and administrator of law among the people of God; for himself personally he had asked nothing. Understanding to discern judgment—He showed his wisdom by asking for wisdom. He became wise because he had set his heart upon it. This was to him the special aspect through which the Divine Spirit was to be approached, and grasped, and made to bear on the wants of men; not the highest, not the choice of David, not the choice of Isaiah, but still the choice of Solomon. The prayer of Solomon is the type of true prayer (1) in its power, (2) in the condition on which it was granted, (3) in its answer.

12. Neither after thee shall any arise—It has been proposed to explain this as simply meaning that Solomon was to be the wisest of all the kings of Israel; but more seems to be intended. In the knowledge of what was in man, and in the wisdom to direct men's goings, he was to be the wisest of all mere men. In such wisdom the world would know one only "greater than Solomon."

13. Riches, and honor—Silver became as "stones" in Jerusalem and through the kingdom, and was "nothing accounted of," and the costly cedar-wood superseded the common sycamore hitherto used in the splendid mansions that rose on every hand. Such results of his government must have raised the fame of Solomon to the highest, both in his empire and in neighboring lands, but it was not less illustrious from his immense reputation for wisdom.

14. Lengthen thy days—The promise here is only conditional. As the condition was not observed (I. Kings xi, 1-8), the right to the promise was forfeited, and it was not fulfilled. Solomon can scarcely have been more than fifty-nine or sixty at his death.

15. Behold, it was a dream—That is to say, this passed while Solomon slept; but it was more than a dream. It was a dream in which a divine revelation was made to him. Not that he only knew on waking that it was but a dream, and not that he remembered distinctly on waking what he had dreamed (Seb. Schmidt), but, "that it was more than a dream (an ordinary one), something really divine; of this he became so convinced on waking that immediately after his return to the capital he went to the place where the ark stood, and worshiped the Lord anew, with many sacrifices and thanksgiving offerings. The thank-offerings were for this extraordinary proof of divine favor." The sequel showed that it was not a mere dream. God uses the dream as no nightmare, but as a moral medium, a highway into the soul's best thoughts. We shall see Solomon at his highest when we find him in a sleep into which he has been put by the power of God. Burnt-offerings—Sacrifices expressing entire consecration to God, in which the entire offering was consumed upon the altar. Peace-offerings—Sacrifices following the burnt offering, in which a part of the offering was eaten in a feast, a part burned, and a part given to the priest. It expressed the thought of fellowship with God, in a relation of acceptance and friendship. Feast to all his servants—This sacrificial festival upon Zion is omitted in the Chronicles, as well as the following account in vers. 16-28; not, however, because in the chronicler's opinion no sacrifices had any legal validity but such as were offered upon the altar of the Mosaic tabernacle, as Thenius fancies, though without observing the account in I. Chron. xxi, 26, sqq., which overthrows this assertion, but because this sacrificial festival had no essential significance in relation to Solomon's reign.

Missionary.

Foreign Missions.

The National Congregational Council held its triennial session recently in Worcester. One evening was devoted to Missions, and Dr. Storrs made an address of great power and eloquence, from which we quote:

Two of the celestial figures of the Apocalypse seem to be becoming more commanding in Christian thought; one, the angel proclaiming the everlasting gospel, the other, before the Son of man, crying, "Thrust in thy sickle and reap, for the harvest of the earth is ripe." It is a critical and consummating time. While this is true, American Christians are confronted by one difficulty, that arising from the immensity of the work at home. The gospel must be proclaimed in our own country. Contrast the year 1810 with the present year and the great increase that has come about. Over this immense increase we are to carry the gospel. We are to carry it to all races, black and white, red and yellow, where vice is strongest, where we may almost say that Satan has his seat. It is an enormous work at the best, and also we must fight the shrewd Roman Catholics, who have a mighty influence. We have to do this work against an infidelity vented in public halls at one dollar a ticket, and putting its poisonous arguments in polished paragraphs. We are to meet this against the secular influence, more dangerous than either of those to which we have referred. It is a work so vast that it concerns the integrity and maintenance of the nation itself. None of us wish to shirk the responsibility. Woe be to us if we ever fail or are even languid in the work at hand. How can we be called upon to go over across the seas with such urgent demands at home?

Remember I do not speak as the president of or as in any way connected with a missionary society, through I was so introduced. It is not enough to say that the work is a tradition of our fathers; because they did it, so must we. It is not enough to say that economical reasons urge us on, that we do not want to lose what is already invested. This argument may easily be reversed and we say we have already spent a large sum. Why spend any more? No, but it is enough to say. It is our Master's command to go forth into the world, to all lands. We feel that service to our King is the noblest of all work. This vaster work tends to strengthen and invigorate every endeavor of the church. Again, foreign missions are instructive in every way. This, however, is not the point in view. The work tends to lift the spirit of the church to higher levels. The early Christians were educated by the preaching that they did, and this is the work given the American church to do. The earth to be subdued is the educator of man, the earth to be redeemed the educator of the church. When it takes the work in hand, then every church is benefited by it. The gospel is a very plain story, small in compass and told as naturally as one would tell of Clark University. Skeptics are never tired of laughing at the statement that this same gospel is to be the redemption of the world. This mightiest moral instrument of the world is ours to hold and to use. . . . .

By this foreign missionary work we keep ourselves in union with the church universal. This sense of being knit together is a sense vital to the highest Christian development. Foreign missions are the instruments by which the church comes nearest to Christ. We keep the millennial ages before us by this work. But, as the church becomes idle, the millennial splendor fades away from the sight. This shows us that the Lord is still at work on the earth, with his great strength. We work for our own country with all the more vigor, feeling sure of an age of serenity to come. We need that Christian fatalism that knows when God is on the field; when he is behind us in our work making the coming years of the earth's brightness to be as full of gladness as the years before were full of sorrow. Let us not be untrue to the memory of our fathers. None can take from us our historic crown; let us make it nobler with brighter jewels as we work now in this majestic parenthesis of history, between the birth of Christ and his glorious coming in the future.

It is impossible to form the faintest estimate of the good—the highest kind of good—which a single devout soul may accomplish in a lifetime by spreading the holy contagion of the love of God in widening circles around it.—Frances Power Cobbe.

Temperance.

The W. C. T. U. of Montreal, Canada, reports 1,000 children in that city under the influence of special temperance teaching in Loyal Legions and Bands of Hope.

The South American delegates were treated to bowls of punch by Mrs. Harrison on the occasion of their visit to the executive mansion, for which the Washington Sentinel (whiskey organ) present its compliments to the "first lady in the land."

Recent statistical reports of the causes of insanity, observed in the insane hospitals and asylums of England during the ten years from 1877 to 1887, show that 13,286 cases of insanity among men arise from intemperance, whereas the entire number of cases due to all kinds of mental troubles was only 15,504.

Walter Thomas Mills ably champions the bar-keepers' right to a Sunday rest. He argues that the open saloon compels 3,000 men to do seven days' work for six days' pay, and strongly appeals to that great body of workmen, which not only enjoys one day's rest in seven, but also clamors for the eight hour limit, to consider and condemn this flagrant injustice.

The W. C. T. U. of Shanghai has been organized three years. Special attention has been given to the work of education and organization. A Band of Hope, numbering 140 children, is in a flourishing condition. The pledge has been extensively signed by pupils in various boarding-schools. A Loyal Temperance Legion in the Anglo-Chinese College at Hongkew, has given the pledge to 160 Chinese boys. The social purity work has also been taken up with good results.

We are asked: "What is the use of voting into the air?" Do you remember the archer with William of Normandy at the battle of Hastings, who, when the fortunes of that combat hung in the balance, let drive his shaft high into the air, which fell, striking Saxon Harold in the face and so ended the conflict? Perhaps we can let drive some shafts toward heaven that when they fall they shall kill.—Rev. Dr. I. J. Lansing.

Catarrh

Is a constitutional and not a local disease, and therefore it cannot be cured by local applications. It requires a constitutional remedy like Hood's Sarsaparilla, which, working through the blood, eradicates the impurity which causes and promotes the disease, and effects a permanent cure. Thousands of people testify to the success of Hood's Sarsa parilla as a remedy for catarrh when other preparations had failed. Hood's Sarsaparilla also builds up the whole system and makes you feel renewed in health and strength.

Catarrh

Briefs.

A minister wrote to the Methodist Recorder these significant words:

The greatest difficulty in the way of circulatiug The Recorder "is reticence, or, more correctly, l-a-z-i-n-e-s-s on part of myself."

In the language of the Nashville Advocate, "You, brother."

One result of the students' missionary movement, begun two years ago, is that there are now 3,847 volunteers ready or preparing to go to foreign fields, and that forty institutions have undertaken to support an alumnus in the mission work. Verily the Spirit is moving the hearts of the people.

The news from Africa is that Dr. Peters, the German explorer, and his whole party, except two, have been massacred. He started inland from Vitu, July 26, and reached Korkorro up the Tana river. It is supposed that he and his party were killed by the Masis or Solemis. Lieutenant Tiedman escaped, though wounded.

That men generally see what they look for is well illustrated by this brief story:

An Englishman, returning from India, depreciated the work of the missionaries, saying that he had never seen a missionary. Asked what his purpose was in India, he answered, "To kill tigers." A missionary who heard the remark said: "I have been in India ten years, and I never saw a tiger; I went as a missionary."

In the matter of deaconesses, the recent convention of the Episcopal Church followed along in the wake of the Methodist brethren, North. Other churches are talking of the matter, specially the Presbyterian and Reformed. Our own brethren are cogitating the same subject, and we expect the matter will be brought up before our next General Conference. From what we can see and hear, the adoption of some thing of that sort for the women of our church is only a question of time. Some of our foremost men are now studying the question very intensely.

It is an evidence of the growth of missionary enterprise and sentiment, that during the past year the British Foreign Missionary Societies have contributed $6,134,000 for work in pagan and Mohammedan lands. Of this amount $2,300,000 came from societies connected with the Church of England; $1,885,000 from English and Welsh Nonconformists, and $1,015,000 from the Presbyterians in Scotland and Ireland. And yet, when we look at the field to be worked and the wealth of Christions, that seems a very small amount. No church ought to be satisfied until it gives as much for missions as it does for its own support, nor ought any individual Christian be satisfied until he gives as much to support a missionary as he gives to support his own pastor. Bishop Keener says that what the church needs now is a conscience of missions, and it is a true saying.

Report of the Publishing Committee of the New Orleans Christian Advocate.

The Publishing Committee of the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE met pursuant to call in the ADVOCATE office, 112 Camp street, New Orleans, October 30, 1889. Every member was present, and each gave patient attention to the various interests of the ADVOCATE in detail.

The publisher's report showed a steady increase in the number of subscribers. The present issue of the paper is 7,000, there being 6,327 bona-fide subscribers, an increase over last year of nearly 1,200. While this showing is gratifying from one point of view, it is by no means satisfactory. The Methodists of Mississippi and Louisiana should give the organ of their Conferences a much larger circulation than that, to say nothing of the thousands of subscribers they might secure outside their communion. In the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE we have a pure, elevated, religious literature, free alike from sensational trash and denominational strife. The paper is high-toned and conservative, and sound in its teachings. It can be read with interest and profit by both old and young. Methodist people within the bounds of Mississippi and Louisiana should give it the precedence of all other periodical literature. No Methodist home is properly equipped without the ADVOCATE. After the Bible, hymn book and Discipline should come the church paper; and the children of our church should be brought up under the influence of a pure literature. I am persuaded that not one parent in ten appreciates the value of a good religious paper in its influence upon the children in their formative period.

The financial condition of the ADVOCATE is hardly satisfactory, owing to the fact that so many subscribers are in arrears. If the pastors can collect the outstanding indebtedness of subscribers, the ADVOCATE will be able to meet all expenses, and more. Accounts have been sent to agents, and the publisher stands ready to correct all errors, real or imaginary, in order to effect satisfactory settlements. Let all concerned work together to put our paper on a cash and solid basis. The matter of reducing the price of the paper was considered, and it was manifest that it can not be published at a lower price than $2 with the present subscription. If we could run it up to 10,000 cash subscribers, our way might be open to a reduction of price. It is cheap at $2, and it is a question whether those who refuse to subscribe for it on account of its price would take it if it cost them only $1. The editorial and business management of the paper was approved by a resolution of the committee. We are specially indebted to Bro. Grant, the publisher, for the part he is taking in the maintenance of the paper.

The following resolutions were adopted, which speak for themselves:

Resolved, That we make an earnest effort, during the ensuing year, to raise the subscription list of the ADVOCATE to ten thousand names.

Resolved, That we request the privilege of making a canvass for subscribers on the floor of the patronizing Annual Conferences at some time most favorable during the session of said Conferences, and that this privilege of canvassing be requested also of the District Conferences throughout the patronizing territory.

Resolved, That the Publishing Committee, in their respective Conferences, shall endeavor as far as practicable, to carry out the provisions and secure the ends proposed in the above resolutions. (Signed)

T. C. WIER,
J. D. CAMERON.

The resolutions were amended so as to apply the principle to Church Conferences and Quarterly Conferences as well as to District and Annual.

W. B. LEWIS,
For Committee.

Consciousness of Our Mission.

Just before our Lord wrought one of his great miracles, he said: "I must work the works of him that sent me, while it is day: the night cometh when no man can work." As affecting human life and human society, this is a very great saying. Here is the recognition of a mission in life, and the avowal to meet all its claims as they arise. Our Lord distinctly states that he was sent into the world for a certain purpose, and that he knew what that purpose was, and that his whole energy would be put forth to accomplish that purpose by the time his life should come to a close. When we read the record of his life, we see that every word and act demonstrated that there was in him an intense consciousness of his mission. This consciousness was never weakened nor dimmed by any thoughts or feelings within him, nor by any circumstances without him. When surrounded by an uproarious multitude anxious to crown him king, he moved along his appointed course with a majestic calmness and inflexibility the most wonderful in human history. When looking with clear vision into the awful depths of the coming tragedy of Calvary, his consciousness of his mission and his purpose to fulfill it are manifested in the solemn words: "I have a baptism to be baptized with, and how am I straitened until it be accomplished." We doubt not, the very tones of his voice gave evidence that he had an intense conviction that he was on a special mission—that there was something for him to do, and the same evidence gleamed forth in every act of his life. This consciousness, this conviction arose from the fact that he was sent. That fact not only opened up to him privileges and opportunities, but laid upon him new burdens and fresh responsibilities, and by these the consciousness was quickened into a vitality that ruled his whole career.

When we examine closely we see the same consciousness dominating the whole life of St. Paul. From the day of his conversion "nigh unto Damascus," until his martyrdom in Rome, the intense conviction that he had a "work to do" was the incentive behind every act and word of his wonderful life. He never seems to have lost this consciousness for one moment. In the court of kings or in dungeons, before philosophers and the unlearned, he seemed to be ever echoing the words of his Master: "I must work the works of him that sent me."

The same thing is true of all other successful men in any line of the world's work. This consciousness of mission is necessary to success, and the success is proportionate to the intensity of the consciousness. When a man reaches the conviction that a thing must be done, and that he is the one to do it, he has taken a long step toward the performance of that very thing. And when the further conviction comes, that if he does not do it, then it will not be done at all, and he will be responsible for all the consequences of failure, he will be stirred to put forth every energy to achieve success. The consciousness of mission, then, carries with it the responsibility of both success and failure, and this fearful burden is what extorted the cry from St. Paul: "Who is sufficient for these things?"

And yet this consciousness is what many hundreds, yea, thousands, of Christians need to-day. This is the day for "working the works of him that sent us." Every man and woman has a mission. Each one is "sent." Each is an apostle. God has "sent" no one upon an aimless mission. There is something for each one to do, and no one else can do it. Each one has as much as he can do during his probation, and, therefore, he can not lighten the load or share the responsibility of another. What each one needs is a clear, sharp, stinging, driving consciousness of his own special mission in the world. When each minister and each member of the church gets this sort of conviction, then we shall see "the pleasure of the Lord prospering" everywhere.

The Conference Missionary Anniversary.

The law of the church requires us to hold a missionary anniversary during the session of the Annual Conference, and they are always held, and some one of the connexional officers, or the Bishop, or, perhaps, both, are chosen speakers for the occasion. This is well as far as one part of the mission work is concerned. At these meetings the speakers stress the foreign work, but the home work is never mentioned. Who ever heard of a meeting, at an Annual Conference, for the purpose of bringing to the minds of the Conference and the many visitors the wants and possibilities of our home mission work? Who ever heard at a missionary anniversary a description of the "waste places," where hundreds of people are without the gospel, and these places lying all around us? Who ever heard a discussion in open Conference about the best plans for sending the gospel to the heathen in our midst? It seems to us that our Conference Mission Boards should "take a new departure" in this matter. That we have destitute places is well known to a few, at least. That we are making very little effort to relieve that destitution is a fact well known by our Conference Boards. They are powerless to act efficiently because the membership generally are lacking in information regarding this matter, and, of course, do not supply the Boards with funds. It seems to us that a public meeting at the Annual Conference, where the needs of our home mission work as well as our foreign work are clearly set forth, would be a beginning in the right direction. There is nothing so effective in arousing interest in a cause as showing the righteousness and the necessities of that cause in a public meeting appointed for that purpose. Our Boards are composed of loyal and wise men, and we commend this subject to them as worthy of their prayerful attention.

Among the Papers.

The Wesleyan Christian Advocate has an excellent editorial, "touching the collections," part of which we publish for the benefit of our readers:

Vast gospel interests are at stake, and depend upon the results of these collections; for though the first visible results are in money that can be counted and expressed in figures, the ultimate, which are the only true results, are spiritual and eternal. The statistical secretary expresses the material facts—an insignificant circumstance—but the money represents the faith, the hope, the love of the donors, and goes, some of it, to house a homeless membership, where there is no adequate place of worship; some of it to make glad the heart of the worn-out servant of the Lord and the widow and orphan, and some is transmuted into the bread of life for the perishing millions at home and abroad.

Too much stress may be put upon figures at Conference, and too much responsibility may be placed on the ministry; we are inclined to think so, yet there is far more danger that the causes, which these collections aid, sit too lightly on the hearts of both preachers and people. What particular officers of the church shall be held responsible for the collections, is a question of church polity; the causes for which these collections are taken are rooted in the nature and purpose of the gospel.

The Advance, discussing the ideal Christian, shows that the whole man—every part of him—is to be dominated, every hour of every day, by Christian living. Nothing else is Christian life. Christianity "weds and welds" ethics and religion. This being the case, the Advance, in its closing paragraph, points out the great need of the time:

We lament the need of more ministers and better. The need is genuine. But the need, quite as genuine and more imperative, is for more Christians and better. We need more Christian merchants and more Christian mothers. We are mining in theology, discovering new truth, but the need of new truth is less imperative than the need of new living. The demand is not so much for old truths in new lights as for old truths in new lives. The church is calling for more money for its work, West and South, in Japan and India; but the church should call more loudly than for money, for more Christian men ready for service. The church needs a change of heart more than it needs a change of place. Not a better opportunity to work our Christianity, but a better Christianity to work; not a larger field of usefulness, but a larger usefulness in our present field, is our want. Not a new theology, but a new life is our necessity. The direst need is for more men, who in a Christian spirit will stay in their present places, and in a spirit of genuine Christian chivalry do those duties which do not seem to be chivalric.

The Texas Advocate publishes these utterances on "The Negro Question:"

That the negro is occasionally mistreated by bad white men; that some rascals take advantage of their ignorance to defraud them; that serious and dangerous riots occur, generally the outgrowth of the conduct of the debased and drunken of both races, and in which the negro generally gets the worse, is admitted. And that the negro should commit the common error of too hasty generalization, and should charge the whole white race of the South with these outrages is not to be wondered at. And that the white citizens should commit the same error and charge every crime committed by negro desperadoes to the black race is equally natural.

After warning negro churches and preachers against entering on a crusade against the whites, the Advocate gives this warning to others:

Whatever crisis may come upon us, let us preserve the spirit of Christ, our Master. Let neither the persuasions of misguided friends, the threats and arrogance of foolish negroes, nor the aggravating and irritating lectures read us by those who are utterly ignorant of the factors of our problem, hurry us into the commission or the countenancing of any wrong act. Remember that the sacred right of self-defense belongs to the negro as to all, and when in the exercise of that right he kills a white man, it should arouse no prejudice against him or his race. Remember, also, that he has a right in all cases to a fair trial before the courts of the country. Remember, above all, that he is a brother in Christ, with a right to our sympathy, helpfulness and prayers.

Dr. John E. Edwards, in the St. Louis Advocate, has this to say about the revision of our Discipline by the next General Conference:

"The Committee on Revisal" will have a superabundance of work to do at the approaching sessions of our General Conference. Much, no doubt, referred to the committee will be dispatched with the stereotyped laconical form of expression—"non-concurrence." And yet it must be admitted that revision is needed in obscure and clumsy forms of expression, as also in harmonizing apparently conflicting, if not positively contradictory portions of the little composite known as "Our Book of Discipline." Our ritual needs emendation. The rubrics are a little too inflexible. Larger latitude ought to be allowed in some particulars, without subjecting the non-conformist to the invective and merciless criticism of the old land-markers—some of whom are not old. It would be a misfortune, however, to put the Discipline in the hands of a Committee on Revision, unless we could have a guarantee of greater dispatch in the work than was exhibited in the revision of our hymn book. Is there not just a little tincture of Romanism or of high churchism in our communion service? Is there not in our baptismal service just a little constructive squinting at baptismal regeneration? Is not our ordination service, especially the service for the ordination of Bishops, a little at fault? Is not the language of our Discipline sometimes a little at variance with our "standards of doctrine," so called, and with our preaching? Revision, if it could be done in a reasonable length of time, might serve a good purpose. I do not want any one to attach too much gravity to these suggestions. I am a Methodist—book or no book of Discipline.

Notes.

A pointer: The vote in the Episcopal Convention to add to the ritual a prayer for the souls of the baptized dead stood 119 against and 111 for the proposition. So they were pretty evenly divided on that question. That means they are pretty far on the road to Rome. And yet they ask other "sects" to join them!

A missionary in Brazil had this question propounded to him: "What was your father doing, that my father died, and never knew that there was such a book as the Bible?" What can we do to keep some heathen from asking our children the same question? Send the gospel everywhere. That is the very least that is expected of us.

From the Missionary Review we cull this fact: "Last year the Japanese converts gave for church and missionary purposes a sum equivalent to $600,000 from 25,000 Christians in the United States." That is, they gave $24 apiece for the support of the gospel. Suppose our people should give that way! Would there be any place asking for help in vain?

A new mission has been organized on the syndicate plan, the subscribers paying quarterly whatever they promise to give yearly. Subscriptions from $5 to $200 are received, and the subscribers control the affairs. Any subscriber can cancel his subscription at any time. This mission is to operate among the Arabians, and is called, The Arabian Mission. The Missionary Review says it is "one of the most startling movements of our day."

Persons who patronize papers should pay promptly, for the pecuniary prospects of the press have a peculiar power in pushing forward public prosperity. If the printer is paid promptly, and his pocketbook kept plethoric by prompt paying patrons, he puts his pen to his paper in peace. His pictures of passing events are in more pleasing colors, and the perusal of his paper is a pleasure to the people. Paste this piece of proverbial philosophy in some place where all persons can perceive it.

The publisher of this paper pleads for prompt pay.

The faith that is looking to God to do everything hardly accords with the teaching of the Book. While it is our duty and privilege to pray for God to work as only he can work, we are not to leave him to do all the work. Paul says: "We are co-workers with him." The Revised Version has it: "We are God's fellow-workers." That being the case, if we fail to do our part, that vitiates the promise of the Lord's help, and he leaves us in our laziness, and nothing but failure can result.

Dr. Pierson says: "If you give $100 because your neighbor has given the same and you are too proud to seem behind him, you have given nothing; you have simply bought your own respectability. Again, if you give $100 to have your name published in the list of generous donors, you have given nothing; you have paid that much for popular applause. Again, if you give simply to get rid of an importunate beggar, you have given nothing; you have simply bought off a nuisance." What think you of that statement of the case?

How will this, from the Christian Weekly, do for a Greek woman?

Miss Joanna Baker, who has been appointed to the chair of Greek at Simpson College, Ia., succeeds to the position once held by her father. At four years of age Miss Baker began the study of Greek and Latin, at eight she could read Xenophon, and at fourteen she compiled a lexicon of the Œdipus Tyrannus. At sixteen she was a tutor of Greek in the college which has now made her a professor. She is a fine-looking woman, still very young and in vigorous health, proving that hard study works no physical detriment.

Personal and Otherwise.

The President has appointed November 28 as a day of thanksgiving to God for his blessings upon our land and people.

The Paris Exhibition, after all expenses paid, finds itself with $1,600,000, which will be divided between the State and the city of Paris.

The Young Men's Christian Associations throughout the country are observing this week as a week of prayer for young men. Services have been held every evening at the rooms of the Association in this city.

One of our Northern exchanges says:

There has been more question of appointments made by our Bishops this autumn than, perhaps, at any time in the history of our church in America.

The Ruston Caligraph gives an account of an interesting and successful revival meeting in the Methodist church at that place; Rev. H. O. White assisting the pastor, Bro. Faunt LeRoy.

George Thornburgh has purchased the interest of Rev. T. J. Reynolds in the Arkansas Methodist, and introduces himself to the public as the business manager of that paper. That announcement simply means greater success to that successful paper.—God speed you, brethren!

There are forty-seven Protestant Jewish missionary societies in the world, employing 377 missionaries among the Jews, and spending about $500,000 annually.

After the Episcopal Convention had adjourned, the New York Tribune remarked that "the prayer book has almost become a fetich in the Episcopal Church."

According to the New York Sun there are in the United States about 14,000 newspapers, and about 1,700 of these are dailies. This nearly equals the aggregate number in all Europe.

The Minutes of the Louisiana Conference give the startling fact that our church in New Orleans has increased its membership in the last five years less than 300! If you don't believe this, compare the Minutes of 1884 with those of 1888.

Two checks went through the New York Clearing House recently for $7,168,432, which paid for a single purchase of beer!

Dr. Pierson says the following parnphrase contains the philosophy of evangelism:

Christ, alone, can save this world;
But Christ can not save this world, alone.

What is to hinder every rich man and woman of our church from essaying to the Board of Missions, "Draw on me for the support of a foreign missionary for the year 1890?" Will our rich people never wake up to their glorious privileges?

There were 400,000 persons present at the close of the Paris Exhibition. The closing was a great success.

The two schools in Arcadia, La., have 325 pupils, and the rolls increasing, is the report the Arcadia Advance gives.

It is said that the Apologist, the German paper of German Methodists, North, averages one paper for every three members. That is a fine circulation! Why can't we get up to that? What say you?

The Presbytery of a New York has voted in favor of a revision of the Confession of Faith.

We will publish soon the first of three articles by an able lawyer on the Louisiana Lottery. We ask our readers everywhere to give these articles a close reading and preserve their papers for future use.

Bro. Rayner has succeeded with his parsonage enterprise at McComb City, and that worthy man and family are now enjoying the comforts of an $1,800 "preacher's house."

Rev. H. R. Singleton, of the Mississippi Conference, has been transferred by Bishop Hargrove to the Pacific Conference, and stationed at San Jose. Bro. Singleton expects to leave for his new field about the twenty-fifth instant.

A brother who lives a long way from this office, but who is a member of one of our pationizing Conferences, asks this question: "Can't we, in some way, double the delegation to the General Conference. We won't have enough to go around. Candidates are as plentiful as dewberries in the mouth of May?" Answer, next week.

A Correction.

In my communication, in the ADVOCATE, of November 7, the types make me represent the liberal donation of Major Millsaps, for the endowment of the Mississippi Methodist college, as $50,000. It should have been $50,000 instead. I want to say this, however: that with the start given to the enterprise by Major Millsaps, the 70,000 Methodists of the State should at once raise the endowment fund to $100,000.

Postal Card Reports.

—Rev. R. S. Isbell writes from Opelousas, La.: "I am rounding up my year's work with some degree of encouragement. Have held two good meetings during the year: one at Bellevue, the other at Opelousas, with several accesions and conversions. Our meeting in Opelousas closed with eleven accessions and thirteen conversions, and the church greatly revived. The spirituality of the church has greatly improved. Have taken up the most of my Conference collections, and am rallying my forces to make a good financial report at Conference. Have baptized twenty-five children and adults, and am looking after all the church interests devolving upon me as pastor."

—Rev. D. L. Cogdell writes from Carrollton circuit, North Mississippi Conference: "Eighty-two additions to the church this year; organized one church with thirty-seven members. We are building a church, 32x55; will cost about $800 when completed. The collections will all be met. We shall be in the field up to Conference. My fourth Quarterly Conference will be next Tuesday. Success to the ADVOCATE!"

—Rev. A. D. Miller, writing from Cato, Miss., says: "Please add to our Indian Mission list the names of the following brethren: Peter James, Bee Lake, Miss., $10; A. J. McLaurin, Brandon, Miss., $1, and Rev. J. W. McLaurin, of the Mississippi Conference, agent American Bible Society, 163 Canal street, New Orleans La., $5. May God abundantly bless these dear brethren! Who will be next?"

—Rev. W. M. Blanks writes: "Several good meetings lately. The good Lord is just adding to the church constantly. My third quarterly meeting was another good time at Dry Creek. Bro. Alexander did good preaching, and six souls were added to the Lord. There have been sixty-one added to the church this year and twenty children baptized; yet I am sorry to say that we are behind with our finances. Hope to come up yet."

—Mrs. E. J. Fallilove writes from Keaehi, November 5: "Our young missionary, Miss Sallie M. Phillips, has reached her destination and is now doing work in Colegio Piracicabina. She writes very hopefully and enthusiastically and desires to be remembered to the ladies of the Louisiana Woman's Missionary Society."

—Rev. T. W. Lewis, writing from Winona station, says: "We have received sixty-nine into the church here this year; have lost some by transfer. Our Sunday-school is growing some, and congregations are good. We now have one of the neatest and most commodious parsonages in the Conference. Prof. W. R. Sims, of Oxford, is to spend the third Sunday with us; at night he will address the Woman's Missionary Society."

—Rev. J. W. Harmon, from Anguilla, Sharkey county, Miss., writes: "Rev. W. W. Hopper has been with us in sanctified power. The whole church lifted up and laid on solid foundations. Men and women converted; and men from forty-five to sixty-five years of age have established the family altar for the first time. What hath God wrought! Praise the Lord!"

—Rev. T. K. Faunt LeRoy writes from Ruston, La.: "I have just closed a most gracious revival: ten accessions and many conversions, and the church much revived. H. O. White was with me and did some first-class preaching. I shall come to Conference in good shape."

Hall's Hair Renewer enjoys a world-wide reputation for restoring the hair to bald heads and changing gray hair to the original color of youth.

See ye the significance of this? The Northern Christian Advocate says:

The Rev. Dr. Homer Eston, of the Book Concern, made the point in his remarks at the Central New York Conference, that the ministers and members of the Methodist Episcopal Church who patronize the regular church periodicals are putting money into their own pockets, while those who patronize independent papers put money into the pockets of those who conduct personal and private enterprises. Certainly our people have an interest in their own. And in this case their own includes all the agencies which the church has instituted and by which it elects to do its work.

Sunday School Announcement.

WIDE-AWAKE Sunday-school superintendents and teachers are already on the lookout for the best things for the new year. Such of these as are already acquainted with The Sunday School Times know that no effort nor expense is spared to secure for that paper, each year, that which will be in the highest degree helpful to its readers. It is believed that the following outline of its plans will meet with general approval, and also that the new publications for Sunday-school scholars, The Scholar's Magazine, and The Scholar's Lesson Guide, will be welcomed as fresh and timely helpers in their field.

THE SUNDAY SCHOOL TIMES. A 16 page weekly paper for superintendents, pastors, teachers, the older scholars, and all Bible students. This paper has been so widely adopted by schools of all denominations that its regular issue during the past year has exceeded 125,000 copies per week.

The variety of reading-matter, outside of the lesson department, will, for 1890, include special articles, already definitely arranged for, from many eminent Christian writers, among whom are:

Rt. Hon. William Ewart Gladstone, M. P., who will write one or more articles on "The Impregnable Rock of Holy Scripture." Bishop Ellicott, Canon Farrar, Professor A. H. Sayce, and Miss Amelia B. Edwards,—of England; Professor Franz Delitzsch of Germany; Professor Godet of Switzerland; and, from America, the Rev. Dr. R. S. Storrs of Brooklyn, President Patton of Princeton, Professor Fisher of Yale University, Professors Briggs and Schaff of Union Theological Seminary, Bishop Foss of the Methodist Episcopal Church, and President Broadus of the Southern Baptist Theological Seminary.

The International Sunday-school lessons will be treated in The Sunday School Times each week, during 1890, as follows:—President Dwight, of Yale University, will furnish the "Critical Notes" on the New Testament lessons, and Professor Green, of Princeton, those on the Old Testament. Dr. Cunningham Geikie, of England, will present, in his graphic way, "The Lesson Story." The eloquent Dr. Alexander McLaren, of England, will continue his practical lesson articles. Bishop Warren will give his vigorous "Teaching Points." Dr. Trumbull, the Editor of the paper, will supply "Illustrative Applications." Dr. A. F. Schauffler, will continue the "Teaching Hints," as will Faith Latimer the "Hints for the Primary Teacher;" while the "Oriental Lesson-Lights" will come from the pen of Canon Tristram, of England, the noted Palestinian traveler and writer.

REDUCED TERMS: One copy, one year, $1.50; to ministers, $1.00. School clubs for any number of copies (more than one) mailed to individual addresses, $1.00 each per year. Five or more copies in a package to one address, 50 cents each per year.

WHO CAN NOW AFFORD IT. At the above rates a school which can take a teachers' periodical of any kind can afford to take The Sunday School Times. Indeed, it is believed that, in many schools, the question as to suitable reading matter for distribution among the older scholars will be settled by supplying them with The Sunday School Times at the package rate. This course has already been taken by a number of the most progressive Sunday-schools. Where such a plan is not adopted, individual teachers of advanced classes will be inclined to subscribe for class packages.

THE SCHOLAR'S LESSON GUIDE. Issued quarterly. 16 pages. A brief help to the study of the International Sunday-school lessons. In the preparation of this quarterly the aim has been to present a brief and simple plan of lesson study which the scholar would undertake, rather than a complicated one which he would let alone. It is prepared by a skilled worker at lesson helps. It is cheaper even than Lesson Leaves. Five or more copies, one cent each per quarter; four cents each per year. Specimen copies free.

THE SCHOLAR'S MAGAZINE. A 32 page monthly publication, containing wholesome home reading for the scholars, also the International Sunday-school lessons. It is believed that this magazine will at once find its way into thousands of schools. Surely its price will not be a barrier. The January number contains stories and articles by F. B. Stanford, Emily Huntington Miller, Rev. Edward A. Rand, Mrs J. B. M. Bristor, and Eben E. Rexford. One copy, one year, twenty-five cents; five or more, one cent each per month, or twelve cents per year. Specimen copies free.

POCKET EDITION of the International Sunday-school lessons, with both the Common and the Revised Version, given in full on opposite pages. A little book (2¼ × 4 inches, 186 pages) containing all the lessons of the year, and 52 blank pages for notes. It is printed on thin, tough paper, and neatly bound in cloth, with side stamp in color and gold. About a quarter of an inch thick. Just the thing for those who wish to look over the lesson at odd minutes. Choice enough for a gift to teachers or scholars at Christmas. Single copy, by mail, twenty-five cents; five or more, twenty cents each. Bound in fine leather, fifty cents; five or more, forty cents each.

WHY COUGH,

WHEN a few doses of Ayer's Cherry Pectoral will relieve you? Try it. Keep it in the house. You are liable to have a cough at any time, and no other remedy is so effective as this world-renowned preparation. No household, with young children, should be without it. Scores of lives are saved every year by its timely use.

Amanda B. Jenner, Northampton, Mass., writes: "Common gratitude impels me to acknowledge the great benefits I have derived for my children from the use of Ayer's most excellent Cherry Pectoral. I had lost two dear children from croup and consumption, and had the greatest fear of losing my only remaining daughter and son, as they were delicate. Happily, I find that by giving them Ayer's Cherry Pectoral, on the first symptoms of throat or lung trouble, they are relieved from danger, and are becoming robust, healthy children."

"In the winter of 1885 I took a bad cold which, in spite of every known remedy, grew worse, so that the family physician considered me incurable, supposing me to be in consumption. As a last resort I tried Ayer's Cherry Pectoral, and, in a short time, the cure was complete. Since then I have never been without this medicine. I am fifty years of age, weigh over 180 pounds, and attribute my good health to the use of Ayer's Cherry Pectoral."—G. W. Youker, Salem, N. J.

"Last winter I contracted a severe cold, which by repeated exposure, became quite obstinate. I was much troubled with hoarseness and bronchial irritation. After trying various medicines, without relief, I at last purchased a bottle of Ayer's Cherry Pectoral. On taking this medicine, my cough ceased almost immediately, and I have been well ever since."—Rev. Thos. B. Russell, Secretary Holston Conference and P. E. of the Greenville District, M. E. C., Jonesboro, Tenn.

CATARRH HAY FEVER CATARRHAL DEAFNESS

A NEW TREATMENT.

Sufferers are not generally aware that these diseases are contagious, or that they are due to the presence of living parasites in the lining membrane of the nose and eustachian tubes. Microscopic research, however, has proved this to be a fact, and the result of this discovery is that a simple remedy has been discovered which permanently cures the most aggravated cases of these distressing diseases by a few simple applications made (two weeks apart) by the patient at home. A pamphlet explaining this new treatment is sent free by A. H. DIXON & SON, 305 West King Street, Toronto, Canada.

UNUSUAL (?) CONDUCT.

BY THE REV. PHILIP H. STRONG.

I know a little fellow,
You'd deem almost perfection,
Until some chance occurrence
Should lead to his detection.

He'll do any one a favor,
Run on an errand fleetly;
So willing and obliging,
He wins your love completely.

But let his busy father
Desire some slight assistance,
He'll answer with impatience,
Or even with resistance.

Full often have I known him
With frowns do for his mother
What he, a moment later,
With smiles did for another.

The little girls, his playmates,
Consider him "just splendid;"
Alas! by his own sister
He could not be commended.

How like you such behavior,
Bright boys and merry misses?
And, tell me, did you ever
See conduct strange as this is?

A Sermonette on Etiquette.

One hardly likes to say the word "etiquette" when the question is that of being kind and lovely in one's own family. Yet if members of the same household used a little more ceremony toward each other, no harm would be done.

What true gentleman would treat his mother or his sister with less courtesy than he would a chance acquaintance?

No one would greatly respect a boy whose custom it was to let his sister trot about on his errands—run upstairs for his handkerchief, fly hither and thither to bring his bat or his racket.—

I well remember the surprise of a young lady when, in a certain family, the brother sprang up to light the gas for his sister, and when the latter attempted to put some coal on the open fire, quickly took the hod from her hand, and did the work himself.

"You wouldn't catch my brother being so polite to me!" she said.

"So much the more shame to your brother!" I thought.

Every boy ought surely to feel a certain care over his sister, even if she be older than he. As a rule, he is physically stronger, and consequently better able to bear the burdens of life than she.

There is nothing more charming than the chivalrous protection which some boys (bless them) lavish on their fortunate "women folk." And nothing is so attractive to other girls as to see a boy gentle and tender to his sister.

As for you, dear girls, you would never be so rude as to fail to acknowledge any courtesy which your brother paid you? If you would deem it extremely unladylike not to thank any person who gave up his seat in the horsecar to you, or who helped you across an icy spot on the sidewalk, you would blush to be less grateful for a similar kindness on the part of your brother.

If he is ready to place a chair or to open a door for you, to make sure that you have an escort after dark, to take off his hat to you on the street, surely you are eager to please him. To sew on a stray button, or mend a rip in his gloves; to thank him for taking pains to call for you and bring you home from a friend's house; to bow as politely to him, with the same pleasant smile which you would have for some one else's brother.

A boy should learn the habit of easy politeness in all circumstances, but if there be one place on earth where one should use freely his very best manners, it is in his own home.—Harper's Young People.

BOY CHARACTER.—It is the greatest delusion in the world for a boy to get the idea that his life is of no consequence, and that the character of it will not be noticed. A manly, truthful boy will shine like a star in any community. A boy may possess as much of noble character as a man. He may so speak and live the truth that there shall be no discount on his word. And there are such noble Christian boys; and wider and deeper than they are apt to think is their influence. They are the king boys among their fellows, having an immense influence for good, and loved and respected because of the simple fact of living the truth.—Child's Paper.

"Who was the first man, Tommy?" asked the Sunday-school teacher, after explaining that our first parents were made from the dust of the earth. "Henry Clay, ma'am."

MR. EDITOR: I wrote to your paper some time since, and, as you were kind enough to publish, will write again. Papa has been taking your valued paper for a number of years, and I enjoy reading the little cousins' letters so much. I am going to school at home to a young lady that has been in our family as governess for nearly four years, and I love her devotedly. My studies are arithmetic, geography, philosophy, spelling, grammar, history and fourth reader. I study very hard, and my teacher gives me credit for being her best pupil. Papa suffers so much during the winter with rheumatism, and mamma's health, too, is delicate. I live about a mile and a half from town; but I attend Sunday-school and church as regularly as I can. We have a very nice Sunday-school; there are about sixteen scholars in the Bible class, and twenty or twenty-five in the smaller classes. The Episcopalians also have a Sunday-school here, but they have not as many scholars as we have. Our pastor, Rev. V. D. Skipper, has been in charge here two years and I could not begin to say how much he is loved by all: and I am so afraid he will not be sent back next year. I will close by asking a question: How long a time is seventy weeks spoken of by the Prophet Daniel? With best wishes for your happiness, I remain,

Your little friend,
EUDORA GRAMLING.

MAYERSVILLE, Mississippi.

MR. EDITOR: Here is a little girl who wants to join your band of cousins. I have never seen a letter from this place, and I thought I would write. Rev. J. F. Wynn is our pastor, and I like him very much. He preaches here every third Sunday, and the Baptist on the fourth. I do not go to Sanday-school now. My uncle, Rev. D. C. Barr, from Union parish, came to see us last Saturday, one week ago. As this is my first attempt, I will close by asking a question. Who was the father of Canaan? Wishing you and the dear old ADVOCATE much success, I am,

Yours truly,
CARRIE HUNT.

ATLANTA, Louisiana.

MR. EDITOR: As I never have written to the little cousins, I thought I would write. I am a little girl eleven years old. I am a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church. Bro. Rayner is our pastor this year, and we like him very much. Papa takes your valuable paper, and I like the children's letters. I will close for fear of the waste-basket.

Your little friend,
JANE NEATHERLAND.

MCCOMB CITY, Mississippi.

Thousands of people have found in Hood's Sarsaparilla a positive cure for rheumatism. This medicine, by its purifying action, neutralizes the acidity of the blood, which is the cause of the disease, and also builds up and strengthens the whole body. Give it a trial.

A little girl in Plainfield was very thoughtful on the way home from morning service on a recent Sunday. The last hymn had been, "Even me, even me." Finally she asked her mother, who was holding her hand: "Mamma, did Adam write that hymn?" "Why, no, my child," said her mamma; "why do you ask that?" "Because it says, 'Eve and me.'"

The Gospel of Little Things.

How happy we might be, were it ever kept in mind that little things make up the sum of life! Great happenings are few and far between; indeed, to many they never come at all. And yet, we wait for the great things that we imagine are to bring us great blessings, in the meanwhile, perhaps, overlooking or despising the innumerable small things which have power, day by day and year by year, to lighten our pathway and gladden he heart. What is occasional pleasure, though a great one, to constant pleasure, though it be not so intense? Better the wholesome, nourishing, satisfying food every day with never a banquet, than one or two eventful banquets with frequent fastings. Better the kind words, the little services of love, the smiles and simple enjoyments of home life which begin at the bridal altar and end only at the tomb, than the poor comfort which comes from the memory of a fierce love-passion which left but a heap of ashes. Better constant fellowship with God, constant sense of peace and security, than to seek to measure progress in spiritual life by strange and overwhelming visitations of divine presence. Better the consciousness of having performed every little duty, than the restless expectancy of being called to some high embassy for the performance of which we are not qualified.—Methodist Protestant.

The Secret of Health.

Don't worry.

Don't hurry. "Too swift arrives as tardy as too slow."

"Simplify! simplify! simplify!"

Don't over-eat. Don't starve. "Let your moderation be known to all men."

Court the fresh air, day and night. "O, if you knew what was in the air!"

Sleep and rest abundantly. Sleep is nature's benediction.

Spend less nervous energy each day than you make.

Be cheerful. "A light heart lives long."

Think only healthful thoughts. "As a man thinketh in his heart, so is he."

"Seek peace and pursue it."

"Work like a man; but don't be worked to death."

Avoid passion and excitement. A moment's anger may be fatal.

Associate with healthy people. Health is contagious as well as disease.

Don't carry the whole world on your shoulders, far less the universe. Trust the Eternal.

Never despair. "Lost hope is a fatal disease."

CONVERSATION AT HOME.—Few things are more important in a home than is conversation, yet there are few things to which less deliberate thought is given. We take great pains to have our houses well furnished. We send our children to school that they may become intelligent. We strive to bring into our homes the best condition of happiness. But how often is the speech of our household left untrained and undisciplined!

The good we might do in our homes with our tongues, if we would use them to the limit of their capacity of cheer and helpfulness, it is simply impossible to state. Why should so much power for blessing be wasted? Especially, why should we ever pervert the gift and use our tongues to do evil, to give pain, to scatter seeds of bitterness? It is a sad thing when a child is born dumb; but it were better to be born dumb, and never to have the gift of speech, than, having the gift, to employ it in speaking only sharp, unloving or angry words.—Central Christian Advocate.

Kissed Another Man's Wife.

"You scoundrel," yelled young Jacob Green,
At his good neighbor, Brown—
"You kissed my wife upon the street—
I ought to knock you down."
"That's where you're wrong," good Brown replied,
In accents mild and meek;
"I kissed her, that I've not denied,
But kissed her on the cheek—

and I did it because she looked so handsome—the very picture of beauty and health. What is the secret of it?" "Well," replied Green, "since you ask it, I will tell you: she uses Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription. I accept your apology. Good night." "Favorite Prescription" is the only remedy for the delicate derangements and weaknesses of females, sold by druggists under a positive guarantee of giving satisfaction in every case, or money paid for it returned.

The Races of Mankind.

M. de Quatrefages, the leading French enthnologist, in presenting the second part of the "Introduction to the study of the Human Races," to the Academy of Sciences, has given an interesting summary of his general conclusions with regard to the origin and distribution of mankind. Neglecting the minor differences, he estimates that there are no fewer than 72 distinct races in the human species. All these descend or branch off from three fundamental types—the black, the yellow and the white—which had their origin at the great central mass of Northern Asia, which is thus the cradle of mankind. Representatives of these different types and the races which sprang from them are still to be found there. The whites, according to M. de Quatrefages, appear to have originated on the west of the central mass, the yellows on the north, and the blacks on the south. The whites extended westward and northward, giving birth to three secondary types, the Finnish, the Semitic and the Aryan, if we except the Allophyles, which form a separate group. Their area of distribution is continuous, as is that of the yellows, because of the extensive land surface of the Eurasian continent. The yellows spread eastward and crossed into America. The whites and yellows checked or blended with each other, producing many varieties of man. The blacks or negro type, which originated on the south of the central mass, was forced by the nature of the continent, and probably by the attacks of the whites and yellows, to go south into Africa and east into the Indian Archipelago, or Melanesia. The proto-Semites arrested their distribution in the north of Africa, and the mixture of the two races gave rise to the negroid populations. In the centre and south of Africa the blacks continued in their ethnic purity until the infiltration of other races from Europe and the north of Africa in modern times. Those which remained in their original home became blended with the whites and the yellows, giving rise to the dravidian populations which pass by shades into the three fundamental types. As for the Allophyles, represented by the race of Cro-Magnon, they occupied parts of Europe and North Africa, from which they extended to the Canaries. The three fundamental types also found themselves in Oceania; the Allophylian whites occupying Polynesia, the blacks Melanesia, the yellows Malasia. The latter were, according to M. de Quatrefages, the latest to come into the maritime world. The peopling of America dates from the quaternary period, and is, due to migrations of different types—Allophylic white and yellow, blending with the local quaternary races, which also belonged to the yellow type. Europe, since the tertiary ages, has received only Allophylian whites, Finns and Aryans. The number of races now existing in a pure state is exceedingly restricted, if, indeed, there is a single one that can be accepted as such. Perhaps some little groups, protected by their isolation, such as the Mincopies, may show an identity of characters attesting their ethnic homogenity.—London Times.

Photography is gaining prominence in the criminal courts. With its help a Berlin merchant was lately convicted of crooked ways in keeping his accounts. The slightest differences in color and shade of inks are made manifest in the photographic copy. Blue inks appear nearly white; brown inks, on the contrary, almost black. The books of the accused were submitted to a photographer, who took off the pages concerned and brought into court the most undoubted ocular proofs of the illegitimate afterentry of some of the accounts. A subsequent chemical test substantiated this evidence. The photographic is to be preferred to the chemical test, because it brings its proofs into the court and submits them to inspection, at the same time leaving the document under examination unharmed; while the results of a chemical test must be taken on the evidence of the chemist alone, and the writing examined is perhaps destroyed. In another case similar to the above the changing of the date of a note by an insignificant erasure and addition was proved by means of photography.

MASON & HAMLIN
The Cabinet Organ was introduced in its present form by Mason & Hamlin in 1861. Other makers followed in the manufacture of these instruments, but the Mason & Hamlin Organs have always maintained their supremacy as the best in the world.
Mason & Hamlin offer, as demonstration of their unequalled excellence of their organs, the fact that at all of the great World's Exhibitions, since at that of Paris, 1867, including that of Paris, 1878, with but one exception in competition with the best manufactories, they have been awarded the highest honors, of all examined, and have invariably taken the highest honors. Illustrated catalogues free. Prices $22 to $1000.
ORGANS
Mason & Hamlin do not hesitate to make the extraordinary claim for their Pianos, that they are superior to all others. They recognize the high excellence achieved by other leading makers in the art of piano building, but still claim superiority. This they attribute solely to the remarkable improvement introduced by them in the year 1880, and now known as the "MASON & HAMLIN Practical Check Action," by the use of which the greatest possible purity and refinement of tone, together with great evenness of touch, is secured throughout the entire scale, with greatly increased capacity to stand in tune and other important advantages.

CARRUTH—AUGUSTUS F. CARRUTH passed from time to eternity, October 23, 1889. He fought the great battle of life in less than twenty-three years. The earthly house has been dissolved, he now has a house not made with hands, eternal in the heavens. His sufferings were intense, but he was pointed to and found Christ, the great physician, who applied the healing balm of grace, bound up the broken, contrite heart, and, in accents sweet as the God-man alone can pronounce, said, "It is I; be not afraid." By faith in Christ he became a new creature; he realized that God was in Christ reconciling the world unto himself. "Justified by faith, he had peace with God through our Lord Jesus Christ"—peace, that inner grace drawn from a heavenly source, unaffected by outer things. "The work of righteousness is peace, and the effect of peace is quietness forever." If there be a joyful thing on earth it is religion. If there be a subject spoken of in strains of praise by those in health or by the suffering and the dying, it is religion. For what is religion? The assurance that God is my father, heaven is my everlasting home, Christ the Savior is my elder brother. Without this assurance man can not look for a better world than this sin-cursed earth. Our departed friend rejoiced in this assurance and looked forward with confiding hope to a home in glory.

We have good reason to believe he is numbered among the redeemed, of whom it is said, They shall no more go out; they shall serve him day and night in his temple; they shall hunger no more, neither thirst any more, and he that sitteth on the throne shall lead them. No sickness shall prostrate, no lapse of time shall create the least sensation of weariness. Whilst I "weep with them that weep," I fain would comfort the grief-stricken heart with this precious assurance: The anthems of your departed darling shall never cease, his joys shall be unclouded, his worship unsuspended forever and ever. How bright the prospect! Our first parents placed amid the glories of paradise, had to go out weeping exiles in a water a desert world with their tears. But from that second and more glorious paradise, retrieved from the wreck of sin and redeemed from the hand of Satan, we shall no more go out, but shall serve the Lord day and night. He shall lead us to green pastures and to living waters and wipe away all tears from our eyes. The mortal remains of our young friend—the dutiful son, the affectionate brother—lie beside the sacred ashes of another glorified saint. Dust will mingle with dust, their spirits will unite around the throne of God. He giveth his beloved sleep until the resurrection morn, when this mortal shall put on immortality. Over every grave in which a believer lies there is hung a glorious rainbow; written thereon, visible to the eye of faith, are the precious words—"Blessed are the dead who die in the Lord!"

PASTOR.

SISTRUNK—Died, on September 30, at Tilton Church, CATHERINE SISTRUNK (nee Hightower), wife of J. G. Sistrunk, in her thirty-ninth year. She joined the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, at Sartin's Church, Pike county, Miss., in 1870.

Another pure white rose has been removed from earth and transplanted into the green fields of Eden; another pure white lamb of Christ's flock on earth has "crossed over the river to rest in the shade;" another angelic spirit, another child of God, while smiling with the inward peace that the world can neither give nor take away, has fallen asleep in the arms of Jesus, who will awake her on the resurrection morn with the glorious summons of, "Come ye, blessed." The writer of this knew Catharine as a pupil and found her a good and obedient scholar; knew her as a kind mother and a devoted wife; knew her truly as a Christian woman. She leaves a husband and nine children to mourn her loss. The entire community offer their heartfelt sympathy and condolence to the bereaved husband and disconsolate children of our dear departed sister.

J. D. MAY.

JOHNSON—After a lingering illness, Sister CARRIE, E., wife of Bro James, A. Johnson, departed this life, July 26, at her home in East Baton Rouge parish, La.

Sister Johnson suffered much, but was patient under it all, and bore her affliction with Christian fortitude. Joining the Methodist Church in September, 1886, she lived a consistent life until its close. She leaves a kind husband and two sweet little girls, besides other relatives and friends, to mourn her loss. May the Lord comfort their hearts!

HER PASTOR.

HENINGTON—HENRY JAMES HENINGTON was born November 5, 1828, and died near Crystal Springs, Miss., September 23, 1889. He was married to Miss Ann Siebe, January 2, 1866, with whom he lived happily and who survives him.

Bro. Henington was the son of a local minister of our church, who for many years lived in this vicinity, and who is still remembered as a most excellent man. He joined the church in early life, but dated his conversion from the year 1869. He was a thoroughly good man. His home, near Crystal Springs, was in the best sense of the word a Christian home. He and his wife were united in the service of God. He subscribed for and carefully read the Nashville and NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATES, and kept posted in the current history of the church, and in full sympathy with all her enterprises. He was a quiet, retiring man, fond of home and of home-life, and hence may not always have been fully appreciated, except by those who knew him well. His pastor always came to know him and to esteem him highly very soon after his appointment to this charge. His last illness was long and peaceful. For more than three months he lay prostrate upon his bed. From the first he said he would not recover. He enjoyed the visits, conversation and prayers of his pastor and other religious friends, and often became very happy in their company. When he came to the final verge he was full of joyous hope, and died triumphantly. He was buried in the family graveyard, near Crystal Springs. We all realize that a good and true man has gone from us.

W. B. LEWIS.

CROWSON—ANNIS CROWSON, daughter of Rev. Abram and Nancy Nabors, was born in Lawrence district, South Carolina, October 8, 1808. Her parents moved from South Carolina in 1818 to Shelby county, Alabama. She united with the Methodist Episcopal Church in 1823, under the pastorate of Rev. B. M. Drake, then of the Mississippi Conference, and to-day they are both members of the church triumphant. Sister Crowson was a consistent Christian. She joined the church when quite young and remained a consistent member of the same to the day of her death. Her whole theme was religion and the church. She was married to Rev. John Crowson, May 3, 1827, who preceded her to the home of the blessed several years, and to-day they rejoice together around the throne, ever crying, "Holy, holy, Lord God of hosts; heaven and earth are full of thy glory: glory be to thy name. O Lord most high!" Sister Crowson leaves two daughters and a number of grandchildren to mourn her loss. May the Holy Spirit comfort and keep them from evil and bring them at last home to their mother and father, who are watching at the beautiful gate for them to welcome them home! The writer had the privilege to talk with Sister Crowson several times on the subject of religion, and she expressed herself as watching and waiting for the Master to call her home. The messenger came for her September 14, 1889, at her home in the house of her daughter, Mrs. Presick.

D. F. G.

CLARK—Mrs. ALICE CLARK, daughter of J. Y. and L. M. Nesbit, was born July 5, 1850; professed religion and joined the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, in 1867. She was married to Colonel B. F. Clark, of Tennessee, October 9, 1883. They moved to Humboldt, Tenn., where they lived happily together not quite two years, when he was taken away by death. She returned to her mother's home, near New Albany, Miss., where she lived until the day of her death, which occurred August 12, last.

Sister Clark was devoted to the church; always cheerful, hopeful, buoyant and sweet-spirited. Her disease was consumption, and of long duration, but all the while she was patient, resigned, trusting in God, with his praises on her lips. It was a benediction to her pastor to visit her during her sickness. A while before she died she called the family around her bed, and told them she would die soon, but begged them not to weep for her. She was ready and longed for the sweet rest in heaven. She told them to meet her in heaven. Thus passed away another witness for God's grace and power to save. Let us all meet in the sweet by-and-by.

HER PASTOR.

WILLIAMSON—ELIZABETH ANN WILLIAMSON died at her home, in Neshoba county, Miss., October 25, 1889. She was born in Talbot county, Georgia, January, 26, 1830. She joined the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, in early womanhood, and lived a consistent member until death. She died in full triumph of a living faith. Her last words were, "Jesus, take me." She suffered much, but suffered patiently, and is now reaping the reward of those who suffer "God's will." She leaves an aged husband and several children to mourn her death. May they all meet in heaven!

W. W. CAMMACK.

BARREMORE—A cloud of sadness has settled upon the home of Sister Barremore and husband, of Osyka, Miss. Their sweet little JULIA, aged three years and ten months, left them on the evening of October 25, at 8:30, for the home of the blessed. The parents' hearts are sad. Julia was an intelligent and lovable child, and tears can not express the grief of those who loved her so well. Heaven is brighter now that she is there. May God comfort the stricken ones!

AGENTS WANTED.

AN EXTRAORDINARY OFFER.

We want live, energetic agents in every county in the United States and Canada to sell a patent article of great merit, on its merits. An article having a large sale, paying over 100 per cent. profit, having no competition, and on which the agent is protected in the exclusive sale by a deed given for each and every county he may secure from us. With all these advantages to our agents, and the fact that it is an article that can be sold to every house owner, it might not be necessary to make "an extraordinary offer" to secure good agents at once, but we have concluded to make it to show, not only our confidence in the merits of our invention, but in its salability by any agent that will handle it with energy. Our agents now at work are making from $150 to $300 a month clear, and makes it safe for us to make our offer to all who are out of employment. Any agent that will give our business a thirty days' trial, and fail to clear at least $100 in that time, above all expenses, can return all goods unsold to us, and we will refund the money paid for them. No other employer of agents ever dared to make such an offer, nor would we if we did not know that we have agents now making double this amount. Our large descriptive circulars explain our offer fully, and these we wish to send to everyone out of employment who will send us three one-cent stamps for postage.

Common Sense

Should be used in attempting to cure that very disagreeable disease, catarrh. A catarrh originates in impurities in the blood; local applications can do no permanent good. The common-sense method of treatment is to purify the blood, and for this purpose there is no preparation superior to Hood's Sarsaparilla. That this peculiar medicine does cure catarrh is shown by the many testimonials from people who have found relief upon using it when all others had failed. For Pure Food.

THE SAN FRANCISCO BOARD OF HEALTH NOTIFY CONSUMERS WHICH IS THE BEST BAKING POWDER.

San Francisco Chronicle.

The Board of Health can engage in no more laudable occupation than the examination of our food supply and the instruction of the public as to those articles it finds to be pure and wholesome, and which, therefore, consumers should use.

There are quantities of baking powders in the market to use which is certain detriment to the health of the consumer. They are made from alum, or improperly compounded from other chemicals, so that they have a strong alkaline residum in the food. Many of these powders, having been prohibited from sale in the East, have been collected by their manufacturers from the dealers with whom they were left on commission, and shipped to the Pacific Coast. The public knows nothing about their quality except what it reads in the newspaper advertisements. In the effort to gain a foot-hold in this market unscrupulous manufacturers of these cheaply made low grade baking powders have indulged in extravagant statements both with reference to their own and other brands, claiming the most improbable endorsements for their goods and denouncing the brands best known and longest used upon the Pacific Coast.

The action of the physicians of the Board of Health, therefore, in giving the public reliable, authoritative information as to the brand of baking powder to be used to secure the most economical and wholesome food is most valuable and timely.

The chief brands of baking powders sold upon the Pacific Coast were collected and analyzed by Messrs. Thomas Price & Son, the well-known analytical chemists of San Francisco. They found the strength or leavening gas (measured at 100 degrees F.) of the brands named as follows:

NAME.	Leavening Gas, Cubic inches per oz.
ROYAL,	191.
Giant,	140.
Golden Gate,	123.
Dr. Price's,	116.
Ploneeer,	105.

The general usefulness of a baking powder depends upon the quantity of leavenug gas it gives off. As these powders are retailed at about the same price, the most economical is also apparent.

The opiulon of the Board of Health is as follows:

We, the members of the Board of Health of the city and county of San Francisco, cordially approve and recommend the Royal Baking Powder. It is absolutely pure and healthful, composed of the best ingredients, of the highest strength and character. In our judgment, it is impossible to make a purer or stronger baking powder than the Royal.

SAN FRANCISCO, Aug. 5, 1889.

Dr. Davis' Compound Syrup of Wild Cherry and Tar has made a name and record in the past fifty years that is enviable. Thousands of people having tried it for coughs, colds, catarrh, asthma, bronchitis and consumption know its value, and would not be without it. Why? Because it cures where other remedies fail. We recommend it for children subject to croup and whooping-cough. It will give relief and cause speedy cure. The medical profession recognize it, and physicians frequently prescribe it for lung troubles. These facts have pushed Davis' Wild Cherry and Tar to the front rank. It is the best remedy for coughs, colds, all throat and lung affections, and no family should be without it. One dollar bottles hold two and a half times as much as a 50c. bottle.

THE SILENT TOWER.

BY GEORGE W. BUNGAY.

[Dr. John Hall's people refrained from hanging a bell in the tower of their church, on the corner of Fifth avenue and Fifty-fifth street, and would not even suffer the clock to strike, lest the patients in St. Luke's Hospital, opposite, should be disturbed.—Christian Union.]

It rises in silence and splendor
In the light of a better day;
The lesson is touching and tender
To sufferers over the way.

It points to the bells that are ringing
In heaven, unheard here below,
Where the choir celestial is singing
Near the throne that is whiter than snow.

The music of silence is sweeter
Than the ringing of bells in towers;
It chords with the cadence whose metre
Is sweet as the wind-harp in flowers.

By the couches where patients are sleeping,
And dreaming of visions above,
Two angels their vigils are keeping—
One is Mercy, the other is Love.

Not even the clock that's revealing
The passing away of the hour
Can disturb with dolorous pealing,
Since love struck it dumb in the tower.

General Conference Work.

Work for the General Conference.

BY REV. J. A. PARKER, LOUISIANA CONFERENCE.

While I do not presume to dictate, nor even suggest, any line of legislation for the honored brethren who may compose the General Conference of 1890, I think that an uninterrupted itinerant service of twenty-nine years entitles me to an opinion, and a right to express it.

And, first of all, I do not believe that much legislation necessarily insures much success. Where men and money are the instruments used by which to reach results, that legislation which can do the greatest amount of work, with the least number of men and dollars, is the best legislation.

The question of the presiding eldership, which has been one of contention—if not of strife—from the beginning, is now being looked into in a more practical way than ever before. It was almost a hobby with the now sainted McFerrin, that the size of our districts should be increased, and this thought is being stirred up in several of our church papers. There are, however, several things to be considered in connection with this proposition. This office, being one of the chief pillars of our polity, has a great deal depending on it; and before there can be much modification one way or another, corresponding modification must be secured at other points, so as to reduce the necessity of the presiding elder's presence in the pastoral charges to a minimum. Most important on this line of legislation would be the transferring of the most important business of the Quarterly Conference to the District Conference. The inexperience and youthfulness of many of our pastors disqualify them for the duty of examining applicants for license to preach, for application for orders, or admission into the traveling connection, or for renewal of license and passage of character. By transferring this jurisdiction from the Quarterly to the District Conference, two important points would be gained, viz: the necessity for the presence of the presiding elder at each of the sessions of the Quarterly Conferences would be reduced to the lowest requirement, and the importance of the District Conference would be so increased as to render that body one of the most important in our economy. The gain by this exchange of jurisdiction would be great in several directions.

1. It would reduce the number of presiding elders to, at most, one-half the present number, since one or two annual visits to each pastoral charge would be sufficient.

2. It would throw the labor of the other half into unoccupied fields, and thereby give employment to several hundred men who, under the present adjustment, are idle. I suppose there are about 200 presiding elders in our church. These men average about 46 Sundays each in their Quarterly Conference work, and when each one of them occupies the pulpit on Sunday, it leaves the pastor unemployed; hence there are nine thousand two hundred Sundays lost to the work in each and every year. This is equivalent to the time of 200 men annually! Can we, as men sent of God to bring a lost race back to him, afford such waste of means merely for the pleasure of the pastors who are edified and rested by this lost time? or for the sake of political continuity? Are we blameless before him for such wasteful policy? To reduce this waste of preaching to the lowest possible point under our economy, increase the size of our districts to double their present size, and throw 100 of these presiding elders into the pastorate. Think of putting another large Conference of preachers into the field! That is just what such a change would do. The financial side of the question I will not argue.

3. This change of jurisdiction would render one of our Conferences, which at present is a mere perfunctory gathering, a degree of importance next to the Annual Conference, and do away with the farce of the average District Conference.

4. It would give increased importance to all questions transferred from the Quarterly Conference, and free the church from all local influences so prominent and hurtful in many of our compact charges.

5. It would so decrease the number of District Conferences that our Bishop could visit all of them, if not annually, at least once every two or three years. This would throw the seed of episcopal influence through all the church. These three questions—increasing the size of the districts, reducing the jurisdiction of the Quarterly Conference, and increasing the jurisdiction of the District Conference—are all so closely connected that they must be examined relatively.

But there is a sixth result which would come of such changes as have been suggested, viz: the ordination, to the order of deacon, of every man placed in charge of a work. Even the "order of an elder in the church of God" is conferred on men sent into our mission fields, and why not the order of deacon on those who are "to receive, try, and expel members of the church"? According to our custom, they can not "receive" persons who have not been baptized, neither can they baptize any; so they are practically estopped from building up the church over which they have been placed. There are two other matters for General Conference legislation to which I will allude, but must do so briefly. I verily believe that some law should be enacted by which this so-called "evangelism" can be controlled by the church.

Under the plea of "speaking plainly," there are men roaming over the territory of our church, using language in the pulpit which even political "stump speakers" would hardly dare use on the "stump!" "You old fool, you;" "You lie, and you know it;" old maids "bugged and slobbered over" till they are unfit to be the wives of gentlemen, and many other such like—and worse—phrases used by some "evangelists," degrade the pulpit, offend common decency, and bring a reproach on the ministry. If a brother is suited to evangelistic work, let the Bishop say so; and if he has no episcopal permit, let him stay where he belongs—if local, under his pastor; if itinerant, in his charge. If he be invited out by a brother, let him go, and let the responsibility be on the inviting party, and not on the church. This is written in view of the opinion of some who think the present law does not offer the means for keeping preachers at home. If it be so, that under our ecclesiastical statutes now on the books, some of our preachers will roam over the country taunting such phrases as "snaggle-toothed hags of hell," and so on, surely the General Conference should put a law in our code which will prevent it.

(Just here let me suggest that the Quarterly Conferences can control the local preachers, and the Annual Conferences can manage the itinerant preachers; and if the General Conference fails to act, these bodies should assert their authority and make their members stay at home, or act decently when abroad.)

The other question of which I wish to write relates to Conference boundaries.

Centenary College, which is in the bounds of the Mississippi Conference, but within the State of Louisiana, has been practically abandoned by the Mississippi Conference, and thrown upon the Louisiana Conference as its sole patron. In order to identify it with our people, and make them feel that the college is theirs (ours), the Conference line between the Louisiana and Mississippi Conferences should be conformed to the State lines, so as to throw that portion of Louisiana, east of the Mississippi river, into the Louisiana Conference.

I did not wish to occupy more than a column of your space; but allow a brief summary:

1. Put twenty-six pastoral charges in each presiding elder's district, and require the presiding elder to visit each charge twice a year (in order to save the preaching-time of about one hundred first-class men).

2. Transfer from the Quarterly to the District Conference the authority to grant license to preach, to recommend applicants to the Annual Conference for orders, and admission into the traveling connection, the renewal of the license of local preachers, and the passage of their character (in order to simplify the business of the Quarterly Conference, so young and inexperienced men can conduct it).

3. Ordain all men placed in charge of work (in order that they may administer the ordinance of baptism and solemnize the rights of matrimony among their people in the absence of the presiding elder).

4. Prohibit all self-constituted evangelism (so as to protect the church and the ministry).

5. Change the boundaries of the Louisiana Conference, so as to include the whole State of Louisiana in the Louisiana Conference (in order to place Centenary College within the Conference which is to support it).

If the General Conference does all these things, I think it will do well; if it does none of them, we will work on as we have been doing.

BATON ROUGE, Louisiana.

Changes in the Law.

BY REV. J. W. HONNOLL, NORTH MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.

The law-making body of our church will soon meet at St. Louis, Mo., to inspect the old ship; and, among other things, they will examine her present law on the subject of temperance, and decide whether we shall have any change in the present form of our law on this subject. It was wisely decided by our last General Conference that those who engage in the manufacture or sale of intoxicating liquors, to be used as a beverage, shall be dealt with as in cases of drunkenness. We understand this to include all who sign whisky petitions, or in any way aid the whisky traffic. If so, no change in our law is necessary, and we so understand it in all this section. We should be careful not to move a change in the present form of our law unless it is necessary, for when we move a change, and fail to carry it, our enemies cry out that we are weakening on the subject; so we should be sure we are right, and then go ahead. We can not afford to show any quarter to this great enemy of our race. Our present law answers every purpose. In our church here it is understood that no man's name can remain on our church book which is on a whisky petition.

HOLLY SPRINGS, Nov. 14, 1889.

Work for the General Conference.

BY REV. W. L. C. HUNNICUTT, D. D., MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.

Under Moses almost everything in the matter of legislation was minutely prescribed; under Christ only great principles are enunciated, which the church is to embody in such legal regulations as may suit the varying demands of successive ages. The divine sanction authorizes the legislation of the church, and the abiding presence of the Holy Spirit is promised to enable and guide the servants of God in this work of law-making, which is surely among the highest and most difficult of all the tasks assigned to men. The wise men of Methodism have been striving for more than a hundred years to perfect her laws; yet the General Conference, which is to meet next May, will find abundance of important work to do.

The financial methods of our church certainly need revision. As far back as the days of Paul, the handling of money conspicuously figured in church work. Now, the collections in our church have so multiplied that a preacher in charge, in view of his obligation to call upon everyone of several hundred members for almost a dozen different objects, and his duty to try to get something from each one for every object, may well exclaim, Who is sufficient for these things? Beyond question, too much financiering is required of our preachers. It is not meet that they should leave the Word of God to serve tables. It will be enough if the preacher in charge can manage his own salary so as to make ends meet, while he receives from judiciously appointed collectors the several funds which he is expected to report at the Annual Conference. Let the duty of collecting for the great benevolent enterprises of the church be placed in the hands of laymen, who are not only willing and able to do this work efficiently, but would be greatly benefited by its discharge. Perhaps it would be best to have the assessments on each pastoral charge consolidated and taken up together. The General Conference will surely place in our Discipline some law requiring the collection of the presiding elder's salary, as, by a strong oversight, none is now to be found in the book.

Several able writers have recently been discussing the propriety of placing unordained preachers in charge of works. In seeking to remedy an evil complained of, some have proposed virtually to abolish the orders of deacon and elder altogether; for, while they might be nominally retained, few would labor much to obtain them, if a license to preach conferred the right to do all the work of a deacon and an elder. The novitiate, as now authorized, is not intended to fulfill all the requirements of the ministry; but he is certainly better than no preacher at all. Some think we unduly exalt the sacraments in not allowing the licensed preacher to practice in them, as well as in preaching, before being permanently authorized. The custom of the church is, however, susceptible of just the opposite interpretation. She may be supposed to hold that while none shall be permanently licensed to preach, except after due probation, anyone who has shown proper qualifications for preaching the gospel may at once be entrusted with the administration of the sacraments. A mere license to preach seems to signify among us simply a permission to try, and, by practice in public, to learn to preach. Men, for some reason, connect the character of the administrator with his acts much more in some cases than in others. Those who have been baptized or married by a certain minister feel that the perpetual sacredness and even the validity of the act are in some way connected with the official worthiness of the man who performed it. There is no "thus saith the Lord" for our manner of constituting deacons and elders; yet, whatever of honor or respect these modes have, in the minds of the people, secured to the ministers of God's Word, should not be lightly imperiled by unnecessary innovations. If we more frequently followed the Savior's example in sending out ministers, two and two, we should have less need for the proposed change on this point.

It might not be amiss for the General Conference to apply the spirit of our itinerancy to class leaders, stewards, superintendents of Sunday-schools, and some other church officers, by limiting their privilege of reappointment to four successive years.

If the Conference should provide a suitable plan of insuring our church buildings, in case of destruction by fire or otherwise, whereby the money paid in premiums would be kept in the hands of some authorized agents of the church, they would answer a demand which has been felt in some quarters for years.

But time and space would fail us to speak here and now of all the weighty matters which should be considered by so large and so responsible a body as the General Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South. As one of the great organizations of God's earthly kingdom, it behooves her to realize and discharge her responsibilities. As an important branch of the great church of Christ on the earth, our church should adjust herself so as to combat most successfully the dominant forms of error and sin in our day, and place her forces in co-operative harmony with the armies of Christendom as they array themselves against the powers of darkness.

On the momentous questions of missions, education, temperance, and the like, the church has perpetual cause to re-examine her legislation and reinvigorate her action.

As a Protestant Church, we have seemed perpetually to fail to do our duty in enlightening our people, especially the young, as to the dangerous and anti-republican tenets of Romanism. We have not even a catechism in any of our Sunday-schools which will teach the children what Protestantism is, and why we are Protestants.

By every token, there will be ample room for the fullest exercise of all the useful legislative powers of every man who shall be elected to the next General Conference.

Proposed Changes in the Law and Polity of Our Church.

BY REV. J. B. A. ARBENS, D. D., LOUISIANA CONFERENCE.

Man's proficiency in detecting deficiences in any given system is usually proportionate to his relative intellectual obtuseness. Much obtuseness, much proficiency in discovering defects. Hypercritical critics numerous. With much gusto they "bear" obvious merit. The painter's young son was not a genius; but with large brush and black paint he destroyed the artist's choicest product. Unskilled laborers tear down an elegant edifice, the masterpiece of a celebrated architect. In the face of this, allow the following suggestions:

1. Ordination should be a concomitant with licentiation.

(1) To attach greater sacredness to the administration of the sacraments than to the preaching of the gospel well befits unscriptural sacerdotalism. Away with opus operatum! It is high time to do away with the last vestige of sacramentarianism.

(2) By grace the sinner is saved through faith. Preaching is the prerequisite of faith. Faith comes by hearing. "It pleased God by the foolishness of preaching to save them that believe." The office of preacher has been sadly minimized.

(3) None but approved theologians should be allowed to preach. Prevalent incongruities, puerilities and insipidities in our pulpits have brought odium to the church. Is preaching less important than the practice of medicine? Should less preparation be required of a preacher than of a physician? When, however, the gifts, graces and information of a candidate warrant the issuance of license to preach, the less important functions of his office should not be withheld. The man, properly qualified, authoritatively to offer pardon to the penitent, should certainly not be deemed unworthy to baptize our infants and superintend the memorial of the Lord's passion.

2. Make the presiding eldership elective.

(1) It is obvious that the presiding eldership is sadly suffering from depreciation. Many look upon the office as superfluous. The pecuniary support of same is attended with much embarrassment. Vociferously, many insist on abolishment of the office.

(2) The presiding eldership constitutes an integral part of Methodism. It is indispensable. But how rehabilitate the office? How restore lost prestige? The appointment of only first-class preachers as presiding elders has been tried, and has failed.

(3) Presiding elders are sub-bishops. They are superintendents. Bishops, general superintendents. The latter are elected by the General Conference. That is proper. Would it be less proper for the presiding elders to be annually elected by the Annual Conferences? Such election would ensure confidence and enthusiasm among preachers and people.

3. Thoroughly identify the Sunday-school with the church, making membership in the former tantamount to probationary membership in the latter.

(1) The present ecclesiastical status of the Sunday-school is ambiguous. When the term "school" shall not be a misnomer, there must be found gradation, examination, and graduation. Examination and graduation are lacking. Both can be embodied into an effective religious service of receiving the catechumens into full membership.

(2) I want a species of confirmation, minus the obnoxious features of the same. Joining the Sunday-school should be equal to becoming a catechumen of the church. On Children's Day (and there could be two during the year), the services being specially arranged for the young, the advanced classes should be briefly catechised by the pastor. Examination approved, the children are received into full church membership. Ceremonies appropriately impressive.

(3) Ritualism, to a certain degree, is necessary. We must see to the retention at our altars of our progeny. At present our children are required to come into the church the same as the outcasts, the scum and offscouring of society. Certainly, the prodigals are welcome; but our children ought not to be required for, but be retained in the church. To the "elder son" the prodigal's father said, "All that I have is thine."

4. Admit one lay delegate from each presiding elder's district to the Bishops' cabinet during the session of the Annual Conference.

(1) It is one of the misfortunes of the ministry of the gospel that with the accumulation of years the preacher becomes stubbornly self-willed and arrogantly positive in his opinions. Speaking ex cathedra so long, declaring scriptural truths so iteratedly, truths which admit of no gainsaying, the preacher would be more than human if he indicated no aspiration to infallibility even in matters not religious.

(2) Laymen, engaged in business, acquire common-sense views of men and matters. Zealous, yet impartial and prudent, they are the embodiment of conservatism. Devoid of cancerous prejudices and jealousies, they would prove themselves wise counsellors.

(3) It would in some measure lessen the almost crushing responsibility of the presiding Bishop. That the appointment of the preachers to their various fields of labor would be characterized by less mistakes than at present, and would be more satisfactory to preachers and people, can be readily perceived.

5. Convert all our Advocates into connectional organs, relegating their publication to agencies appointed and paid by a publishing committee. The General Conference elects this committee. In it should be found representative men from every section of country occupied by us.

(1) The election of the various editors by the General Conference would invest their office with superior dignity. Would be no longer subject to local prejudices. The present endorsement of the editors of the different Conference organs by the General Conference is but an empty show.

(2) In American politics centralization may not be wise. Insistence on States' rights may be right. But in church life the general trend should be centripetal, not centrifugal. The proposed change would be productive of oneness of aim and purpose all along the line. As a church, we should be a continent; not a congregation of islands on the order of the Grecian Archipelago.

(3) We have enjoyed commendable concert of action. Loss and suffering, the effects of our Civil War, have contributed to welding us into a solid whole. But these cohesive agencies are disappearing. New issues are arising. New departures. In time of peace prepare for war.

PRAYING AGAINST FRUITLESS PRAYER.

BY L. STERNBERG.

I say my prayers, but do I pray
When bowed my head and bent my knee,
With solemn voice on God I call
For needed things, grace more than all.

Sincere I am, and docile, too;
I'd do what God would have me do.
But cold my love and former zeal,
I chide my heart, but can not feel.

To pray for what I do not want
With strong desire seems arrant cant;
I rise from prayer and go my way,
But needed strength lack for each day.

Come, Holy Spirit, take my task,
Teach me for what, and how to ask.
Then shall the mercy seat to me
True source of strength and comfort be.

Do thou inspire after God's will.
Groanings of soul unstainable.
Then have I what I ask of thee,
All I need wish, rich, full and free.

Letter from China.

We have both good news and bad to report from Suchow. The good is that at our last quarterly meeting seventeen persons were received into the church. These were all pupils from our schools, Buffington Institute and the Girls' Boarding-school. We are greatly encouraged by this, as it shows that God is blessing our work, and letting us see that it is not in vain that we labor and pray night and day for the salvation and Christian training of the pupils in these schools.

The bad news is, that one of our promising young men who had been licensed to exhort was drowned this summer in the canal, near our mission premises. He went to bathe in the canal with two others, just after supper one evening, and while playing with a watermelon in the water he suddenly got in beyond his depth and was drowned before assistance could reach him. Neither he nor his companions could swim, and by the time some one who could swim arrived it was too late. Several boats passed at the time, but on account of their superstitious fear of the "water devil," who they suppose gets hold of a drowning man, they would not stop to give any assistance. The young man's name was Sen Seu Ven, and he had been supported as a pupil in Butlington Institute by the Sunday-school in Birmingham, Ala.

His loss is a sore grief to us. He was an active, energetic young man, and gave promise of becoming an efficient helper.

Last year Lu Tz Yin, one of our brightest medical assistants, was taken away by death, and now Sen Ven is gone. The Master knows what he wants done and whom to employ as agents to do it, and, no doubt, he will so overrule as to bring good instead of harm to his work by these strange visitations of his providence.

The Yellow river has again burst its banks, this time in another province—Shantung—from the one where it broke loose last year. This last outbreak caused the flooding and destruction of crops in a region that was just recovering from the terrible famine of last winter. It was thought that the work of famine relief was about finished, but this new outbreak will call for further aid to an almost indefinite extent. Over $400,000 was collected and distributed among the famine sufferers last winter and spring, besides large sums distributed by the Chinese government.

Until some adequate provision is made by the Chinese government for the regulation of the Yellow river, this condition of flood and famine must continue with but short intervals of respite from the ravages of that wayward river. There is some talk of the government taking the matter in hand, and, with the help of foreign engineers, bringing the river under control. But there does not seem to be much ground for hope as yet that this will be done.

Several changes among the high provincial officials of the empire point significantly to the near commencement of railroad construction on a large scale. The Emperor has, as reported, issued a decree constituting a Board of Railroad Administration, with Prince Chun, the father of the Emperor, as president. This, together with the changes among the provincial officials, shows that the government intends to build railroads; but as to the when and where nobody yet seems to know.

It is a cause for devout thankfulness that the life of Bishop Wilson was spared in that terrible railroad accident. The church could ill afford to lose so valuable a life, and our China mission would have suffered irreparable loss if he had been taken away. But God rules.

It seems strange that with all the science and art appliances of the time, and with all the experience of the past, fires and floods and railroad accidents are as numerous and destructive as ever. One lesson should be thoroughly learned by the people of privileged America, that man is but a pigmy when contending with the mighty forces set in motion by the finger of God.

Men and women ought to be coming in ever increasing numbers to evangelize this great heathen land. The China Inland Mission has some 350 missionaries—ten times our number—and they are still coming. O that the great Southern Methodist Church could awake to a consciousness of her duty and her privilege to have a part in bringing this mighty heathen empire under submission to her Lord.

A. P. PARKER.

SUCHOW, September 6, 1889.

P. S.—Since writing the above a decree has been issued by the Emperor of China, commanding the construction of a line of railway from Peking to Hankow. Li Hung Chang, Viceroy of Chihli, is to build the northern end from Peking southward; and Chang Chi Tung, governor of Hunan, is to build the southern end from Hankow northward. The line will be between six and seven hundred miles long, and will run through the center of China.

This is a most important event in the history of China. After many ups and downs and many disappointed hopes, the time has come at last when the Emperor and his advisors acknowledge that railroads are necessary to the strength and prosperity of a country.

Let all, who love the souls of men for the Master's sake, pray that the changes that are taking place in this country may all turn out for the furtherance of the gospel. A. P. P.

The Mississippi Conference Brotherhood of Traveling Preachers.

Brethren of the Mississippi Conference: Will you please give me your attention long enough to read this article carefully and thoughtfully?

At the approaching session of our Conference the quadrennial election of officers for our Brotherhood will take place. It is a good time to revive the interest thereof and to make a forward movement. Several members of the Conference have not joined the Brotherhood, and others have suffered their membership to lapse. Will these brethren hear me in the interest of a cause that certainly should commend itself? Perhaps you are in circumstances not to need the amount the Brotherhood pays on the death of a member, to secure your loved one against want. Then should not you that are strong help the weak? Every additional member adds to the amount that goes to the widow of a deceased brother. I appeal to your benevolence, and ask you to join us in an effort to help the bereaved of our fallen heroes. Perhaps you do not exactly like the Constitution. Neither do I. There are parts of it I would like to see amended. But I may be wrong, and so may you. We are not infallible in our judgment. Let us accord to our brethren the right we claim for ourselves—to have their own views, and assume the possibility of mistake in our own judgment—or cease to criticise the Pope of Rome for claiming infallibility for himself. It does seem that a Conference of Methodist preachers might make mutual concessions sufficient to work in harmony in so good a cause as this. They do so in other Conferences with commendable unanimity. Why can not we do so?

Now, I have these propositions to make: Let every traveling preacher of the Mississippi Conference who is not a member of the Brotherhood, and who is not over fifty years of age, consider the matter of joining at our approaching annual meeting. It will cost you only ten cents a year as dues and five dollars at the death of each member. During the past year we have had but one death. If you have objections to the Constitution, that instrument is open to amendment, and possibly your views may prevail. Give us the benefit of your membership and of your judgment. Come to Conference not only to join the Brotherhood yourself, but bring the names of as many of your laymen as will join as honorary members. They pay one dollar as their mortuary fee. I believe a thousand laymen within the bounds of the Mississippi Conference would join the Brotherhood as honorary members if they were solicited to do so. Let those who have suffered their membership to lapse from any cause come back and be restored. The Constitution provides for this on easy terms. The assistant secretary, Rev. B. F. Jones, of Woodville, can give any information on this subject you may desire.

And now I have this proposition to make to the Brotherhood: Let us amend our Constitution so as to have the mortuary fee paid in advance. Let the money be deposited by the treasurer in some safe place, and when a member dies let it be paid immediately to his widow, and an assessment issued to replace it. The advantages of this arrangement are too apparent to need explanation.

We will ask the Bishop, at the approaching session of our Conference, to give us an hour of Conference time in which to hold our annual meeting. Let the officers be ready with their reports, let those who are in arrears be ready to make settlements with the treasurer, and let us all be ready to move our Brotherhood forward into a broader plane of usefulness and upon a more solid foundation.

W. B. LEWIS.

CRYSTAL SPRINGS, Mississippi.

To the Mississippi Conference Brotherhood.

DEAR BRETHREN: "Suffer a word of exhortation"—not that our organization is languishing or our cause dying, but that I would stir up your pure minds to greater interest in its success.

At the last session of our Conference the president called the association together, which met with a feeble response, only a very few members being present. A meeting was appointed for another hour, which failed altogether. No report from the treasurer, as to the finances of the organization, was received; no report from the Executive Committee, as to the correctness of the treasurer's books, was received; and no opportunity was extended for the enrollment of other names among us. If we, who belong to and are naturally supposed to have the good of the order at heart, seem so indifferent to its success, can we hope to enlist the sympathy of others for our cause? As chairman of the Executive Committee, it has been my duty to audit the accounts of the treasurer for the past two years. With very few exceptions, the members have met their assessments promptly, which has enabled us to give timely aid to the beneficiaries. At present we have a membership of sixty-five or seventy regular members, and two or three honorary members. This allows us to pay about $350 to the family of a deceased brother.

During the six years of our existence we have lost ten members, being an average of less than two annually. That the organization has done good among us, and given much-needed aid to those in trouble, we all know full well. To my own knowledge, the widow of one brother who left a large family was enabled to buy a home for herself and little ones. Another has laid aside the money to use in the education of her son, and a third was enabled to seek relief from pain, and to have her failing health restored. How much comfort and benefit others have received from these seeming small amounts, we may easily conjecture. And all this at the cost of the insignificant sum of five dollars from each brother. In the light of pure sympathy for the family of a deceased brother minister, who can fail to give this little aid? As an investment under the idea of life insurance, we do not offer great inducements; but as a token of love for a fallen brother, we offer much. Upon this ground, and this alone, every preacher in the Conference should esteem it a privilege to be a member of the organization. No doubt there are many laymen among us who would also take pleasure in contributing from their abundance this small amount to help gladden the heart of the widow and the orphan. Brethren, let us not grow weary in well doing.

Programme for Week of Prayer and Self-Denial.

W. M. SOCIETY, M. E. CHURCH, SOUTH.

(The week in November including Thanksgiving Day.)

The names of the missionaries are omitted. Readers of the Woman's Missionary Advocate are supposed to be acquainted with the work and workers of the different fields occupied by the Woman's Board of Missions, as well as the needs of these fields. They will order their thanksgivings and petitions accordingly.

By application to Rev. Dr. John, secretary of Board of Missions, excellent tracts can be procured, which contain valuable information in regard to general work in these portions of the earth, which will add much to the interest of the meetings.

Auxiliaries are expected to have daily services. Where practicable, several may unite in these. Those who find it impossible to attend the meetings are urged to remember the subject for the day, with suitable devotions in the quiet of their homes. May the Father, whose loving kindness never fails, see his children making returns for his mercies by sincere heart service, and by gifts according as he has "prospered" them!

Monday.—"Without me ye can do nothing." (John xv, 5.) Invoke the presence and aid of the Holy Spirit in the services now beginning. Pray for the officers and members of the Woman's Board of Missions; for officers and members of every Auxiliary of the Woman's Missionary Society; for missionaries of every name and nation, specially for those representing our Board; for native churches and children in mission schools.

Tuesday—China.—"Behold, these shall come from far: and, lo, these from the north and from the west; and these from the land of Sinim" (China). (Isaiah xlix, 12. Also Isaiah vi, 8.) Pray that our missionaries may constantly have God's special guidance in their educational, medical, and social work among the natives, and that through these agencies many souls may be brought to Christ. Pray the Lord of the harvest to send more laborers to this needy field.

Wednesday—Brazil.—"For then will I turn to the people a pure language, that they may call upon the name of the Lord, to serve him with one consent." (Zephaniah iii, 9.) Pray for the success of our missionaries in their efforts to give the people of this land a pure gospel, and thus do their part in fulfilling the promise made through the Prophet Zephaniah.

Thursday—Mexican Border.—"How beautiful upon the mountains are the feet of him that bringeth good tidings, that publisheth peace; that bringeth good tidings of good, that publisheth salvation." (Isaiah iii, 7.) The marked success which has attended the labors of our representatives in this field makes it altogether appropriate to consider it on "Thanksgiving Day." By "prayer and supplication," with thanksgiving, let us "make known our requests" concerning this work and the missionaries engaged in it.

Friday—Indian Territory.—"If ye love me, keep my commandments." (John xiv, 15.) One of these commandments is, "Preach the gospel to every creature." (Mark xvi, 15.) Pray for the work already established in Muscogee, and that the attempts to occupy other promising stations in this territory may be successful, and be followed by glorious results for the heathen who "are at our door."

Saturday.—"Ask, and ye shall receive." (John xvi, 24.) "Lord, increase our faith." (Luke xvii, 5.) Pray for increased spirituality in the church; for more laborers; for God's blessing on those preparing for this work; for more liberality in the use of means intrusted to God's people.

Let us not forget those connected with our work to whom great sorrows have come. Pray earnestly for them. To make this an experience meeting would not be amiss.

Sunday.—Close these services with a public meeting. Have a missionary sermon if possible. Request special prayer by the congregation in behalf of those engaged in this work, both at home and abroad.

Offerings, the result of the self-denial of the week, may now be collected, and opportunity given to any who will contribute to the extension of Christ's kingdom through the agency of the Woman's Board of Missions.

NOTE. Be sure to report the collections of this week as the outcome of these services, and to send them through the regular channels to the general treasury.

A Token of Respect to the Memory of Bessie Fearn.

Again has the angel of death come among us and borne away one of our most loved and useful members.

Could we, in our human wisdom, have ordered our lives and the lives of others, we would have kept the sweet face and pure presence of Bessie Fearn with us still, for she seemed to have a work among us that was so necessary, and that no one else could perform; but God, who has said, "My ways are not your ways," has called her home, and we must pass under the rod, and say, "Thy will, not ours, be done." Her mission is accomplished, and God has led her soul into peace; but our hearts will ache and our eyes grow dim when we see her vacant chair, and hear no more her response to the roll-call.

"Yes, the Christian's course is run,
Ended is the glorious strife:
Fought the fight, the work is done,
Death is swallowed up in life!
Borne by angels on their wings,
Far from earth the spirit flies.
Finds her God, and sits and sings,
Triumphing in Paradise."

To her sisters and brothers we tender our heartfelt sympathy, and pray that God may take them in his everlasting arms of love, and give them the peace and comfort that he alone can give. WESLEYAN SOCIETY.

From the Work.

NEW PROSPECT CAMP MEETING.

MR. EDITOR: Permit me, through the columns of the dear ADVOCATE, to give a brief description of my trip and stay at the New Prospect Camp Meeting. I left Centerville, October 24, and arrived at the camp ground next day, at two o'clock. Dr. West, the popular presiding elder, was on hand, and preached the opening sermon, which resulted in three or four conversions, and shouts from the fathers and mothers in Israel. I have witnessed many grand meetings since my conversion; but I must say that I have never witnessed such a display of God's saving power. Every service was blessed of God in the awakening of sinners and the conversion of mourners. The people were fed by the tentholders, who seem to delight in honoring God in that way. The preacher in charge, Bro. Luther White, is very much beloved by his people, and he seems to love his people with a pure love fervently. Eternity alone will reveal the vast amount of good accomplished at this meeting. At the closing service three preachers and a number of laymen pledged themselves to quit the use of tobacco, and give their tobacco money to the missionary cause. One of the peculiar things connected with all hands that quit was, they had bad teeth.

If the New Prospect people are a true sample of the Seashore district, that district can not be surpassed in spirituality, liberality, and sociability. I will weigh, sing, and pray them against the world. I will close by saying that we did not have a revival, but the revival had us; and the question was, What is it going to do with us? I thank God for permitting me to meet and mingle with such a consecrated people. G. D. ANDERS.

CENTERVILLE, Mississippi.

COLUMBUS CIRCUIT, NORTH MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.

MR. EDITOR: I am now on my last round of appointments, and this is my fourth year on this work. My heart is not sad, but real solemn reflections take hold of me as I pass over the road that I have traveled the past four years, and think that I may never pass that way again. As I turn my back upon the churches where I have labored so long, and where the Master has so often and so signally blessed me and my labors; as I bid the brethren good-by, I can but say within myself: Is this the last time I shall enter those doors; the last time I shall ever kneel at that altar? May I never be permitted again to stand in that pulpit to declare the counsel of my Master? If so, what of the four years' ministry? Might I not have accomplished more than I have? Have I been "instant in season and out of season"?

My brother, although God has blessed my labors every year since I came to this work, I am constrained to believe he would have blessed them more abundantly had I done all I could to advance his kingdom. And I now promise my Master that I will do better in the future. I know of no four years of my life that have passed more pleasantly than the past four years. I never served a kinder or more appreciative people. And I shall leave behind me many, many true friends, both on my circuit and in the city of Columbus. The brother who follows me might "go a great deal farther and fare a good deal worse" than to come to Columbus circuit. I have just completed a nice plan of the work which will enable him to find every member whose name appears on the church register, and facilitate his acquaintance with the whole work.

During this year we have had about 60 professions of faith in Christ and 77 accessions to the church; baptized 25 adults and 17 infants. In revising the list of names on different church books, I find accessions during the past four years, 247. Number lost by death, dismissal by certificate, and other causes, 61; net gain, 186, for the four years. To God be all the glory! Amen!

Every assessment ordered by the Conference will be met in full. I have already sent the missionary treasurer my assessment for foreign missions. The Minutes of our Conference will show that this circuit has not fallen one dollar behind the past four years. May the Lord send me where he will at our next Conference, and bless my labors more abundantly, and sanctify me, soul and body, to his service!

B. F. PHILLIPS.

WOODVILLE DISTRICT, MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.

MR. EDITOR: It is known right extensively in this district that we are trying to buy a district parsonage. Its claims were presented in the Quarterly Conferences on the third round, and promises and subscriptions taken where we could. But the undertaking has met with some opposition, and mainly because the district bought a house in Clinton some years ago, in part on a credit, and finally gave it up. Some are afraid we will lose money again. But let me here emphasize the fact, that the present committee are determined to not buy on a credit, but for cash only. As the money is collected it is deposited safely until such time as we get enough to buy a suitable house. We have in hand and assured about half enough, and we feel confident of success; but the effort is much greater than need be. Let me say to our friends in the district that we need the house very much. The district is able to purchase it. Now is an opportune time. Please bring the money to me at the quarterly meeting, or hand it to your pastor in charge at any time, who will send it to me. I will feel grateful to any who will collect for it, however small the amount. Let every Methodist family in the district take some stock in it.

C. M'DONALD, Chair'n Com.

YAZOO CITY, MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.

MR. EDITOR: This has been a year of varied experiences with our church in Yazoo City. We have sustained heavy losses by removals; some of our most liberal and useful members having gone West. We have had large gains, numerically; ninety members having been added to our church this year. Some of these promise well, and I hope the greater portion of them will, by good nursing and proper encouragement, finally make useful members. One of our new members, Bro. Lee Garlug, a young man of fine character, died, in great peace, on September 22. A more triumphant death I have rarely witnessed. May it ever be said of our people, "They die well." The walls of our new church are up. With no serious hindrance, the brick work will be finished before this letter reaches your readers. The church will have four apartments—auditorium, lecture-room, infant classroom and pastor's study. The style of architecture is Gothic, four gables, slate roof, two fronts of pressed brick; numerous offsets finished with stone; windows and door-sills and steps of stone. The center windows are triple, sixteen feet long, with a narrow te[n] feet window on each side; the towe[r] at corner, seventy-two feet hig[h] double openings; bowl door, expos[ed] rafters, metal ceiling; pulpit recess nine feet deep, fourteen feet wide; [to] be heated with furnace. We have a noble band of women, to whom to[o] much credit can not be given for their untiring devotion and ceaseless labor in this enterprise. It requires no little sacrifice for a congregation, of no larger financial ability than ours, to build a $10,000 church, without any help from abroad. We feel the pressure very heavily just now, and the way through is not clear to human sight. But we believe the work is of God and for his glory; and we trust, by his blessings, to see it finished and dedicated before the Easter flowers bloom again. R. S. WOODWARD.

(We rejoice with our Bro. Woodward and his noble helpers, male and female, in their success. We have tender memories of the old church, having, for a short time, been a member there, under the ministry of the sainted Barton; but we rejoice that the old is to be superseded by the new.—ED.)

SILVER CREEK CIRCUIT, MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.

MR. EDITOR: I have refrained from reporting anything from this Silver Creek circuit, until I had something of interest to set forth. At the inception of my labors here, I found but two men in the four churches who would pray in public—now we have eight; no prayer meetings, now three; no Sunday-schools, now three. I found the people big-hearted, warm-natured, generous, but, among the men, no religion; now a pure Christian sentiment seems to pervade all. God has blessed my labors in reclaiming men long given to sin, and who have for years resisted the gospel call. Such fruit as this fills the whole soul of the laborer with rejoicing.

The kindness that greeted my wife and I when we came has suffered no diminution. We have had no intense, spasmodic manifestations, commonly denominated "poundings," but a systematic, unvarying flow of love and good-will. And as the year draws on to a close, there is no variance between people and pastor; perfect harmony rules in the church I have, being unordained, labored at some disadvantage, but—thanks to Bros. Howell and Lovett!—my disability in this respect has been, in a measure, bridged. We have no local brethren in the swamp (?)—only those who are sent come here. And just here allow me to say, the dread attaching to this section is largely unfounded; there has not been near so much sickness here as in the hill country. There is one other thing I wish to say. The people here love preaching, and when they attend church it is to listen. They do not loiter about church doors, do not laugh, talk or look about during service, and when dismissed they go directly home. This has been a happy year to me, and may God bless these people, who have been so considerate of his servant! W. G. FORSYTH.

THE CHURCH IN MODERN SOCIETY. By Julius H. Ward. Houghton, Mifflin & Co. Eyrich, 130 Canal St., New Orleans. Price, $1.

Though written evidently by an Episcopalian, this book is "intended for the whole Christian family in this country." We have read it with great interest. It discusses important questions in a fair way. The author holds to the view that the church is one of the three institutions ordained by God—the family and the State being the other two—and that these three, when operated in co-ordination, produce the family and State and Church as they were intended to be. He constantly speaks of the Roman, Anglican and Protestant Churches in this country, and his theory of church work is, that all these should unite upon what they agree in, and from that point do the work assigned. The style is easy and graceful, and pleasant to read.

FINGER PLAYS FOR NURSERY AND KINDERGARTEN. By Emilie Poulsson. Illustrations by L. J. Bridgman; music by Cornelia C. Roelke. D. Lothrop Company, Boston. Eyrich, 130 Canal street, New Orleans. Price, $1 25.

Here are eighteen finger-plays of as many different subjects, all of which will be exceedingly interesting to the children. There is the rhyme, set to music and illustrated by the fingers and hands. The author says: "By the judicious and early use of the finger-plays the development of strength and flexibility in the tiny lax fingers may be assisted, and dormant thought may receive its first awakening call through the motions which interpret as well as illustrate the phase of life and activity presented by the words."

OUR TOWN. By Margaret Sidney.

CLOUD AND CLIFF. By Willis Boyd Allen. D. Lothrop Company, Boston. Eyrich, 130 Canal street, New Orleans. Prices, $1 25 and $1, respectively.

Here are two good stories for the young people, written by popular authors in a free and easy style. The stories are well arranged and well told and the moral is good. We would not be surprised if some of the older people did not become much interested in these stories. They are gotten up in good style by the publishers.

Sunday-School Lesson.

(Hurlbert and Simpson's Lesson Commentary, Phillips & Hunt, New York.)

Fourth Quarter—Studies in Jewish History.

LESSON IX.—December 1.

THE TEMPLE DEDICATED.

1. Kings viii, 54-63.

GOLDEN TEXT.—The Lord is in his holy temple: let all the earth keep silence before him.—Hab. ii, 20.

TIME.—B. C. 1005.

PLACE.—The temple within Jerusalem upon Mount Moriah.

PARALLEL PASSAGE.—II. Chron., chapters v-vii.

54. All this prayer and supplication—The substance of the prayer is closely connected with the prayer of Moses, especially with the blessings and curses therein. If the prayer of Solomon be, as it has all the appearance of being, a genuine document of the time, preserved in the archives to which both the author of Kings and Chronicles had access, all theories of the late origin of Deuteronomy must be regarded as baseless. While references are not infrequent to other portions of the Pentateuch, the language of the prayer is mainly modeled upon Deuteronomy, the promises and threats contained in which are continually before the mind of the writer. The dedication prayer, which belongs to the finest pieces of the Old Testament, received a high significance through the fact that the person who offered it did so in his highest official character and rank, as king and head of the theocracy, and in view of the whole people, on an occasion which formed an epoch in the theocracy. This, then, is not the prayer of a private person upon a private matter, but one offered in the name of the whole nation, and about a subject which formed the central point of its worship, and, therefore, touched its highest interests. It did not spring from individual religious views, but from the religious consciousness of the whole community, and may, therefore, be regarded as a public and a solemn confession of faith, inasmuch as it brings to light the chief and fundamental truths of the Old Testament religion, which peculiarly distinguished it from all others. There is not a prayer to be compared with this in all pre-Christian antiquity. Had we nothing belonging to Jewish antiquity but this prayer, it would alone suffice to attest the depth, the purity, and the truth of the Israelitish knowledge of God and of salvation, over against the religious ideas of all other peoples. We are tempted to form too narrow a conception of prayer, and then to exclude from prayer much that in reality belongs to the very spirit and essence of communion. Solomon here tells God what he is, magnifies his attributes, adores his personality, as if giving God information regarding his own deity. This would be the shallow criticism passed upon the prayer by those who do not understand what prayer is in all its scope and grandeur. Prayer is not request only, it is fellowship, communion, identification with God; it is the soul pouring itself out just as it will, in all the tender compulsion of love, asking God for blessings, praising God for mercies, committing itself to God in view of all the mystery and peril of the future. When we enlarge our idea of prayer so as to take in all its meaning, we shall find that many a man has been praying who thought he was only preaching or discoursing upon the attributes of God. He arose . . . from kneeling—Rendered thus: "From lying upon his knees, with his hands spread out toward heaven."

55. Stood, and blessed—This blessing is omitted from the Chronicles, because it is simply a recapitulation of the longer prayer; but instead of it we have a statement in II. Chron. vii, 1-4, to the effect that fire fell from heaven and consumed the burnt-offering upon the altar.

56. Rest . . . promised—Promises of "rest" occur in Exod. xxxiii, 14; Deut. iii, 20; xii, 10; xxv, 19. This glorious fulfillment warranted the hope that the Lord would also fulfill in the future what he had promised his servant David (II. Sam. vii, 10), if the people themselves would only faithfully adhere to their God.

57. Not leave us, nor forsake us—The exact words here used by Solomon are those of Psa. xxvii, 9, entitled, probably with reason, "a psalm of David."

58. May incline our hearts—That God "inclines men's hearts" is a doctrine which first appears in Scripture in the Davidical psalms. (See Psa. cxix, 26; cxli, 4.) Remark that Solomon in this prayer seems to be thoroughly penetrated with his father's spirit.

59. Day and night—That is, as each day should require.

60. All the people of the earth—Solomon (in verse 43) prays that the result of Jehovah's hearing the prayers of heathens addressed toward the temple may be the general conversion of the world to the worship of him. This prayer breathes a spirit akin to many parts of the Book of Psalms, as, for instance, the whole of Psalms xcvi and xcviii.

61. As at this day—That is, as ye are now doing, in coming with pious intentions to this festival.

62. Offered sacrifice—In accordance with the design of the festival, by far the greater number of sacrifices were thanksgiving or peace offerings, of which the fat only was burnt, and the rest used for food.

63. Two and twenty thousand oxen, and a hundred and twenty thousand sheep—These numbers have been thought incredible, and they are certainly very great. Still there is nothing impossible in the narrative. Its various parts are in perfect harmony. The writer notes that "all Israel" were assembled at Jerusalem—all Israel "from the entering in of Hamath to the river of Egypt" (verse 65)—which would imply, at least, 100,000 or 120,000 men. And as they all offered sacrifice with the king (verse 62), the number of victims must have been enormous. Again, we are expressly told that the one temple altar was found insufficient for the victims (verse 64), and that on that account the king "hallowed the middle of the court that was before the house of the Lord;" or, as some translate, "hallowed the whole area of the court," simply in order that many victims might be offered at one and the same time. It has been said that the people assembled could not possibly have eaten the flesh of so many victims; but this depends on their number, and we really do not know what the number assembled was. The number of full-grown males at the last census had been 1,300,0 0 (II. Sam. xxiv, 9), or 1,570,000. (I. Chron. xxi, 5) We can not say how many of these had come up to Jerusalem, or what proportion of them were accompanied by their families. Again, we can not say that there was no waste. It was provided in the law that anything remaining of a peace-offering to the third day should be privately burned (Lev. xix, 6); much of the meat may have been disposed of in this way, the object of the sacrifice being the glory of God, and not the convenience of the people. Profusion was a usual feature of the sacrifices of antiquity. Three hundred oxen formed a common sacrifice at Athens. Five hundred kids were offered annually at Marathonia. Sacrifices of a thousand oxen were not infrequent. According to an Arabian historian, the Caliph Moktader sacrificed during his pilgrimage to Mecca, in the year of the hegira 350, forty thousand camels and cows and fifty thousand sheep. Tavernier speaks of one hundred thousand victims as offered by the king of Tonquin.

Missionary.

For Us.

Says the Missionary Herald:

"Pray for us!" is the cry of all missionaries who are facing heathenism. So uniform is this request that it may seem to have lost its force. Mr. Winchester, of North China, gives some of the reasons why this request should be heeded: "May I be permitted to bring this matter of prayer—humble supplication from honest, fervent hearts on behalf of the workers abroad—before the churches at home? In the midst of a Sabbathless, idolatrous, superstitious people, is it any marvel if the ethereal edge of Christian life should lose its temper and keenness when deprived of all the aids and incentives to faith, fervency and courage which the communion and intercourse of saints in the home lands afford? There is a popular misconception, widely spread, which regards the missionary as one who, as well by his isolation as by his self-renunciation, is far removed from the temptations which commonly beset the pathway of the ordinary Christian at home. If he is, it is only to be subjected to others at least equally strong and perhaps more deceptive. The great temptation was in the depths of the wilderness. There are peculiar trials to which the foreign missionary is exposed which surely call for the earnest petition of our brethren at home. I believe, on the other hand, that the average missionary is above the average in piety, and that it would be the joyful testimony of thousands that Jesus is to them verily as 'rivers of water in a dry place, and as the shadow of a great rock in a weary land.' Workers and work truly need your prayers."

There seems to be plenty of good and fresh testimony to counterbalance the unfavorable comments respecting missions and missionaries of one Lieutenant Wood. In the Boston Herald, of August 20, another naval officer awards high praise to the gospel workers in China, whom he has found living with their families right among the natives. The converts he also pronounces to be stanch and worthy men and women. Hardly a week after the impulsive words of Lieutenant Wood were given to the public, Lieutenant E. H. Taunt filed with the Department of State in Washington a report of his observations in the Lower Congo Basin. He says, "The American Baptist Mission there is doing excellent work, and is in a flourishing condition." Any one, whether he wear a United States uniform or not, can pick flaws in methods of evangelization at home and abroad; but indiscriminate criticism only reacts on him who makes it.

ITEMS.

Java is one of the largest islands of the Malay Archipelago. It is 666 miles in length, 36 to 126 miles in breadth, shaped and about as large as the island of Cuba, and has a dense population of about 18,000,000 of people.

There are two distinct nations that mainly compose the native population, the Sundanese and Javanese. They speak a separate and distinct language, but both nations are Malayan. They are described as docile, peaceable, sober, industrious, and as "the most straightforward and truthful of all Asiatic people." Batavia, the capital and commercial seaport, is on the northwest coast, having a population of over 100,000.

Speaking of the social and religious condition of the island, Dr. A. T. Pierson says: "In some respects Javanese civilization is an advance upon that of British India. Mohammedanism is mixed up with Buddhism and heathenism as the religion of the island. Annually the natives go in crowds with priests up the Bromok volcano to propitiate with offerings the fire spirit. Cocoanuts, pineapples, rice, cakes, fruit, coins, are cast into the crater. This ceremony has probably been suggested by the terrific and fatal volcanic outbreaks that have abounded."

The Evangelical Mission in Java is in a very destitute condition. There are at most only about 4,000 Christians, a fact which reflects no glory on the Dutch rule on the island—which dates from 1623, with five years' interruption—and the Christianity of the Netherlands. The few luminous points in the meagre mission history of Java, says Dr. Warneck, are the watchmaker Emde in Surabaya, the missionary, Jellesma, the newly-founded and nationally-aided institute at Depok, an "oasis in the desert," and the work of the Netherlands Missionary Society, of Rotterdam, among the Sundanese.—Mid-Continent.

Prohibition for Thistles.

It would appear that in Illinois they have a statute prohibiting the Canada thistle from being permitted to go to seed. A penalty of from $10 to $100 is fixed for failure to destroy these thistles and to prevent their propagation. This law is surely a dangerous violation to individual rights. Hasn't a farmer a right to grow thistles on his own farm, if he wants to? What matter if the seeds do blow over on his neighbors' fields and lessen the crops; can the farmer help that? Why not license the thistles and levy a tax on thistle-down? We often hear that prohibition don't prohibit. You can't eradicate the thistles by prohibition and by affixing a penalty for letting them ripen and scatter their seeds everywhere. Begin with a small thistle-tax and gradually work it up. Have a local-option thistle ordinance passed, and let all the communities vote whether they want them or not. The cities will all vote for the thistles, but the country districts will vote the thistle down. There are other evils besides thistles, why make a law against this weed particularly? Regulate thistles, we say. Don't let them grow anywhere but in the pastures and fence-corners, and on the vacant lots where the children play.

Why not treat thistles in Illinois in the same way in which they treat strong drink and saloons? Do our good brethren care more for their fields and crops than they do for their homes and families? Of course they do not.

They why prohibit thistles, and fine good citizens for not cutting them down before they run to seed and scatter the pests over the broad acres, while they let the liquor mischief have free sway among their growing boys and young men and homes? If prohibition is good for thistles, why is it not good for groggeries and saloons, and the thistles of the moral fields? Mid-Continent.

After the Boy.

During the recent Chicago Convention, one of the delegates, a young business man from Boston, fell in with a burly, red faced Chicagoan, who had evidently just been patronizing the bar. In the course of this conversation, the man from Chicago said, "What are you fellows trying to do down at the Battery? You are hot on temperance I see by the papers. Do you think you could make a temperance man of me?"

"No," replied the delegate; "we evidently couldn't do much with you: but we are after your boy."

At this unexpected retort, the man dropped his jocular tone, and said, seriously, "Well, I guess you have got the right of it. If somebody had been after me when I was a boy, I should be a better man to-day."—Selected.

Catarrh

Is a constitutional and not a local disease, and therefore it cannot be cured by local applications. It requires a constitutional remedy like Hood's Sarsaparilla, which, working through the blood, eradicates the impurity which causes and promotes the disease, and effects a permanent cure. Thousands of people testify to the success of Hood's Sarsaparilla as a remedy for catarrh when other preparations had failed. Hood's Sarsaparilla also builds up the whole system and makes you feel renewed in health and strength.

Our General Conference.

Our General Conference is composed of one minister and one layman for every thirty-six members of the Annual Conferences. If in any Conference there is a fraction of two-thirds over, that Conference will be entitled to one minister and one layman for such two-thirds of thirty-six members. The General Conference is the only law-making body in our church. The men who compose it, the only law-makers. At each of the Annual Conferences, as they are held, these delegates to the General Conference are being chosen to meet in St. Louis, Mo., May, 1890. In a few weeks the patronizing Conferences of this paper will select their delegates to that body. In view of this fact we write this article.

To one who endeavors to keep up with the current history of the times, it seems clear that pretty much everything is in a sort of transition. Everything appears to be moving; whether forward or backward, it is sometimes hard to tell. In a recent book, the author says: "The whole world is entering upon a new development of industrial and commercial possibilities, and it stands to reason that neither the Church nor the State can occupy the same position they held a century ago." Not only is everything on the move, but this perpetual movement is complicating matters, and the relations of things are becoming more complex every day. This complexity produces new problems, and they are arising on every hand. Even life itself, under these conditions, seems to be growing larger and its duties more numerous and its privileges grander and its possibilities vaster. Thinking people to-day are looking at the current of events with open eyes that see a great deal more than the thinking people of twenty-five years ago saw. A writer in the last number of the Century Magazine has this significant paragraph:

The times are characterized by a bold advance from an individualism which had come to verge on disintegration, to a truer appreciation of the value of organic life. Our ablest moralists are now studying men in their mutual responsibilities and correlations; and public questions are more frequently approached from the standpoint of social loyalty and of unselfish public principle. The best religious thought of the day has begun to address itself earnestly to the social wrongs, which remain the reproach of our professed Christianity; and there is good hope, therefore, of a social economy which proposes to itself something better than mere money-making, of a statesmanship which rises far above all mere party politics, of a philosophy which is at once carefully scientific and profoundly spiritual, and of a working Christianity, which seeks less to bring others to share our convictions than to raise each individual to its own noblest standard, and to bring both ourselves and others more directly under the overmastering influence of the one supreme personality of Christ.

The church is "the great, progressive, civilizing, ennobling, spiritualizing power of all society." The object of a church organization is to bring the principles of Christianity into such a contact with humanity as shall render her a helpful agency for good at every point. Church laws and rules and regulations are enacted to enable the church to do this very thing. There is no other use for church legislation. If it does not do this, it is a dead letter, and ought to be. The continual changes going on around us—this transition state in which we find everything—may not demand new laws, but it certainly demands new adjustments of law and new adaptations of the working forces of Christianity to the present condition of things. The proper adjustment of old principles to new developments, the best adaptation of laws and rules to the present necessities of society, in all its phases, is the very least that ought to be demanded of any legislative body of the church in these times. The church that does not endeavor to adapt its working force to the changed and changing condition of affairs will not wield power in applying the principles of Christianity to the growing necessities of the human family. If it does not do this, it fails in its mission. That church which fails to present Christianity to men in all the relations and interests of life as a power working only for their good, need not expect to win either the respect of men or the approbation of God!

These and other points, which will readily occur to the reader, show that our next General Conference ought to be made up of wise men. This brings up the subject of delegates and their qualifications. Who are qualified, at such a time as this is, to legislate for the church of Christ? It is evident that these times demand qualified men, and no other. It is devoutly hoped that our General Conference will not present to the world the spectacle which another Christian convention so recently exhibited, in spending so large a portion of the time of its sitting in wrangling and debating over the phraseology of its ritual! One single fact of to-day outweighs in importance ten thousand rituals, and that fact is, that "while there is more activity to-day in the churches than ever before, there are also more unchurched people than ever before." While this state of things remains no Christian body can afford to waste time over minor matters. The one thing to do, is to so adjust our church machinery to the present condition of affairs as to give the whole movement of religious influence a trend, whose momentum will dislodge the masses from their prejudices and thus allow the demands of Christianity easy access to their consciences, and its principles free play in their lives.

The qualifications needed for this most important work are laid down in that old Book, whence has come all the wisdom of past church legislation, and whence we need to draw at present, and to whose infallible directory our children will go with a faith reinforced by all the past history of the church. In that Book we read that when the representatives of the tribes of Israel came to Hebron "to make David king over all Israel," there came two hundred of the children of Issachar, of whom it was said, "they were men that had understanding of the times, to know what Israel ought to do, and all their brethren were at their commandment." That is the kind of men we need in our next General Conference—"men that have understanding of the times." No other men can legislate wisely. Wise legislation requires the peculiar fitness of an accurate knowledge of the wants of those for whom laws are made, and the tact to adjust the laws to the necessities of the case. The church operates in the world and upon it. The church legislator ought to know the needs of the world and the forces and capacities of the church to remedy those needs. He should know both thoroughly. He should "have understanding of the times," because without this knowledge he can not tell "what Israel ought to do." He should be a man who has kept up with the wonderful movements of this present time, and understands those movements in their breadth and depth and trend, and who also knows how to adjust the church laws and usages to them so as to control them for the high and lasting interests of humanity. He should have a perfect knowledge of the principles of Christianity, and be thoroughly imbued with its divine spirit, or else he will fail to appreciate the sufferings and woes and necessities of men, and, therefore, fail in the application of the working force of the church to their alleviation. He should have a heart full of that love which makes him feel that every man is his brother and needs his help, and a mind enlightened by that wisdom which will broaden his range of vision so as to include within the limits of his legislative action the lowest as well as the highest in society. He should be like Moses on Mount Sinai, holding high communion with God and yet having all the tents of Israel in full view.

These are the legislators the church needs, "the children of Issachar, who have understanding of the times to know what Israel ought to do"—men, who by their acts in Conference assembled, will so interpret our holy Christianity that the world will see in it the only solution of "those problems which with ever-increasing weight are oppressing the minds and hearts of thoughtful men." If we get such men, "all their brethren will be at their commandment," and our church will enter upon a career of usefulness which will rival, if not eclipse, the illustrious history of our fathers.

Finally.

This paper, for several weeks past, has contained several lengthy articles, pro and con, on the subject of sanctification. This discussion is as old as the Methodist Church, and has not always been carried on in a loving spirit. The discussion to-day very much resembles that of one hundred and twenty-five years ago. Hardly anything is said now that was not said then. So as we seem to be beating the old straw over and getting nothing but a heated irritability, we will close the discussion for the present by giving to our readers a letter from Mr. Wesley to Mr. Maxfield, in which he points out the errors and inconsistencies and tendencies of those who contend for extreme views and run off into extreme practices. Mr. Wesley's true forecast of these tendencies is seen in what he says about the "divisive spirit;" for not long after this Maxfield left the Methodist fold and took some hundreds with him.

Here is the letter taken from Moore's "Life of John Wesley:"

Without any preface or ceremony, which is useless between you and me, I will simply and plainly tell you what I dislike in your doctrine, spirit, or outward behavior.

1. I like your doctrine of perfection, or pure love; love excluding sin; your insisting that it is merely by faith; that consequently it is instantaneous (though preceded and followed by a gradual work) and that it may be now, at this instant. But I dislike your saying a man may be as perfect as an angel; that he can be absolutely perfect; that he can be infallible, or above being tempted or that the moment he is pure in heart he can not fall from it.

I dislike your directly or indirectly depreciating justification; saying a justified person is not in Christ, is not born of God, is not sanctified, not a temple of the Holy Ghost; or that he can not please God or can not grow in grace.

I dislike your saying that one saved from sin needs nothing more than looking to Jesus, needs not to hear or think of anything else; believe, believe is enough; that he needs no self-examination; no times of private prayer; needs not mind little or outward things; and that he can not be taught by any person who is not in the same state.

I dislike your affirming that justified persons in general persecute them that are saved from sin, and that they have persecuted you on this account.

2. As to your spirit, I like your confidence in God and your zeal for the salvation of souls.

I dislike something which has the appearance of pride, of overvaluing yourselves and undervaluing others, particularly the preachers, thinking that not only are they blind and that they are not sent of God, but even that they are dead; dead to God and walking in the way to hell; that they are going one way, you another; that they have no life in them. Your speaking of yourselves as though you were the only men who knew and taught the gospel; and as if not only all the clergy but all the Methodists besides were in utter darkness.

I dislike something that has the appearance of enthusiasm; overvaluing feelings and inward impressions; mistaking the mere work of imagination for the voice of the Spirit; expecting the end without the means and undervaluing reason, knowledge and wisdom in general.

I dislike something that has the appearance of Antinomianism; not magnifying the law and making it honorable; not enough valuing tenderness of conscience and exact watchfulness in order thereto; using faith rather as contradistinguished from holiness than as productive of it.

But what I most of all dislike is your littleness of love to your brethren; your want of meekness, gentleness, long-suffering; your impatience of contradiction; your counting every man your enemy that reproves or admonishes you in love, your bigotry and narrowness of spirit, loving in a manner only those that love you; your censoriousness, proneness to think hardly of all who do not exactly agree with you; in one word, your divisive spirit. Indeed I do not believe that any of you either design or desire a separation. But you do not enough fear, abhor and detest it, shuddering at the very thought. All the preceding tempers tend to it and gradually prepare you for it.

3. As to your outward behavior, I like the general tenor of your life, devoted to God and spent in doing good. I dislike your appointing such meetings as hinder others from attending either the public preaching or their class or band. I dislike your spending so much time in several meetings, as many that attend can ill spare from the other duties of their calling, unless they omit either the preaching or their class or band. This naturally tends to dissolve our society by cutting the sinews of it. As to your more public meetings I like the praying fervently and largely for all the blessings of God. I know much good has been done hereby and I hope much more will be done. But I dislike several things therein. The using improper expressions in prayer; sometimes too bold, if not irreverent; sometimes too pompous and magnificent, extolling yourselves rather than God, and telling him what you are, not what you want. Your affirming people will be justified or sanctified just now. Your affirming they are when they are not. The bidding them say, I believe. The bitterly condemning any that oppose, calling them wolves, etc., and pronouncing them hypocrites or not justified.

Read this calmly and impartially before the Lord in prayer. So shall the evil cease and the good remain. And you will then be more than ever united to

Your affectionate brother,

J. WESLEY.

CANTERBURY, Nov. 2, 1761.

It will be seen that the above letter was written just one hundred and twenty-seven years ago, and yet it reads as if it had been written for some people of to-day. This is not strange. It is simply an evidence that "history repeats itself." The doctrine of sanctification never gave Mr. Wesley any trouble. It was the unscriptural theories concerning the doctrine which gave him trouble all his life. It was interpreting the doctrine of sanctification by the feelings of the professor, rather than by the consensus of Scripture, which brought in the trouble. And we think right at this point is the trouble to-day. A great many seem to us to interpret the teaching of God's word by their feelings, when they should do just the reverse—interpret their feelings by the Word of God. Such a method of interpretation is entirely wrong, for it would, as one can see, in a very short time overthrow all Scripture. If our reason, assisted and enlightened by the Holy Ghost, is not to be used in the interpretation of the Word of God, then are we at sea, without compass or chart.

The Catholic Centennial.

The Romish hierarchy claims for itself alone the title of "catholic," and many allow them this privilege, not recognizing all that the name involves. But let that be as it may, only be it understood I use the term in its popular and not in its literal meaning. Hitherto this church, like many others, when it meets in a body for general or specific purposes, claims too much for itself, ignoring the agency of other Christian denominations in the great work of reclaiming the world from darkness, ignorance and vice, for Christ and his kingdom. But, strange to say, the spell of ages seems to have been broken, and there was a recognition, though a tacit one, that Protestantism is now a force among the people of America for right, and all good Catholics are called upon to unite with them to maintain the sanctity of the Christian Sabbath. One of the most significant facts in connection with this gathering, is that it was a convention of laymen; but the clergy were there in all the glory and splendor of Solomon. Still the thought of a convention of the laity for any purpose, in a church that claims clerical infallibility, means something. Liberal movements of this sort, if I read history aright, never retrogade. This privilege of having a voice in church affairs, once granted to the Roman Catholic laity, can not be wrested from them. The principles of the Catholicism, held so long and so pertinaciously, are evidently being ventilated, or some cunning jugglery was used at this convention, which says one thing and means another. Perhaps one, perhaps the other; I think some of both. But "Timeo Danaos et dona ferentes." In the platform of principles enumerated there is much to commend, and things which every Christian must endorse. They call for the support of Catholic schools and colleges. It is only natural that they should, for in these lie one of the most potent agencies for the conservation of their doctrine and life as a church. They seemingly endorse popular education, but qualify their meaning by calling it "sound popular education." Mormonism and divorce are denounced—that is good; the sanctity of the marriage bond is upheld—that is better; they favor temperance—that is best. Works of charity are commended, such as hospitals, schools, etc. Such institutions none know how to use to better advantage than they. Little was said about the temporal power of the Pope. Perhaps it was not wise to discuss this momentous subject. They spoke of "the absolute freedom of the Holy See." We all know what that freedom means. There is no need to stress this point. But one thing is sure: from a calm, dispassionate study of the work done at Baltimore, the Roman Catholic Church is not, nor can ever again be what she was—mistress of the world. So strongly implanted in the hearts of the thinking men of this generation is the love of personal liberty and free thought, that a dominant, universal empire, either civil or ecclesiastical, is an impossibility.

Notes.

Balt[illegible] has 354 churches, and 303 are Protestant Churches, with 65,000 communicants and 75,000 Sunday-school children.

We believe this, from the New York Christian Advocate, is every word true:

If the same diligence and industry which we see in business and politics and educational and domestic affairs were employed in the church, there would be no complaints about empty pews or want of religious progress.

The Southern Churchman, speaking of the effort to change the name of the Protestant Episcopal Church, has this very sensible sentence:

When we are the church of the American people let us by all means call ourselves "The American Church;" but until we are let us be content with the more modest, but to say a more descriptive name.

A London Methodist paper makes a suggestion that might be profitably acted upon by our ministers. It is this:

If ministers read over again during the present month William Arthur's "Tongue of Fire," and the Acts of the Apostles, and the Gospel of St. John, and the prophecies of Isaiah, with what sacred eloquence would they summon their people to renewed consecration, and with what holy expectation should we all enter upon these solemnities of the appointed days of prayer!

The Methodist Times, of London, says: "Methodism was never so strong as it is to-day, nor were our people ever so warmly attached to our methods and polity as at present." We believe the above is eminently true in regard to the Methodists of Mississippi and Louisiana. They are winding up another year of hard work, and are as heartily in love with Methodism as ever they were; indeed, with the great majority, it is a growing love.

The New York Sun had a dispatch, a few days ago, which said that a priest of the Province of Quebec had publicly burned in the square opposite his church hundreds of Bibles he had collected from his parishioners. They had been sold to the people by agents of the Bible Society. The priest had warned his people against buying them, and, as they did not heed his warning, he went from house to house and collected them up and publicly burned them. "History repeats itself." "Eternal vigilance is the price of liberty."

There is nothing plainer than the growth of the newspapers in the direction of illustrations. Ten years ago the practice of illustrating was confined to a few papers. Now nearly every large paper has adopted the practice. And a writer in one of our exchanges predicts that in twenty years all the newspapers will be illustrated. Fifteen years ago we heard one of our thoughtful men express the opinion that our church monthlies had all failed because of the lack of illustrations. The reason that the practice grows is that people, like pictures, and the newspapers, as a rule, try to give the people what they like.

In an exchange we find this: "Extemporaneous speeches are very interesting and profitable when they are carefully prepared beforehand. The extemporaneous speeches which seem to be so wholly spontaneous are the result of much study and wide reading." A popular speaker of our acquaintance, who has the credit of being a fine off hand speaker, says he always prepares with diligence for an extemporaneous effort. Even an apology for "being unexpectedly called upon" has been known to be carefully studied out. All which means, be sure to prepare yourself well for all public addresses, whether on the platform or in the pulpit.

Bro. Parker, in his article about General Conference work, on the first page, recommends that those places in Louisiana, now in the bounds of the Mississippi Conference, be transferred to the Louisiana Conference. It has seemed to some brethren for a long time that this would be a proper thing to do. We think that there is a preliminary matter that ought to be attended to before this question is brought before the General Conference; and that is, to find out if such a change is desired by the Methodists of that section. This could be very well ascertained through the Church and Quarterly Conferences in that region before the General Conference meets. If they favor the change, let the matter come up; if they don't favor it, let the matter drop. It won't do to transfer whole sections of the church from one Conference to another against their wishes.

Personal and Otherwise.

The newest phrase is "ecclesiastical laziness." That man is said to be afflicted with this disease who can do earnest work in any line of labor except in the church line.

We are still a growing republic. There are now forty in the "sisterhood of States."

The Universalist Convention, recently held at Lynn, Mass., raised $4,000 toward making a beginning in mission work in Japan.

Let the brethren do their best for the ADVOCATE in the way of collecting subscription dues. We are dependent almost entirely upon the preachers. They are our friends indeed, and this is our "time of need."

Rev. J. G. Sibley gave us a call during the past week. His health is somewhat improved, though he says he will not be able to take work next year.

We notice in the Clarion-Ledger that the citizens of Wesson and Beauregard have subscribed $25,000 as an inducement to draw the coming Methodist college to Wesson. And they say they will do still better.

John Crerar, late of Chicago, by will has dispensed $1,300,000 to various churches and benevolent institutions, and $2,250,000 for the erection and maintenance of a public library in Chicago, to be called The John Crerar Library. In the selection of its books he directs that a healthy moral sentiment be kept in view, and all immorality be excluded.

The Christian Index, the organ of the Colored M. E. Church in America, favors ordaining preachers to the office of deacon before putting them in charge of a congregation.

The Conference sessions are nearing. We trust our brethren will remember to collect all moneys due the ADVOCATE. A representative of the paper will be in attendance at Conference.

The Osage tribe of Indians number 1,501, and are said to be worth $15,171 apiece. If some of our cute folks get among them, they won't have it long!

A note from Mrs. Anna Harper, of the Financial Committee of the Woman's Missionary Society of the Mississippi Conference, requests us to state that the printed proceedings of the tenth annual session of the society, held at Natchez, in May, last, are now ready for delivery. Every society that desires copies of the pamphlet (that has not already done so) is requested to forward $1 to Mrs. Anna Harper, Raymond, Miss., immediately, and pamphlets will be forwarded by mail immediately.

Thanksgiving Day falls on the opening day of the Sunday Convention. The convention meets in Grunewald Hall. The morning session opens at 10:30 A. M., the evening session at 7:30 P. M. Eminent speakers will address the meetings. The public is invited to attend.

Our church in this city will hold a Thanksgiving service in Carondelet Street Church, Thursday, November 28, at 11 A. M. Rev. J. M. Beard will preach the sermon.

Dr. Hunnicutt, at the recent quarterly meeting in Baton Rouge, secured about one thousand dollars for the endowment fund of Centenary College.

At the Northwest Texas Conference eight elders and twenty-one deacons were ordained by Bishop Key. That is a goodly number of new recruits for the itinerancy!

A brother in the Northwest Texas Conference:

Bishop, in our choice of delegates to the General Conference we selected only such men as could be spared without hurt to their charges.

Four out of the five delegates are presiding elders!

Rev. W. R. Whatley writes: "Throughout the bounds of the Centerville circuit there has been a gracious work of the Lord this year. Our Bro. J. J. Kelley, P. C., is happy in the work. Assisted by Bro. Wilson Moore, who preaches with great acceptability, we held a meeting of four days at New Magnolia, on the Lake, resulting in fifteen accessions and ten conversions. Another at Big Creek, resulting in five accessions. Baptized ten adults and eleven infants. Thanks to God for his abundant blessings on our labors!"

ANOTHER COUP D'ETAT.—The spirit of democracy is enlarging its influence. One of the wonderful revolutions of modern times is the recent overthrow of the monarchy in Brazil. It seems to have been as quiet as it was effective. No tumultuous uprising; no bloodshed; no alarms of civil war, and yet the Emperor and royal family have been banished the realm and a republic under the name, "The United States of Brazil," has been established under a provisional government. The old Emperor has been well provided for, having been paid $2,500,000 in cash, with an annuity of $450,000. He is said to have departed for Lisbon. Peace reigns in the new republic, and everything moves on smoothly! The whole affair is a wonder!

A Reason for a Request.

A pointer: The vote in the Episcopal Convention to add to the ritual a prayer for the souls of the baptized dead stood 119 against and 111 for the proposition. So they were pretty evenly divided on that question. That means they are pretty far on the road to Rome. And yet they ask other "sects" to join them!—NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE, November 14.

And why not? Having linked themselves with High Churchism, are they not like the fellow who yoked himself with an unbroken yearling, and then asked: "Won't somebody stop us?" Surely the Protestant Episcopalians know that if they could only get the 5,000,000 Methodists in the United States to join their 450,000 communicants, the Methodists would suppress the High Church prelatical party in "the Church," whose "impudent impotence and impotent impudence," according to Phillips Brooks, "have made them ridiculous in the eyes of the thinking people of America."

L., N. O. and T. R. R. (Mississippi Valley) and Queen and Crescent (V. S. and P. section)—On these lines terms are the same over each road. Buy first-class ticket to Baton Rouge (or to Vicksburg. If to Vicksburg only, buy same class ticket there to Baton Rouge), and when you buy your ticket get the railroad agent's certificate, stating that you bought full-fare tickets. Bring those certificates to Conference and have the secretary sign them. This entitles you to return ticket here at one-third the usual rates.

People Wonder

WHEN they find how rapidly health is restored by taking Ayer's Sarsaparilla. The reason is that this preparation contains only the purest and most powerful alteratives and tonics. To thousands yearly it proves a veritable elixir of life.

Mrs. Jos. Lake, Brockway Centre, Mich., writes: "Liver complaint and indigestion made my life a burden and came near ending my existence. For more than four years I suffered untold agony. I was reduced almost to a skeleton, and hardly had strength to drag myself about. All kinds of food distressed me, and only the most delicate could be digested at all. Within the time mentioned several physicians treated me without giving relief. Nothing that I took seemed to do any permanent good until I began the use of Ayer's Sarsaparilla, which has produced wonderful results. Soon after commencing to take the Sarsaparilla I could see an in my condition, my appetite began to return and with it came the ability to digest all the food taken, my strength improved each day, and after a few months of faithful attention to your directions, I found myself a well woman, able to attend to all household duties. The medicine has given me a new lease of life, and I cannot thank you too much."

"We, the undersigned, citizens of Brockway Centre, Mich., hereby certify that the above statement, made by Mrs. Lake, is true in every particular and entitled to full credence."—O. P. Chamberlain, G. W. Waring, C. A. Wells, Druggist.

"My brother, in England, was, for a long time, unable to attend to his occupation, by reason of sores on his foot. I sent him Ayer's Almanac and the testimonials it contained induced him to try Ayer's Sarsaparilla. After using it a little while, he was cured, and is now a well man, working in a sugar mill at Brisbane, Queensland, Australia."—A. Attewell, Sharbot Lake, Ontario.

Sufferers are not generally aware that these diseases are contagious, or that they are due to the presence of living parasites in the lining membrane of the nose and eustachian tubes. THE TOYS' REVOLT.

BY FREDERIC HART WILSON.

Oh, girls, but I had such a fright—
An awful dream—the other night!
I dreamt the toys all said that they Thought it was their turn now to play,
And so—it was ridiculous,
But dreadful too—they played with us
All sorts of games, just as if we
Were playthings, and they real, you see.
Some stiff tin soldiers, fierce and grim,
Took off a boy to play with him.
They marched him miles, and never stopped;
They shot at him, with guns that popped,
Awfully loud, in forts of blocks,
And then they put him in their box.
You never saw such dreadful toys.
All of the tops were spinning boys—
'Cept whip tops; they, with all their might,
Went whipping them around. The kites
And red balloons caught boys in crowds,
And flew them 'way up in the clouds;
The marbles had them in a ring,
All pounding them like anything.
The dolls were bad as they could be:
They really acted awfully.
The big wax doll, the worst of all,
Held baby. If she'd let him fall!
The precious! who'd have thought she would,
When she pretends that she's so good?
The rest all played with little girls.
They combed out hard their tangly curls;
Dressed them in clothes that were too tight.
Or weren't becoming to them a mile;
Washed them in tubs of such a size,
And rubbed the soap all in their eyes;
Then ran away when some one called,
And left them cold, and wet, and—bald.

MR. EDITOR: Here comes a little seven-year-old boy to join the band of cousins. My papa is a Methodist preacher. My mamma is dead; she died the twelfth day of August. We miss her very much. I have one little sister; her name is Ora May. She was five years old Saturday. We live with our papa and two aunties at the parsonage. Bro. C. McDonald is our presiding elder; I always love to see him come, for I believe he loves little children. Sister and I had a pleasant trip to our grandpa's a few weeks ago. We had a nice time playing with our little uncles, aunt and cousins. My little cousin, Wily Griffin, has a train. I think it a nice toy for little boys. I have a little wagon which a black boy made me. I haul stove-wood for my aunties, and sometimes I haul sister in it. I hope, as this is my first letter, you will not send it to the waste-basket. I will close by asking the cousins a question: What is the name of the only person in the Bible whose name commences with the letter "q?"

Your little friend,

NORMIE SULLIVAN.

GLOSTER, Mississippi.

MR. EDITOR: I thought I would write to the ADVOCATE, as I have never written before. Papa takes your paper, and I read all the nice little letters. I am eleven years old. I go to school. Mr. Robinson is my teacher; I like him very well. I am a member of the Methodist Church, and I go every Sunday. Bro. Mellen is our preacher. We have five churches: the Methodist, Presbyterian, Baptist, Episcopal and Catholic. I go to Sunday-school, and Miss Lula McGee is my teacher. We are going to have a library. The Sunday-school takes the Sunday-school Visitor. I have five sisters and three brothers. My baby sister is named after our missionary, Annie Clara Chrisman. Every third Sunday we have a union Sunday-school meeting, and I go. I will ask the little boys a question: By whom were the Jews delivered according to prophecy?

Your true friend,

KATIE SMITH.

WESSON, Mississippi.

MR. EDITOR: In your good paper, of October 17, I see a letter from a little cousin of mine (Rosa Taylor), who wishes to hear from her relatives in Louisiana. I have never written a letter for a paper in my life; but mamma says that I ought to answer Cousin Rosa; so, with your permission, I will try and do so, and if you will not publish it, you can throw it in what you editors call your "waste-basket." Our dear old grandpa makes our house his home; but he does not stay there all the time: he frequently goes to Uncle John's at Gibbs, and sometimes to see other relatives. He is now in very feeble health, but I do hope and trust that God will spare him many years yet. Uncle John Willis and Cousin Clint speak of coming back to Arizona to live. I do hope they will. Sister Minnie is going to school in Gibbs.

Your little friend,

GRACIE MALONE.

ARIZONA, Louisiana.

Rheumatism originates in lactic acid in the blood, which settling in the joints causes the pains and aches of the disease. Hood's Sarsaparilla cures rheumatism by neutralizing the acidity of the blood, and giving it richness and vitality. Try Hood's Sarsaparilla.

Taking the Children.

A little boy had been deeply interested in reading Bunyan's "Pilgrim's Progress," the characters in that wonderful book being all living men and women to him. One day, while his grandma was busy with her needle-work, he took his slate and pencil and seated himself by her side; and thinking of what he had been reading, he said:

"Grandma, which of all the people in the 'Pilgrim's Progress' do you like the best?"

"I like Christian," was the reply, giving the little boy her reasons. "Which do you like best?"

Slowly, but thoughtfully, the little fellow replied, "I like Christiana."

"And why, my boy?" inquired the old lady.

A FLOATING ISLAND.—One of the most picturesque and remarkable bodies of water in the world is Henry's Lake in Idaho. It is situated on the dome of the continent in a depression in the Rocky Mountains called Targee's Pass. It has an area of forty square miles, and all around it rise snow-capped peaks, some of them being the highest of the continent's backbone. In the lake is a floating island about three hundred feet in diameter. It has for its basis a mat of roots so dense that it supports large trees and a heavy growth of underbrush. These roots are covered with several feet of rich soil. The surface is solid enough to support the weight of a horse anywhere, and there are places where a house could be built. The wind blows the island about the lake and it seldom remains twenty-four hours in the same place.

A MAN OF YOUR WORD.—Learn to be a man of your word. One of the most disheartening of all things is to be associated in an undertaking with a person whose promise is not to be depended upon—and there are plenty of them in this wide world, people whose promise is as slender a tie as a spider's web. Let your given word be a hempen cord, a chain of wrought steel, that will bear the heaviest sort of strain. It will go far to making a man out of you. And a real man is the noblest work of God—not a lump of moist putty, moulded and shaped by the last influence met with that was calculated to make an impression; but a man, a forceful, energized, self-reliant and reliable character, a positive quantity that can be calculated upon.—Standard.

The unusually large number of young men who have been committed to the state insane asylum of Michigan in the last year and a half has led to the discovery that almost all of them smoked cigarettes to excess. In many cases it is said to be absolutely certain that cigarette smoking was the cause of the insanity. It is also reported that a prominent society young man in Detroit has been made deaf by cigarette smoking.—New York Sun.

YOUR MOTHER TONGUE.—"I was walking along the street the other day," says Dr. Holland, "when I met an elegantly dressed lady and gentleman upon the foot way. As I came within hearing of their voices—they were quietly chatting along the way—I heard these words from the woman's lips, 'You may bet your life on that.' I was disgusted. A woman who deals only in superlatives demonstrates at once the fact that her judgment is subordinate to her feelings, and that her opinions are entirely unreliable. All language thus loses its power and significance. The same words are brought into use to describe a ribbon in a milliner's window as are employed to do justice to Thalberg's execution of Beethoven's most heavenly symphony. Let me insist upon this thing. Be more economical in the use of your mother tongue. If a thing is simply good, say so; if pretty, say so; if very pretty, say so; if fine, say so; if very fine, say so; if grand, say so; if sublime, say so; if magnificent, say so; if splendid, say so. These words have all different meanings, and you may use them all of as many different objects, and not use the word 'perfect' once. That is a very large word?"

WHAT IS THE END OF LIFE?—The end of life is not to do good, although many of us think so. It is not to win souls, although I once thought so. The end of life is to do the will of God. That may be on the line of doing good or winning souls, or it may not. The maximum achievement of any man's life after it is all over is to have done all the will of God. No man or woman can have done any more with a life; no Luther, no Spurgeon, no Wesley, no Melancthon, can have done any more with their lives; and a dairy maid or a scavenger can do as much. Therefore, the supreme principle upon which we have to run our lives is to adhere, through good report or ill, through temptation and prosperity and adversity, to the will of God, wherever that may lead us. It may take you away to China, or you who are going to Africa may have to stay where you are, you who are going to be an evangelist may have to go into business, and you who are going into business may have to become an evangelist. But there is no happiness or success in life till that principle is taken possession of.—Professor Drummond.

THE TRUE WIFE.—Oftentimes I have seen a tall ship glide by against the tide as if drawn by some invisible bowline, with a hundred strong arms pulling it. Her sails unfilled, her streamers drooping, she had neither side-wheel nor stern-wheel; still she moved on stately, in serene triumph as with her own life. But I knew that on the other side of the ship, hidden beneath the great bulk that swam so majestically, there was a little steam tug, with a heart of fire and arms of iron, that was tugging it bravely on; and I knew that if the little steam tug untwined her arm, and left the ship, it would wallow and roll about, and drift hither and thither, and go off with the refluent tide, no man knows whither. And so I have found more than one genius, high-deck, full freighted, idle-sailed, gay-pennoned, that but for the bare, toiling arms, and brave, warm-beating heart of the faithful little wife that nestled close to him, so that no wind or wave could part them, would have gone down with the stream, and have been heard of no more.—Oliver Wendell Holmes.

When faith survives doubts, temptations and difficulties, its very existence is an argument for the reality of that which is believed, a proof of the practicability of a religious life, and a commendation of its unspeakable worth.

The Old, Old Story.

A little cough; a feeling ill;
A headache oft; a daily chill;
A slower walk; a quickened breath;
A frequent talk of coming death.
No strength to rise from day to day;
From loving eyes he fades away.
Now lifts no more the weary head,
The struggle's o'er, the man is dead.

Such is the fatal progress of consumption. How often is repeated the old, old story. Yet not half so often as it was before the knowledge came to mankind that there was a discovery in medical science by which the dread disease could be arrested in its early stages and the patient restored to health. This wonderful remedy is Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery.

Thousands of cures follow the use of Dr. Sage's Catarrh Remedy. 50 cents.

Why the Leaves Turn.

"Probably not one person in a thousand knows why leaves change their color in the fall," remarked an eminent botanist the other day. "The common and old-fashioned idea is that all this red and golden glory we see is caused by frosts. A true and scientific explanation of the cause of the coloring of the leaves would necessitate a long and intricate discussion. Stated briefly and in proper language, those causes are these: The green matter in the tissue of a leaf is composed of two colors, red and blue. When the sap ceases to flow in the fall and the natural growth of the tree ceases, oxidation of the tissue takes place. Under certain conditions, the green of the leaf changes to red; under different conditions, it takes a yellow or brown tint. The difference in color is due to the difference in the combination of the original constituents of the green tissue and to the varying conditions of climate, exposure and soil. A dry, cold climate produces more brilliant foliage than one that is damp and warm. This is why our American autumns are so much more gorgeous than those of England. There are several things about leaves that even science can not explain. For instances, why one of two trees growing side by side, of the same age and having the same exposure, should take on a brilliant red in the fall, and the other should turn yellow; or why one branch of a tree should be highly colored and the rest of the tree have only a yellow tint, are questions that are impossible to answer as why one member of a family should be perfectly healthy and another sickly. Maples and oaks have the brightest colors."—Field and Forest.

A Tree's Record of Its Life.

It is not known to everyone that a tree keeps a record within its stem of the character of each successive season since it began its growth. If a peach tree, for instance, be examined after it has been cut down, the ring of wood formed in each year will show by its amount whether the summer of that year was warm or dry, or otherwise favorable or adverse; and by the condition of the wood, the character of the winter will be denoted. Severe early frost will leave a layer of soft, decaying wood; and later frosts will be indicated by a change of color, if nothing more.

If a summer has been so dry as to cause a total rest between the growths of June and September, the annual ring for that year will be a double one, and sometimes barely distinguishable as one, but liable to be taken, by a not very close observer, for two different years' growth.

At a late meeting of the Botanical Society of Edinburgh, Sir Robert Christisun gave the results of measurements of large trees of different species, made annually on lines of girth marked permanently with paint. In the very unfavorable season of 1879, the deficiency in summer temperature was nearly ten degrees. In seven oak trees, of different species, the deficiency in annual increase of girth was ten per cent. In eleven other deciduous trees, it was forty-two per cent; and in seventeen pines it was twenty per cent., different species of the same family giving very nearly similar results.—W., in Vick's Magazine.

A SIMPLE BAROMETER.—One of the simplest barometers is a spider's web. Nature says that when there is a prospect of rain or wind, the spider shortens the filament from which its web is suspended, and leaves things in this state as long as the weather is variable. If the insect elongates its thread, it is a sign of fine, calm weather, the duration of which may be judged by the length of which the threads are let out. If the spider remains inactive, it is a sign of rain, but if, on the contrary, it keeps at work during the rain, the latter will not last long, and will be followed by fine weather. Other observations have taught that the spider makes changes in its web every twenty-four hours, and that if such changes are made in the evening, just before sunset, the night will be clear and beautiful.

No man has a right to carry on a business which produces results for which other men must pay heavily. The taxes of every citizen are more than doubled by the evils which flow directly from the rum traffic. The rum sellers wax fat, and the mass of tax payers pay millions of dollars every year that they may have the pleasure of doing so.

MO(U)RNING REVERIE.

"It is marvellous how a man like my husband, who prides himself on his tidy appearance, can carry so much hidden dirt. If the edge of my skirt looked as abominable as the bottom of his trousers he'd fly in a rage. And all this nastiness could be avoided if he would use on his Shoes, but he won't; and yet he says it is the finest Dressing in the world for his Harness. Some men are just pig headed, and John is one of them."

Wolff's ACME Blacking

ANGELL—The sudden death, on Sunday, October 27, 1889, at 8:30 A. M., of Mrs. HONOR G. ANGELL was a shock to all. Only the evening before she visited her new grandchild and rocked and sang to him, and talked much about her favorite grandchild, Roberta, who had been her little companion so often. She retired in her usual good spirits, and little did the household think that she had said her last "good-night"—nay, the last words she is supposed to have uttered. When the summons came for breakfast she was just breathing her last, and in a few moments she was with her Maker!

While, with many friends and kindred dear, I weep for the loss of our dear departed friend and relative, the feelings of my own heart prompt me to attempt to write of this pure Christian woman. When scarcely more than a child Honor Goodrich gave her heart and hand to Dr. Richard Angell, and they enjoyed life together many years, anticipating to celebrate their "golden wedding;" but God called her husband away a short time before. Five sons and one daughter blessed their happy union. One son, Merwin Angell, died in early manhood, and another, Dr. John G. Angell, passed away about twelve years ago, leaving a record too well known to be repeated. Ever faithful to the memory of her loved ones, she scarcely passed a day without talking about them. She leaves three devoted sons—Drs. Minter and Charles Angell, Mr. Richard Angell—and an only daughter, Mrs. Ann Harris, and twelve grandchildren to mourn her loss. May God be with them all, and especially her children, for there is no one to take a fond mother's place.

"Grandma" (as all familiarly called her) spent her last years as her first—as guileless as a child. I do not remember of ever having heard her say an evil word against anyone. Woman's world, the fireside, was hers. Her life was one of usefulness in the home circle. She possessed all the Christian graces; even the greatest, charity. If she had faults, they were only those acquired, as it were, by her second childhood, and these were as satellites about the constellation of her many virtues. I have referred to grandma's early life from authentic accounts, but for years she has been my friend, and I shall miss her sadly.

Who can doubt that she is now with her loved ones gone before, and with them looking down upon the bereaved loved ones upon earth—that she is in the mystic realm? If it be so that our words and deeds prepare us for this realm, then let us not weep; for that which we deem our loss will be her gain forever.

For God has come in his wondrous power
Borne her across the shining stream;
It may be she dreaded not the dark hour,
For she passed away just from a dream.
Let us follow her deed, follow each word,
Till we are laid under the sod;
Tread in the faithful footsteps she has trod,
Be ready to go to our Lord!

Her funeral was very impressive. Dr. J. B. Walker, her old friend and pastor, performed the funeral ceremonies, and, with his usual eloquence, dwelt upon her life as a Christian, a devoted wife, mother and friend.

F. N.

McGEARE—Died, J. McGEARE, on Black river, Williamson county, Mississippi, his native home, July 20, 1889, aged sixty-six; was married, in 1841, to Miss C. Parmer. He was the father of sixteen children. There are six living—three sons and three daughters—and his wife to mourn his death. He suffered with cancer in the mouth, which he bore with great fortitude, saying it was God's will, he must submit. Always cheerful, he won the love of all his friends. I think I see him smiling beyond the heavenly shore. I trust he has gone heme to rest.

A FRIEND.

BURNHAM—JOHN STEVENSON BURNHAM was born in Hemp-ted county, Arkansas, December 21, 1826, and died, October 17, 1889, at the residence of his daughter, in Arkansas, while on a visit to her. He had been on duty all the day before, and had traveled a part of that day, arriving at his daughter's in the afternoon, was as cheerful as usual, and retired early after supper; was soon asleep, and was found next morning lying on his side, the same position he was in when he went to sleep; his eyes were closed, and there seemingly had not been a struggle. He went to sleep and awoke in heaven. How good the Lord was to him, to take him out of time into eternity without a struggle!

His parents came to Claiborne parish, La., in his first year, where he spent his life. He was a mechanic, by which he had accumulated some means, of which he gave liberally and cheerfully to the Lord. He professed faith in Christ his Savior at the age of thirteen and joined the Methodist Church, in which he made a very useful and acceptable member; doing good of all sorts to all people. He was a successful class-leader, Sunday-school superintendent and steward. A good workman anywhere, he loved to work for his Master. The New Salem Church has lost its leader; the community a fine counselor and a true friend. The Lord takes home his workmen, but carries on his work. He leaves a wife, two sons and one daughter and a host of friends to mourn their loss. Dear friends, we will meet him again in the near future.

F. G. HOCUTT.

CLINE—Died at his home, on Sunday morning, August 11, 1889, at ten minutes after three o'clock, Bro. B. F. CLINE, aged forty-five years. He had suffered severely with an internal abcess since the twenty-sixth of July but bore it with Christian fortitude, and was resigned to God's holy will.

He has left a wife and four children; the oldest, a daughter twelve years of age. He was much afflicted for some years past; had to struggle hard to provide for his family, but they did not want, owing to his diligence in business. He was a devoted husband and a tender father. He was widely known, loved and respected. He filled the office of steward in the Methodist Church; was born, lived and died in East Baton Rouge parish, La. The Lord who has said, "I will be a husband to the widow and a father to the fatherless," has called him home. He was interred the next morning, at nine o'clock, in Mrs. White's family graveyard. His funeral was preached by Rev. Wily Brown, local preacher, and was attended by nearly two hundred persons who were the friends and relatives of the family. May his stricken wife and children have the prayers of all who read this! Written by his little sister,

LILLIE CHIDESTER.

ODEN—SALLIE EUGENE ODEN, daughter of E. M. and C. A. Oden, was born at Fannin, Rankin county, Miss., December 20, 1884, and died October 18, 1889, aged four years, nine months and twenty-nine days.

The evening previous to her death she came in to supper, full of glee, from her childish play. At the table she lost her balance and caught hold of the coffee-pot handle, and fell to the floor with the vessel upon her breast. As soon as her mother could reach her she exclaimed, "Mother, will it kill me?" Notwithstanding her intense suffering she prayed the appropriate prayer, "Now I lay me down to sleep," etc. Then sung, "At the Cross," which she afterwards hummed when too low to speak. Her suffering lasted about eighteen hours, when she fell asleep in Jesus. Just one year and one week previous to her death her little cousin Flossie E. Lilly preceded her to the blissful shore. They are again united, nevermore to part, but to join in the grand song of redemption around the throne forever. Our children die well.

J. W. TUCKER, P. C.

WHITE—We have recently committed to the grave two children of Bro. W. C. White—a son and daughter; the former four, and the latter twelve years of age. They were suddenly cut off by disease, and thus covered the household with gloom and sorrow. But God has taken them to himself, thus exalting them to higher relations and better conditions—"into that house not made with hands, eternal in the heavens." On the day the little girl died she told those about her that she saw her mother who had been dead several years, and her little brother, recently dead, and others of the family who are in heaven, in the room, as though they had come to escort her to her final home on the beautiful shore in the sweet by-and-by. It is a cheering and satisfying privilege to be permitted to look over into the future home of the soul, and see the land and loved ones there.

WM. B. HINES.

CAMPBELL—Died, SHELLEY CAMPBELL, August 22, 1889, aged nine years. Shelley was a sweet child, a bud bursting into bloom. She called all the family to come and look at her as she was passing away. Her last words were, "I am crossing the river." She has passed over the river, resting beneath the shade; gone to meet her little cousin Tommie in heaven.

LAURA L. CHEVALIER.

The rights of children are not recognized when 10,000 children in Chicago are bearing the burdens of as many men, and are beset with temptations that no man ought to face. "Suffer little children," said our Lord, and we suffer them to go about our streets with begrimed faces, tattered clothes, and bare feet, besmeared with tobacco, and bearing the stench of the grog shop on their breath.—Walter Thomas Mills.

To impress a plain truth it is not necessary to paint it to the eye by comic wood cuts or sensational pictures of any kind. Ordinary type is better if it secures your confidence. To illustrate: if you are the victim of Malaria, and wish to be free from it immediately, one bottle of Shallenberger's Antidote will infallibly do the work. It may pay you to believe this and get the medicine without delay. Dr. A. T. Shallenberger, Rochester, Pa., will send it by mail for one dollar.

The Iowa W. C. T. U., under the leadership of Mrs. J. Ellen Foster, withdrew from the National Convention, held in Chicago, last week.

The overland fast mail, from Chicago to the Pacific coast over the Burlington Road, was inaugurated on November 15. It is hoped to reduce the time one-third.

Fifteen houses were burned or badly damaged, in this city, on the fifteenth instant.

Natural gas has been found within fifteen miles of Tuscaloosa, Ala.

After an almost unprecedented struggle of two weeks with snow and wind the Denver and Fort Worth Road was once more opened for business on November 16. The company succeeded in releasing the imprisoned travelers and freight the first of the week, only to have the line closed again in a few hours. It is believed now that the backbone of the terrible storm is broken and traffic will be uninterrupted.

A mass meeting in favor of high license was held under the auspices of the Catholic Church, in Baltimore, on November 17. Cardinal Gibbons presided and gave the movement hearty endorsement. A series of resolutions urging restriction of the liquor traffic and the enactment of Sunday laws was adopted.

Commissioner of Internal Revenue Mason, in reporting the operations of the internal revenue service for the fiscal year ended June 30, 1889, says: "The aggregate receipts for the last fiscal year were $130,894,134, or $6,567,958 more than the receipts for the previous year. The only object of taxation showing a decrease during the first quarter of the present year is oleomargarine, which dropped from $149,623 in 1888 to $124,750 in 1889. The total cost of collection during the past fiscal year was $4,185,729, a fraction less than 3 2 per cent. on the amount collected.

The South Central Teachers' Association, in convention in Yazoo City, Miss., adjourned on November 16. A resolution was passed to memorialize the Legislature to establish a State normal school. A resolution was introduced to withdraw patronage from all publishing houses in a combination to keep the price of school books above market value; also to not purchase any school furniture from manufacturers in a combination or trust.

FOREIGN.

The announcement that actual work on the Nicaragua canal is in progress has given a death blow to the last hopes of the Panama canal investors that they will ever witness the completion of the great ditch into which their hard-earned money has been thrown.

The sanitarian raid which has recently been made in London, under the direction of the county council, has been productive of much good. As a result of the rigid inspection of the crowded tenements thus far made, the owners of these premises have been compelled to make extensive alterations and improvements, and to have the work done immediately under the penalty of having it done for them by the authorities and the cost charged against the property.

An armed attack on the Imperial authority in Brazil occurred last week. The Brazilian troops joined the rebels and assumed control of Rio de Janeiro. The ministry has resigned. The revolution is for the purpose of forming a republic.

A Roman journal says that Vatican circles have been led to expect the establishment of an American legation to the holy see after the return of Mgr. Satolli from Baltimore.

Latest papers from Guatemala, bearing date of October 27, tell of the immediate downfall of the riotous outbreak which was thought at the time might result in a revolution. The three leaders were shot, the others surrendered, and all is quiet.

The provisional government in Brazil has abolished the monarchy. The revolutionary commission addressed a letter to the Emperor, telling him to leave the country in twenty-four hours. The Emperor acknowledged this and left by the packet Alagoas, accompanied by the frouciad Riachuelo. The Brazilian republic will give the Emperor a certain amount to live upon in Europe. The revolutionary commission has been sworn in before the chamber of the municipality. The republic is a certainty and great enthusiasm prevails.

The developments of Prince Bismarck's diplomacy promise to result in permanent accord between Austria and Russia. The Czar's visit to Berlin, Count Kolnoky's visit to Friedrichsruhe and, finally, the conference between the Emperor William and the Emperor Francis Joseph have been successive stages of a continuous policy leading toward a settlement. The Bismarck scheme restores Russia's dominance in Bulgaria, Russia in return recognizing as definitive Austria in possession of Bosnia and Herzegovina.

Dumplings with Royal Baking Powder

No dessert is more delicious, wholesome and appetizing than a well-made dumpling, filled with the fruit of the season. By the use of the Royal Baking Powder the crust is always rendered light, flaky, tender and digestible. Dumplings made with it, baked or boiled, will be dainty and wholesome, and may be eaten steaming hot with perfect impunity.

RECEIPT.—One quart of flour; thoroughly mix with it three teaspoons of Royal Baking Powder and a small teaspoon of salt; rub in a piece of butter or lard the size of an egg, and then add one large pointo, grated in the flour; after the butter is well mixed, stir in milk and knead to the consistency of soft biscuit dough; break off pieces of dough large enough to close over four quarters of an apple (or other fruit as desired) without rolling, and lay in an earthen dish (or steamer) and steam until the fruit is tender. Bake if preferred.

In all receipts calling for cream of tartar and soda, substitute Royal Baking Powder. Less trouble, never fails, makes more appetizing and wholesome food and is more economical. Royal Baking Powder is specially made for use in the preparation of the finest and most delicate cookery.

S. S. KEENER, P. E.

Mr. P. D. D. Delacroix, Cypremort P. O., La., Nov. 30, 1888, says: "Three years ago an agent representing Dr. Davis' Compound Syrup of Wild Cherry and Tar came into my store. Being busy, was unable to give him any time. Before leaving he gave me a sample bottle of Davis' Wild Cherry and Tar, asking me to give it to anyone suffering with a cough or cold. Several days afterward I caught a heavy cold. Remembering the sample, thought I would try it. Six teaspoonfuls cured me. Ordered a supply at once, and have sold it with satisfaction to all. It acts like magic on all my family, and I would not be without it. Take pleasure in recommending it at all times." One dollar bottles hold two and a half times as much as 50c. bottles.

A barb-wire trust was formed in New York City on November 15. The new company will have a capital of $10,0 0 000.

The Clergy of America take kindly to Life Insurance, and have been its firmest champions. They fight for it and thoroughly believe in it. There are many splendid financiers in the Church; that they are intelligent and thoughtful for their future goes without saying. All denominations seek the protection of Life Insurance, and are careful to select the company offering the greatest security and the most advantageous terms to policyholders.

The Episcopal Diocese, of New York, has an Insurance Fund for all of its members, and the Mutual Life, which is the largest and strongest company in the world, with over $122,000,000 assets, has been officially selected by that body to issue all the Insurance to these worthy people.

A Southern Department of this Company has been opened in New Orleans under the management of Mr. T. H. Bowles, with offices in Louisiana National Bank Building.

AGENTS WANTED.

AN EXTRAORDINARY OFFER.

We want live, energetic agents in every county in the United States and Canada to sell a patent article of great merit on its merits. An article having a large sale, paying over 100 per cent. profit, having no competition, and on which the agent is protected in the exclusive sale by a deed given for each and every county he may secure from us. With all these advantages to our agents, and the fact that it is an article that can be sold to every house owner, it might not be necessary to make "an extraordinary offer" to secure good agents at once, but we have concluded to make it to show, not only our confidence in the merits of our invention, but in its salability by any agent that will handle it with energy. Our agents now at work are making from $150 to $300 a month clear, and makes it safe for us to make our offer to all who are out of employment. Any agent that will give our business a thirty days' trial, and fail to clear at least $100 in that time, above all expenses, can return all goods unsold to us, and we will refund the money paid for them. No other employer of agents ever dared to make such an offer, nor would we if we did not know that we have agents now making double this amount. Our large descriptive circulars explain our offer fully, and those we wish to send to everyone out of employment who will send us three one cent stamps for postage.

THE NEXT THING.

From an old English parsonage
Down by the sea,
There came in the twilight
A message to me;
Its quaint Saxon legend,
Deeply engraven,
Hath, as it seems to me,
Teaching for heaven;
And on through the hours
The quiet words ring,
Like a low inspiration—
"Doe the nexte thynge."

Many a questioning,
Many a fear,
Many a doubt,
Hath its guiding here;
Moment by moment
Let down from heaven,
Time, opportunity,
Guidance, are given;
Fear not to-morrow,
Child of the King,
Trust it with Jesus—
"Doe the nexte thynge."

Do it immediately,
Do it with prayer,
Do it reliantly,
Casting all care;
Do it with reverence,
Tracing his hand
Who hath placed it before thee
With earnest command;
Stayed on Omnipotence,
Safe 'neath his wing,
Leave all resultinge—
"Do the nexte thynge."

Looking to Jesus,
Ever serener,
Working or suffering,
Be thy demeanor,
In the shade of his presence,
The rest of his calm,
The light of his countenance,
Live out thy psalm;
Strong in his faithfulness,
Praise him and sing,
Then, as he beckons thee,
"Doe the nexte thynge."

The American Octopus.

BY B. J. SAGE, ESQ.

America has an octopus; its den is Louisiana; and it is called the Louisiana Lottery Company.

The attention of the whole people will soon be engaged on the question of its continuance—a question second in importance to no moral, even if it be to any political, one. The creature is aiming to get a renewal of life, and is using all the wisdom and cunning, to say nothing of venality, that its vast wealth can command. Moral and legal action to avert the evil is now in order, not only in Louisiana, but in forty-one other States, and also in the Federal Government. Its twenty or more years of vigorous and signally prosperous life have given it a power, an impetus and a self-confidence, which are very potent means to its end. Its tentacles and suckers reach into every commonwealth with great moral and pecuniary harm. The local statesmen pass laws in defense and punition, which the rocking monster—riding across all State bounds, with the authority of the national government—defies and derides. The people have become familiar with the "frightful mien" of the seductive "vice," which, once "endured," is now "embraced."

The Supreme Federal Court, in Phalen vs. Virginia, speaks of the evil as "the widespread pestilence of lotteries," and, in Stone vs. Mississippi, declares that any society it prevails in will, "almost of necessity, bring forth a population of speculators and gamblers;" yet the court has recently recognized the creature as a good-enough party, and awarded triumph to it; the pleadings, however, not permitting the company, or its alleged contract, to be questioned. Louisiana herself, as will be seen, denounces its business in her Constitution as a "vice," and yet Lottery is now king in that State, so far as needs to be. Thirty-odd States penally forbid the traffic; but, nevertheless, pour princely revenues into the king's treasury. All these facts look to renewal; and the company will surely have agents in the right place, at every crisis, with all needed money.

We see that Louisiana, like Frankenstein, created a monster, which, though purely of human creation, has so far mastered the divinely created brains of the whole "United States," individually and collectively; and the time seems not far distant when, with its legions of subtle agents, and the aid of the mammon of unrighteousness, it will sway government everywhere over a rejoicing people—rejoicing because of its imperial wealth and munificence not only, but because it supplants that Federal and State impotency which, while charged with securing the blessings of liberty and State autonomy, lets them die in a farcical tragedy. The unregenerate world considers vice in peace better than virtue in agony! There is no such thing as collective martyrdom!

THE COMPANY'S ORIGIN, STATUS, AND HISTORY.

Let us for a moment examine the origin, status, history, character, and conduct of this so far invincible creature, and, later, demonstrate, as can be done, that it has no legal existence, and no contract with the State that gives it Federal protection under Article I., § 10, of the Federal Constitution.

Constitution-making is the establishing, as fundamental laws, of proper institutions of government, and cardinal principles of morality and justice, and providing an agency to enforce them. And the only legitimate motives and purposes a State can have in ruling the moral and responsible beings of whom she is composed, must consist with and promote morality and justice.

The Constitution of Louisiana, the State which is the monster's den, contains 268 Articles, all but one thus purposed; that one being Article 167, which recognizes, if it does not establish, a gambling concern, the Louisiana Lottery Company, which cloaks its vice with education and charity, and thereby "covereth" from the eyes of the people its "multitude of sins"—all with the sanction and connivance of the State.

CLOAKS OF VICE.

This "stealing of the livery of the court of heaven to serve the devil in," was also practiced by its late congeners of Alabama and Mississippi; the former masquerading as a "mutual aid association," whose purpose was "to raise funds for the common school system of Alabama," and the latter cloaking itself as an "agricultural and manufacturing aid society." The Louisiana octopus advertises everywhere that it is incorporated "for educational and charitable purposes," and that "by an overwhelming popular vote its franchise was made a part of the present State Constitution." The Supreme Federal Court, in the Mississippi case, calls attention to "the evident purpose to conceal the vice * * * by the phrases used." Wickedness assumes, whenever and wherever it can, the garb of virtue and the shield of law.

ITS HONESTY OF DEALING IS ITS BEST POLICY.

Some opponents, of more zeal than reflection, have, by charging fraudulent drawings, enabled it to gain strength by signally disproving the charge. Obviously, "honesty is the best policy," and its life and its vast patronage depend on its ostentatious fairness. It would rejoice to have angels for drawers, wheels of crystal, and every scheme ciphered on the sky. Honesty! Why, "there's millions in it!" The company, if possible, would hire the walls of the firmament for its posters; subsidize the little remnant of the press; hire ex-generals, ex-judges, and bishops by the dozen; spend $200,000 in wages, names, autographs and saintly characters; have everything open, nothing secret; and cause the management, if possible, to be righteousness itself; for their dividends would then become 800 to 1,000 per cent., instead of 80 or 90, as now. The shrewd gambler who can issue 500,000 gambling tickets for $2,000,000 of money, and pay one million dollars in prizes, will, beyond doubt, guard against even the suspicion of fraud! The magnitude of the business, at present, is shown in a three-column telegram to the Omaha Bee, republished in the Washington Evening Star, of February 8, 1889, saying that great numbers are waiting in all the country, hoping to win "the grand capital prize of $600,000, which is a little less than one-fourth of the immense sum this day distributed by the Louisiana State Lottery Company."

The Articles affecting the Lottery, in the Louisiana Constitution, are 172 and 167; and they must be construed together, if construction be needed. By Article 172: "Gambling is declared to be a vice, and the General Assembly shall pass laws for its suppression." Article 167 provides that "the General Assembly shall have authority to grant lottery charters and privileges, provided each charter and privilege shall pay not less than $40,000 per annum in money into the treasury of the State; and provided further, that all charters shall cease and expire on the first of January, 1895, from which time all lotteries are prohibited in this State. The $40,000 now provided by law to be paid by the Louisiana Lottery Company, according to the provisions of its charter, granted in the year 1868, shall belong to the Charity Hospital of New Orleans; and the charter of said company is recognized as a contract, binding on the State for the period therein specified, except its monopoly clause, which is hereby abrogated; and all laws, contrary to the provisions of this article, are hereby declared null and void, provided said company shall file a written renunciation of all its monopoly features in the office of Secretary of State, within sixty days after the ratification. Of the additional sums raised by licenses on lotteries, the hospital at Shreveport shall receive $10,000 annually, and the remaining sum shall be divided each year, among the several parishes of the State, for the benefit of their schools."

THE TWO ARTICLES INVOLVE TWO SUBJECTS.

Obviously, Article 167 refers to a juridical being—an artificial person—a subject of the law; while Article 172 relates to, and controls, such person's conduct and business; so that if the being derives existence, either from 167, or from the statute it refers to, it is simply and only the equal of other persons (whether natural or artificial), and is subject to the civil and criminal laws; subject, in other words, to the police power of the State; subject to the regulation of its conduct and business, and subject to having said business prohibited, if the Legislature, which wields the said police power, deem it injurious to public safety, health, or morals. It follows that Article 172 covers the ground, is operative, and constitutionally reprobates the business; and that Act 44, of 1879, must be held good and enforced, because it was passed for the very purpose of 172, and is precisely fit for it—anticipatory though it was. I should here state a fact of vital importance, to be kept always in mind, viz: that said act repealed the Lottery Company, and prohibited the lottery business in toto. It was promulgated March 27, 1879, and killed the monster, depriving the members of their collective life nine months before Article 167, which is claimed to have revived the corpse, had existence and force—this taking effect January 1, 1880. It was corrupt for that time, if not before or after, and could not stand in judgment, or anywhere else.

Deferring the question of its legal existence, and continuing the subject in hand, I observe that there are many vocations which the law can license, or refuse to license, that have not been specially banned; a fortiori, when a business, such as that of this company, is characterized by the Constitution as a "vice," it must be considered as merely tolerated, and continuously subject to the police power; and we find, on construing 172 and 167 together, that even the latter means that this "vice" is licensed at $40,000 per year, until the Legislature shall deem it proper to exercise further—and, perhaps, prohibitorily—that police power which the Supreme Federal Court declares can not be assigned away, and that all rights are held under (7 Otto, 25). And the Supreme Court of Louisiana holds that no other company or person can carry on the business that this company follows without, "like it, obtaining a charter, and paying a license." (32 An., 719.) This presupposes that the "license" may be withheld, and the business prohibited, and places that tribunal en rapport with the federal supreme one, which holds that the person or company "has, in legal effect, nothing more than a license to enjoy the privilege. * * * It is a permit, good as against existing laws, but subject to future legislative or constitutional control, or withdrawal." (11 Otto, 814.) Hence, if we admit the constitutional existence, which the company claims (but which I respectfully deny), its conduct and business are subject to the majority power of the Legislature; and no constitutional amendment is needed to stop the evil—this requiring a two-thirds vote.

"The Race Problem"

BY HENRY WARE.

I do not wish to take part in the agitation of the race question, as I can see nothing but harm to come out of the agitation as now going on; but I do wish to protest against the sentiment expressed by Dr. Foster on the education of the colored race. The publication of such sentiments, uncontradicted, gives the enemies of the South reason to publish us to the world as being opposed to the education of the colored race, as has frequently and recently been done. Besides, the tendency is to drive out the colored laborer from our midst. Dr. Foster may be ready and willing to do that, but our Southern farmers who have tried all classes of free labor, and found the colored man to be the best, are not ready. I object to his theory because it is inconsistent and untrue, and does not represent the sentiment of the great South. His position, if I understand it, contradicts the Constitution of the United States, and the laws of all the Southern States on the school question, that recognize the colored race as free, and their children entitled to an equal division of the public school fund. Dr. Foster's mistake is in not allowing a free race to choose their employment, and keeping them in ignorance; a race of people to whom freedom has been given by the Constitutions of the United States and all the States for about twenty-four years. He reminds me of a man who came to me with a book about a year after the freedom of the negro. He offered me the book for ten dollars, and said it proved the negro was a baboon, not a human being. I told him he was a little too late, as the government had decided he was a human being and a free man. If Dr. Foster had said that a large proportion of the races, white and colored, must, in the order of Providence, be taught and ruled by their superiors, and do manual labor, and require only a moderate education, I could heartily agree with him. It is not probable that God has created a race, and not made a proportionate number capable of higher attainments. Our knowledge of the colored race, and observation of the rapid improvement many of them have made since they were freed, are sufficient to convince the most skeptical that it is not an exception. It is as unfair to judge a race by its worst specimens as to judge a church by its inconsistent and wicked members. I would like for some one acquainted with these race conflicts, so frightening, to tell us who were the originators. Did they originate among the better class of both races, or among the lower class? When I consider the training our people have had for many years, I am surprised that race and party conflicts have been so few. As it is evident to us that God intended that the masses should have teachers and rulers, it is also evident that he never intended the ignorant or wicked to rule. Where they have ruled, the people have mourned. Ours can not be an exception to this rule. Our political leaders are largely responsible for all the evil that threatens us as a nation, growing out of the race question. The great curse of the liquor traffic and the abuse of the ballot are closely interwoven into the policy of the two great national parties, and such policy is to keep up sectional hate and bitterness. This using of the race question for party purposes is unbecoming a civilized Christian nation, and fraught with dangerous consequences—the encouraging, directly or indirectly, the liquor traffic, and using it as an important factor in elections; encouraging the buying and selling of votes, and the use of any and all means for party purposes, and using the votes of ignorant voters by undue and unlawful means. I am no advocate of negro supremacy, whisky supremacy, nor supremacy of any party that requires whisky, lying and fraud to maintain it. I believe in protecting alike the civil and religious rights of all American citizens, and the passage of such State laws as will purify and protect the ballot in the hands of qualified voters, white and colored.

Dr. Foster tells us that as soon as a negro learns to read a newspaper, he wants to be a political gentleman, and eke out a living intriguing in votes and doing any dirty work for some party. This is a poor recommendation for the negro's superior. The way to stop negroes from selling votes is to stop white men from buying them. Our political leaders teach and practice the doctrine that the end justifies the means. The end is to get votes and elect the party; the means are whisky, bribery, and fraud. The way to stop all this is to lay aside all this race, party, and sectional strife, and let all good people rise up and say such a state of things must and shall cease.

The Other Side of "the Race Problem."

BY REV. J. W. MEDLOCK.

My friend, Dr. D. W. Foster, has contributed to the ADVOCATE a very clear and well-written statement of his views on the race question. I think I may venture to write up the other side of the question without the risk of incurring any disturbance of the very pleasant personal relations existing between us. His argument may be epitomized thus:

1. Two races can not live together upon terms of equality: therefore, the negro race should not be educated.

2. The education of the negroes would interfere to that extent with the education of our own race; and, therefore, would be an injustice to our own people.

3. The education of the negroes would also increase the chances of conflict between the races, and on that ground it would be impolitic.

In reply, I will admit that I believe Dr. Foster has the popular side of this question—that is to say, he has formulated and boldly stated what a great many, if not the majority, of our people think; at least, all who look at the matter in the light of a temporal and selfish expedient. I am tempted to think, however, that this is a case in which people are sure to act more wisely than they speak. There is no danger that the State will ever surrender the policy of educating the negro as a citizen. There is hardly any danger that leading white citizens will ever discountenance or fail to encourage the fostering of educational enterprises in the community for the blacks as well as the whites. Independently of all moral and religious considerations, the doctrine is too thoroughly grounded in the American mind, that the first requisite of citizenship is education, to allow it for a moment to be said that anyone should be denied the chance of an education. Even if we repudiate the citizenship of the negro, and legislate to take away from him his right of suffrage, he is still here, a factor in the community in many ways; and it would certainly be a very blind, not to say an ungenerous, policy to deny him an education.

But how will Dr. Foster's policy look in the light of our Christian teaching? He says, Don't do the negro this good, lest we harm ourselves. Is that the Christian way of looking at it? Would not such a policy destroy our mission work? Why spend money on the heathen? Every dollar we send abroad looks like taking that much from the support of the work at home. But will we harm ourselves? Did any people ever harm themselves by doing good? Did not Jesus say, "It is more blessed to give than to receive"?

But I believe there is a divine expediency in doing good. If history teaches any lesson, it teaches this. The Doctor believes in divine providence. He refers to the Israelitish bondage in Egypt, and he, doubtless, remembers that the more those people were oppressed the more they waxed strong, until their final deliverance from their masters. The truth is, the negro is going to be educated. Another truth is, the more we oppose his education the more determined he becomes to have it, and the more sympathy he will get from abroad. It will be better for the South in the future day of the negro's enlightenment to have had some hand in the work. But let us distinguish between the fact that we have a measure of responsibility in this matter and the extent of that responsibility. Because we are called upon to encourage up to the measure of our ability the education of the negro race, does not imply that we are responsible for the extent of their illiteracy, nor does it imply that we are to neglect our own for their sakes. The South has done about all that could have been expected of it in this line. Our own church is pledged to this work, and has raised many thousands of dollars, founded schools, and otherwise aided the cause of the education of the negroes. We are not sorry for what we have done. We have not robbed ourselves in doing this. We are due no apology for it. And we will be all the happier if after awhile the negro race should rise up and call us blessed for it.

Texas Notes.

BY REV. R. W. WILLIAMS.

Our Annual Conferences in Texas are now being held, and the "facts and figures" relating to the work of the past year are rendered accessible to the public. A brief report of the proceedings would, doubtless, be of interest to your readers.

The West Texas Conference held its thirty-first annual session at Seguin, beginning October 23. Bishop Key presided with grace and dignity, and preached with much power and acceptability. The subjects of missions, finances, education, Sunday-schools, church extension, etc., were carefully considered by the various Boards and committees, and the reports indicated encouraging progress in all these departments. Four preachers were admitted on trial, four were received into full connection, and twelve were added by transfer from other Conferences. The religious services during the session were deeply spiritual and highly profitable.

One week previous to the meeting of the above-mentioned body, the Mexican Border Mission Conference convened at San Antonio, with Bishop Galloway in the chair. This Conference is moving bravely forward, gaining steadfast footing at every step. It shows a list of forty-two preachers who received appointments, and who seem hopeful and courageous. It reports twenty local preachers, 1,879 members, and seventy-six Sunday-schools, with 119 teachers and 1,860 scholars. It has fourteen churches, valued at $21,082, and seven parsonages, valued at $10,100. It has six institutions of learning, worth $52,600 in property and endowments, and containing three hundred and seventy-nine students, with twenty-eight teachers.

The Northwest Texas Conference was held at Belton, November 6–12. This Conference is one of large proportions, geographically and numerically. It has within its bounds nearly forty thousand members, and makes a good showing as to life and growth. It reports 11,000 conversions the past year, and 8,000 additions, being a net gain of 2,292. There were eighty-four persons licensed to preach, and thirty-eight churches and parsonages built. There was found to be an increase in salaries of $11,921; in missionary collections, of $2,841; in church extension collections, of $633; in Conference claimants' collections, of $1,101; and in the number of Sunday-school scholars, of 1,900. This body memorialized the General Conference to provide for the publication of a cheap weekly missionary newspaper; also, to define specifically the duties of trustees appointed by District Conferences. Bishop Key's address to the class for admission on trial was very striking and appropriate.

A THANKSGIVING HYMN

BY S. E. ADAMS.

For land and for ocean and for balm-laden breeze,
For the singing of birds from the hills to the seas,
For the beauty of dawn and the brightness of noon,
For the light and the delight of the sun and the moon,
We praise Thee, gracious God.

For the sun-ripened fruit and the billowy grain,
For the orange and apple, the corn and the cane,
For the bountiful harvests now gathered and stored,
That by thee in the lap of the nations were poured,
We praise thee, gracious God.

For the blessing of friends, for the old and the new,
For the hearts that are trusted and trusting and true,
For the tones that we love, for the light of the eye
That warms with a welcome and glooms with good-bye,
We praise thee, gracious God.

That the desolate poor may find shelter and bread,
That the sick may be comforted, nourished, and fed,
That the sorrow may cease of the sighing and sad,
That the spirit bowed down may be lifted and glad,
We pray thee, pitying Lord.

That brother the hand of his brother may clasp
From ocean to ocean in friendliest grasp,
That for north and for south and for east and for west,
The horror of war be forever at rest,
We pray thee, pitying Lord.

For the blessings of earth and of air and of sky,
That fall on us all from the Father on high,
For the crown of all blessing since blessing began,
For the gift "the unspeakable gift," of thy Son,
We praise thee, gracious God.

The College Location.

This point is, doubtless, of the greatest importance to insure the success of the new college. It should be located with reference to generations and ages to come. It will not rise up and walk or run a full-grown institution at once, but must have a beginning. Also the good of the cause of Christ and Methodism all over the State is to be considered. Convenience and healthfulness come first in the place to hit upon. I verily believe there are many who would be glad to see Bro. Malone's idea, previously given in the ADVOCATE, prevail. As stated, the plan is to found and build an ideal Methodist town or city, with the college as central. Purchase, say, 4,000 acres of wild or unoccupied lands on the most desirable railroad line; lay off suitable college grounds; lay off and lease town and resident lots without number, or according to demand for respectable buildings and occupants; also dispose of some for agricultural, horticultural, vegetable gardens, stock and dairy farms, etc.—all of which will tend to make the college self-sustaining, and will afford opportunities for the poor or hard-handed sons of toil to be helped and help themselves through college to usefulness. Similar weighty and praiseworthy examples can be found, should the locating committee think seriously on this line.

Again: Due deference to the great Mississippi Delta's convenience will be of considerable advantage, for we believe there are many land owners and others living in the valley who would be glad to have a home in the hills convenient for such school advantages for their boys and girls; as we believe the time is not far distant when co-education, under the auspices of the church, will be proper and desirable; when a female department will be an easy and necessary addition. Prepare and aim at permanent and unlimited success and prosperity.

And last, but not least, bringing, as it should, everything under the influence of the college, the greatest moral, social, religious and educational advantages are attainable; and all needful prohibitions of the liquor traffic, gambling dens, race tracks, theaters, dancing-halls, and all other disreputable and demoralizing influences could and would be accomplished. Having had, recently, some college experience, I know whereof I speak. But whatever plan prevails, let us see to it that the place which gets the college appreciates it when the church at large can and will appreciate the place; and may a kind providential hand guide in this great cause! DELTA.

A Missionary for the Mississippi Valley.

A resolution was passed at the late session of the Greenville District Conference, looking to the appointment of a missionary to travel at large through the territory embraced in the district. The work employing all the time of an active man is certainly to be found in the limits designated. There are hundreds of men in the great forests of this valley in various timber industries. Their camps bear the name of their specialities, such as barrel-head men, barrel-stave men, cross-tie, cane, etc. These camps, as a rule, are made up of white men. Perhaps, a large majority of them have forgotten the day when they heard a sermon; but some of them have a more interesting experience. One poor fellow has been found who was once a Methodist preacher. Rough he was in his appearance, yet was ready to resist anything truthful or reflecting on the Methodist Church.

The resolution referred to above looked as much or more than any one thing to supplying the many colored people of this valley with a more intelligent ministry. They are unwilling to receive a white man as their stated minister or pastor. Yet they seem at times more than willing for the white man to preach to them occasionally at their churches and places of worship. The freshness and variety afforded them by these occasional services never fails to interest the more sensible and intelligent ones among them. There are some exceptions; but, as a rule, they will extend a hearty welcome to the white preacher who occasionally visits them and shows himself to be in real sympathy with the colored race. These people have their days for going to the railroad stations, steamboat landings and other places of resort. The missionary who has the tact and ready wit to entertain and interest a promiscuous assemblage of this sort, might often send an arrow, as thrust by the hand divine, or fix an impression, "as a nail fastened by the master of assemblies in a sure place." A successful missionary in this field would do much to moralize and elevate the people of this unfortunate race. It would prove of incalculable benefit to the body politic, and of vast pecuniary advantage to the farmers and others who employ them as laborers. The employers of such labor might well afford to take stock in such an enterprise. J. D. NEWSOM.

College Location.

The location of the Methodist College of Mississippi has been a matter so frequent before your readers of late, it would almost seem impertinent to present anything farther upon it, were it not some of the most important points in the location of a college have not been fully considered. Most writers upon this subject have favored their own towns in its location. In this I shall not follow their steps. Not that I could not present, perhaps, as many favorable points and advantages in favor of our own town as most writers have done who have gone before us; but I don't believe conscientiously our location possesses all the advantages of, at least, one other town. All should look at this matter from a higher standpoint than mere preference or personal interest. These should not be considered in the location of such a college as all hope this to become. No one will deny it should be located at a point where everything will increase rather than lessen, which may tend to the growth and future greatness of the college.

It may be asked, What are necessary to the accomplishment of such an end? Some say, healthfulness of locality, moral and social advantages, accessibility, money—money, not only to put it in operation, but money prospectively. After canvassing all the locations, out of which there is the least probability of getting it, and of the advantages attending those points, I must confess Jackson, Miss., possesses more of them than any other town yet brought forward by your numerous writers. Some are ready to say that Jackson is not healthy. Is there any real, just grounds upon which to make this charge? That town has never been considered an unhealthy location. It will compare favorably with any other of like dimensions as to health, on or about the same latitude. Some again may be ready to say Jackson has her saloons; her morals are not good. So has Nashville. Yet they affect very little the great Vanderbilt University. Outside of the saloons, Jackson has as good people as any town in the State. It is the home of a number of ministers of the highest order of the several denominations; a Bishop of the Episcopal Church and our own highly esteemed Bishop Galloway, with a large number of men of high moral character and intelligence of the several professions and callings. As to saloons, it can be said to the honor of our State that all such institutions have been protected by legislation. As to the social advantages of Jackson, they are again in advance of almost any other town in the State. In addition to what has been mentioned before, all our high courts are held there; the home of our Supreme judges; all our laws are enacted there; and we ask, What could give any institution a better advertisement than for the leading men or representatives of each county to have the privilege of visiting it and knowing of its workings? All this would be the case were it located in Jackson. Is it necessary to present anything further upon this point? The next point: accessibility. Jackson again in this stands ahead. Were it necessary, the names of a number of colleges could be given which have suffered seriously from being located at inconvenient and inaccessible points. Jackson is both central and accessible. Trains are now running into Jackson from six directions, and two more railroads in prospect; hence these are advantages that no other town now in the State possess, and, perhaps, never will. How convenient it would be for parents to attend the courts, meetings of the Legislature and also visit their sons in college. All these advantages would attend that location. The last point: Money, not only to put it into operation, but money prospectively. Is there the least probability of any other town being able to do as much in the future as Jackson? This is the home of the two brethren who have done more in behalf of this college than any others. I allude to Bro. R. W. Millsaps and Bishop Galloway. Is it not reasonable to suppose they would take more interest and pride in it if located there in their home than at any other point? These brethren have too much modesty to dictate as to its location. Yet Bro. Millsaps has the means and heart to supplement his munificent gift with an equal amount before the college should lag. These two brethren—the one with his great financial ability, the other with his energy, judgment and consecration, and made dean—would mean to this institution, if located there, success. Some will, perhaps, say, is it not presumption on my part to write in favor of Jackson; have the citizens not enough of intelligence to do this themselves? Is it not true that men of intelligence and true merit never like to speak of themselves? So, to the credit of Jackson, it looks better for an outsider to do this than themselves. I say, put the college at Jackson, if we want it a great success.

The Training-School.

WOMAN'S MISSIONARY SOCIETY.

After due consideration of several offers to locate the Training-school for Christian Workers, the Woman's Board of Missions of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, has accepted that of Rev. Nathan Scarritt, D. D., proffering a suitable plot of ground in Kansas City, and $25,000, on condition this Board will raise $25,000 toward the same purpose.

The obligation has been assumed on the part of the Board to meet the exigencies of the case, believing the society and the church will indorse the wisdom of the action, and come forward with a helping hand.

Faith in God and the cause is the inspiration in this undertaking. The object of this institution is to test and increase the effectiveness of Christian workers both in the home and foreign fields. It proposes an all-embracing course of instruction to this end—above all else, a comprehensive knowledge of the Bible, and teaching the fundamental truths of the Christian religion. To this will be added practical training in city mission work, elementary medicine and nursing, household and domestic management, general information of foreign mission fields and work, and how to best conserve time and strength in serving these.

It will be a Christian home for students while testing their fitness for the work which they propose, and also for returned missionaries desiring to perfect themselves in any of its departments.

This is no private enterprise. The scope is so broad and far-reaching it appeals alike to those interested in home and foreign work in all churches. The time is ripe for it, as was truly said at the London Ecumenical Conference, "The time is past when anybody can be a missionary."

Pastors feel no more pressing need than intelligent, trained workers in Sunday-schools, and, among the destitute and suffering in every charge.

To the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, the women who enterprised this grand scheme have the right to look for co-operation and the financial help that will crown their efforts with success. To men and women alike, on whom God has bestowed riches, we call for gifts, and the poorest stewards in the heritage of Christ can, in the abundance of their joy, let their deep poverty abound unto the riches of their liberality. The members of the Woman's Missionary Society will rise by faith and prayer and harder work to do their part in meeting this necessity. Dr. Scarritt has done a noble deed. Are there not others who will stand shoulder to shoulder with him in rearing this structure to the honor and glory of our Lord Christ?

From the Work.

WORK IN CARONDELET ST. CHURCH.

MR. EDITOR: The work of the Caroudelet Street Methodist Episcopal Church, South, of this city, has progressed with unabated success and increasing zeal. The labors of numbers of its indefatigable members extend in various directions, believing that a statement of its efforts and success under the wise and faithful pastorate of Rev. B. Carradine, D. D., will stimulate sister churches to like efforts for the advancement of our Master's cause, the writer, an eye-witness, says as follows:

The immediate outgrowth of the revival held at this church, last June, in which Bro. W. W. Hopper efficiently assisted, was work for Christ, not only on the part of young converts, but by numbers of members who had been converted and sanctified, whose hearts were mightily stirred by the Holy Spirit. Several ladies formed a Dorcas Society for the purpose of visiting the sinns of this city, bringing therefrom into the Sabbath-schools waifs and vagabond children, many of whom they have clothed and fed, taking care of whole families of indigents, rescuing several young people. Mrs. N. E. Weaver is president of this society. The immediate results of this society have been over seventy children added to the parent Sunday-school, and several to the Claiborne Street Mission Sunday-school, also the organization of a Dorcas Sewing Society, to sew for local missionary work and the Mexican missionary field. Mrs. E. P. Spear is superintendent. The latter movement was suggested by the Ladies' Aid and Missionary Society, which has for years sent a handsome annual contribution to the support of the missionary work of our church in the City of Mexico. Mrs. W. W. Carre is the efficient president of the latter.

Another significant evidence of the presence of the Spirit of God in this church, is the increased attendance in its congregations, also in all its Sunday-schools, both of teachers and scholars, and the vigorous efforts of the several superintendents to increase the interest and profitableness of their respective schools. Bro. J. G. Grant has organized a Normal Students' Course, which meets for the study and discussion of the lesson, and other questions incident to Sabbath-school work. The purpose of this class is to prepare the teachers to teach the lesson, and the results prove the wisdom of this step. At one of these meetings it was resolved to leave the question of Christmas presents to the children of the school—that is, as to whether they should receive, or whether they would voluntarily devote the estimated cost of their presents to the poor children of the Sunday-school of the City of Mexico, connected with our church. The writer was present the Sunday morning this resolution was put. It was unanimously adopted by a rising vote, and Bro. Grant was so overwhelmed with the scene that he nearly wept tears of joy. This sum, amounting to nearly $50, has been forwarded to Mrs. Weems, in the City of Mexico.

The Claiborne Street Mission School, of which Mr. Allen F. Godat is superintendent, has likewise been blessed with a spiritual energy, and its corps of godly workers are pushing forward this enterprise, so that in another year it is not unlikely a neat chapel building will be erected in this vicinity. The mission school, which was started in Gretna by the Carondelet Street Church, superintended by Mr. J. S. Bast, has been so highly favored of God that it has flowered into a beautiful church building of its own, paid for, costing over $1,700, and was occupied by both school and congregation last Sabbath for the first time.

For nearly five years past Mrs. E. J. Mitchel, of Carondelet Street Church, has maintained a sewing school for poor children, which has been revived. It is greatly aided by the fostering care of the Ladies' Aid Society. Hundreds of poor girls have been taught their first lessons in needle-craft by this lady and her noble corps of helpers.

Another important result of the revival was the calling of four consecrated young men to the ministry, three of whom had been recently converted. These are now at Centenary, and are maintained by the liberality of Carondelet Street Church, and we learn that they are not only studying, but exerting a most blessed influence upon the other students and are zealously engaged in missionary work around the college.

The young people's Sunday evening class meeting is another centre of spiritual power in this church. It has an average attendance of over forty, and its exercises are conducted exclusively by young people. Lately the workers in this department have organized themselves into committees—one of young ladies and the other of young gentlemen—in order to cultivate Christian fellowship among the young people of the church, to welcome this class to our meetings, to greet all such who join this church, and to hunt up young members not attending this class meeting, and induce them to do so.

While all this work has been going on, its fruitage is shown by the continual increase of church membership, by conversion and by letter. Hardly a Sabbath passes without accessions, and it is not infrequent to see from three to ten join us each Sabbath. The financial result of the year's work shows all Conference collections made, church expenses met, and liberal contributions to several outside efforts. Surely God is in all this. To him be the praise! A LAYMAN.

SAM JONES AT GREENVILLE, MISS.

MR. EDITOR: The second annual Sam Jones meeting in Greenville, Miss., was held November 3–10, resulting in great and, we hope, permanent good for the city and surrounding country. The great evangelist preached seventeen sermons with characteristic earnestness and force. Rev. George Stewart, of Cleveland, Tenn., rendered efficient service by preaching and conducting the morning prayer meetings. The singing was led by Prof. Excell. A goodly number of preachers were present, and multitudes of people, white and colored, attended the services daily. A commodious tent had been provided for the occasion. It is the joint property of the people of Greenville and Vicksburg; cost $1,000, and will be preserved for future use.

The meeting was a grand success for the edification of saints and the conversion of sinners. Hundreds of church members returned to their homes reconsecrated to a higher plane of Christian life, and innumerable sinners to reform and give their hearts to God. Nearly one hundred gave their names for membership in the several Protestant Churches in Greenville, of which the Methodist will receive about fifty, while scores from other parts pledged themselves to join the church of their choice soon.

Miss Belle Bennett was present representing the Bible Training-school for Women, located at Kansas City. She secured in cash and subscription more than $3,400 for that noble institution.

Several thousand dollars were raised for the building of a Y. M. C. A. Hall in Greenville.

God only knows, and eternity alone will reveal, the great achievements of these annual gospel mass meetings. May they be continued for years to come, to quicken the church, tone moral sentiment, and save sinners!

WATERPROOF, LA.

MR. EDITOR: Enclosed are $6 for the fund, "Another Missionary to Japan," from Waterproof charge. This money was given by the children chiefly. We are rejoiced to see the fund grow so fast. The children in my charge have been at work all the year, and have raised and paid, themselves, a good deal of money for missions.

Sunday before last Bro. Harper was with us, and, the Lord helping, we all were blessed; seven persons joined the church, and at the collection $55 45 were paid for the support of the ministry. The year is almost gone, and a pleasant one it has been to me, and, I trust, to all my dear parishioners; only our hearts have been deeply grieved in the death of some who were so dear and so helpful to the church here. Oh, how we have missed them since they went away to heaven! Many of my members are good and true Christians, and are doing all they can, both by prayer and practice, for the welfare of the cause of the Master; but our numbers are few, and so we have the greater reason for praising the Lord for these new recruits, and we pray that they all may prove faithful unto him till death.

It gives me so much pleasure to tell you that there has been some improvement in my work this year. More have united with the church than did last year, and my collections are better. The idea of assessing about seventy-five members $65 for foreign missions, and half of these members children and people who are very poor! And other assessments in proportion.

BOOKS.

A KNIGHT OF FAITH. By Lydia Hoyt Farmer. J. S. Ogilvie, New York. Price, $1.

This is an attempt to answer and refute the teachings of Robert Elsmere. It is said to be a powerful story. Fiction seems to be a favorite way, in these days, of teaching religious truth. If it helps to exemplify the living force of divine truth as a motive power in human hearts, it is well. The present book may afford such aid.

BIBLE STUDIES—INTERNATIONAL SABBATH-SCHOOL LESSONS FOR 1890. By George F. Pentecost, D. D. A. S. Barnes & Co., New York. Price, sixty cents.

Dr. Pentecost's Bible Studies in relation to the Sunday-school lessons have acquired great popularity. He has a concise and vigorous style and a large experience, and the present volume will be welcomed by many.

LESSON X.—December 8.

Solomon and the Queen of Sheba.

I. Kings x, 1-13.

GOLDEN TEXT.—She came from the uttermost parts of the earth to hear the wisdom of Solomon; and behold, a greater than Solomon is here.—Matt. xii, 42.

TIME.—B. C. 995. Ten years after the temple was completed.

PLACE.—Jerusalem, 1,000 or 1,200 miles from the queen of Sheba's home.

1. Queen of Sheba—Doubt has arisen whether the "queen of Sheba" was an Ethiopian or an Arabian princess. Both countries profess to have traditions on the subject connecting the queen of Sheba with their history; and to both countries, curiously enough, government by queens was common. But the claims of Arabia decidedly preponderate. The Arabian Sheba was the great spice country of the ancient world; whereas Ethiopia furnished no spices. The Arabian Sheba was an important kingdom. Sheba in Ethiopia was a mere town, subject to Meroe. And it may be doubted whether the Cushite Sheba of Scripture (Gen. x, 7) is not rather to be sought on the shores of the Persian Gulf, whence no one supposes "the queen of Sheba" to have come. If Ophir be placed in Arabia, there will be an additional reason for regarding Sheba as in the same quarter, because then Solomon's trade with that place will account for his fame having reached the Sabæan princess. The name of this princess, according to the Koran, was Balkis; according to Abyssinian belief, Maqueda. Whether she was a widow or a virgin is unknown. She seems to have enjoyed among the tribes of Arabia a reputation like Solomon's for wisdom. Her fame spread with and through that of Solomon, who was the beau ideal of a king throughout the East, for even the Koran mentions her visit to Solomon, and there are many legends about it among the Arabians and Abyssinians. Her visit has been rendered doubly memorable by the allusion made to it by Christ. The name of the Lord—The clause is confessedly very obscure. May it not mean what we should call "his religious fame," as distinct from his artistic, literary, military, or political fame—"his fame as respected God and the things of God," or, in other words, "his moral and religious wisdom?" Hard questions—A common custom among the Arabs of ancient and modern times, to test the sagacity and wisdom of distinguished persons. Josephus relates that Hiram, king of Tyre, and Solomon also, tried to puzzle each other with riddles and enigmatical sayings. "The spirit of this asking of questions and solving of dark riddles is of the very nature of the Socratic wisdom itself."

2. Came to Jerusalem—A journey of a thousand or twelve hundred miles. Very great train—Caravan ... camels. As the queen of a wealthy country, she came with a very large retinue. It does not mean a military force, or an armed escort, but riches, property—namely, her numerous retinue of men, and camels laden with valuable treasures. Spices, ... gold, ... precious stones—Besamim, from basam, to be fragrant; whence comes balsam. Josephus says that the genuine balsam, which grew near Jericho, and at Engedi, was introduced into Palestine by the queen of Sheba. Communed with ... all that was in her heart—That is, all that she had in her mind when she started, all that she had intended to ask Solomon. We do not mean enigmas in the sense of those that used to be propounded at meals or otherwise; the queen did not want any trial of skill in enigmas with Solomon, but wished to propound important and difficult questions to him.

3. Told her all her questions—Literally the Hebrew runs, "And Solomon told her all her words; there was not a word hid from the king, that he told her not." Solomon, that is, answered all her questions without any exception.

4. Wisdom ... house that he had built—The sumptuous palaces which he erected for his own residence display an opulence and profusion which may vie with the older monarchs of Egypt and Assyria. His great palace stood in Jerusalem; it occupied thirteen years in building. A causeway bridged the deep ravine, and, leading directly to the temple, united the part, either of the Acra or Zion, on which the palace stood, with Mount Moriah. In this palace was a vast hall for public business, from its cedar pillars called the "House of the Forest of Lebanon." It was 175 feet long, half that measurement in width, above 50 feet high. Besides this great hall, there were two others of similar dimensions, in one of which the throne of justice was placed. The harem, or women's apartments, adjoined to these buildings, with other piles of vast extent, particularly, if we may credit Josephus, a great banqueting hall. The same author informs us that the whole was surrounded by spacious and luxurious gardens. Another palace was built in a romantic part of the country, in the valleys at the foot of Lebanon, for his wife, the daughter of the king of Egypt, and as a summer residence. These palaces, however splendid, could not be regarded as complete, especially in the East, without great gardens, displaying every triumph of horticultural art. One of these seems to have been formed immediately under the walls of Jerusalem, at the junction of the valleys of Hinnom and of the Kedron. A second, on a larger scale, was probably at the square-topped hill known as El Fureidis—the Paradise—seven miles south of the capital.

5. Sitting of his servants—The number and titles of those who attended the royal banquets. The rooms of the courtiers in attendance. Or it may mean an assembly (Psa. i, 1), and possibly the queen saw them when gathered together for a meal. Attendance ... apparel—That is, of those who ministered to him. The word "ministers" is, perhaps, to be understood of personal attendants, in distinction from the servants, the state officers. That they were an inferior class the "standing" shows. The rich and costly dress of Eastern courtiers and attendants is sometimes furnished by the king. (Gen. xiv, 23; I. Sam. xviii, 4; II. Kings v, 5; Dan. v, 7; Esther vi, 8.) His ascent—(1) All the imposing ceremonies and sacrifices of the worship in which Solomon took part. (2) The splendid and numerous retinue accompanying him. (3) The stairs and approaches to the temple. No more spirit in her—She was astonished, and rapt in a kind of ecstasy, and could scarce determine whether she did really see these things, or whether it was not only a pleasant dream.

6. She said—What she would not have willingly acknowledged. ... True, she had thought it impossible that what she heard would be true. ... Heard, from travelers and others. She then said, with astonishment, to Solomon, that of what her eyes now saw she had not heard the half through the report which had reached her of his affairs and of his wisdom, and which had hitherto appeared incredible to her.

7. Thy ... prosperity—The Hebrew word here used may mean either "prosperity" or "goodness." Prosperity seems to be intended in this place.

9. Blessed be the Lord thy God—We can not conclude from these words that the queen had formally confessed the one God of Israel. What she saw and heard excited her wonder to such a degree that it seemed to her directly imparted by the God Solomon adored, and for whom she became filled with reverence. Judgment and justice—That is, to execute just judgment among them, to govern them with right and equity. She tacitly admonisheth Solomon that he was not made king that he might live in ease and pleasure and splendor, but for the good of his people.

10. A hundred and twenty talents of gold—About three millions and a half of dollars. That the gold of Sheba should be given to Solomon was prophesied by the writer of Psalm 72. Strabo relates that the Sabæans were enormously wealthy, and used gold and silver in a most lavish manner in their furniture, their utensils, and even on the walls, doors, and roofs of their houses. The immense abundance of spices in Arabia, and especially in the Yemen or Sabæan country, is noted by many writers. According to Strabo, the spice trade of Arabia was in the hands of two nations, the Sabæans and the Gerrhæns. The spices in which they dealt seem to have been only in part the produce of Arabia itself; some of the most important kinds, as the cinnamon and the cassia, must have been imported from India, since Arabia does not yield them. The chief precious stones which Arabia now yields are the onyx and the emerald. Anciently she is said to have produced other gems. Pearls, too, were readily procurable in Arabia from the Persian Gulf fishery.

11. The navy also of Hiram—The allusion to these costly presents leads the historian to introduce the remark here, that the Ophir fleet also brought, in addition to gold, a large quantity of Algummim wood and precious stones.

12. Pillars—Rather, a balustrade to fend the side of some elevated passage or stair-way. The latter meaning is here the more probable. The balustrades of the stair-ways in the temple and in the palace were made of this celebrated wood.

13. All her desire—Asking for presents is common in the East, and is practiced by persons of all ranks. No feeling of shame prevents either the prince or the peasant from requesting to have given him everything that he sees and covets. A return, however, is made, as a matter of course, for presents received in this way, and indeed for all presents except they be rewards for service, or alms. His royal bounty—Or, as the margin has it, gave her according to the hand of King Solomon. That is, besides giving her the things she asked for, he gave her presents becoming his great wealth. As she had brought him presents of such great value, it was but a matter of kingly courtesy for him to respond by similar gifts.

Missionary.

Letter from Mexico.

MR. EDITOR: The Conference has passed, and we are all settled for a year. From all I learn, I think there is a feeling of satisfaction over the result of the Conference, and we will surely work with a will to make our field a success, and trust our friends will pray earnestly for us.

All is excitement in the city over the assassination of General Corona, the governor of Guadalajara, on yesterday, as he and his wife (an American lady from California) were en route to one of the principal theaters, where they were going by special invitation to witness the drama of the "Martyrs of Tacabaya." Mrs. Corona was wounded also in her efforts to protect her husband. Governor Ramon Corona was one of Mexico's most illustrious sons and a firm friend of the Americans. Young Mr. Ramon Corona, the son of the murdered governor, left the City of Mexico yesterday for Guadalajara on a special train. When the sad news was told him, it is said, his grief was heart-rending.

Bro. Watkins and the native pastor are holding a meeting now in our church in this city, which was opened with a sermon by Dr. John, our missionary secretary. His forceful words touched the hearts of the natives and impressed us all with the feeling that this man is, in truth, "the friend of God." His presence in our homes was a benediction, and the natives truly trusted him as their friend. No doubt the Conference of Guadalajara and the visit of the Bishops and Dr. John will result in great good to our church. Words of sympathy and interest in the labors of the lonely missionary are to the soul what a strengthening tonic is to the body.

Mr. Weems starts out on the work of this district on the twenty-second instant, to be absent on first trip three weeks, while I shall be left entirely alone with a servant girl, to "watch and pray." I shall be only too thankful if his efforts are crowned with success.

I presume you will have letters from the travelers telling of the wonders of Mexico; so I will only add that my address is the same as last year—Avenida Balderas No. 11. When next I write I shall tell of the noble conduct of the Sunday-school of Carondelet Street Church, led by the superintendent, that large-hearted Christian, Bro. Grant, the publisher of the ADVOCATE, and how he sent sunshine into Mexican homes and rejoiced the hearts of the missionaries.

W. C. T. U. CONVENTION STATISTICS.

Battery D will seat 5,000 people, and was crowded at every session.

One hundred and three of the original crusaders were present.

Two hundred colored unions were represented by delegates.

A gain of 12,510 pledged pupils in the Sunday-schools of one State alone (New York) was reported.

A rising vote revealed the interesting fact that only eighty-eight of the delegates had never been school teachers.

Miss Esther Pugh, treasurer, reported the total receipts, from all sources, to be $23,889 97; total expenditures, $20,667 57.

The vote for president stood as follows: Total number of votes cast, 415. Miss Frances E. Willard received 410; Mrs. J. Ellen Foster, 1; Mrs. Mary H. Hunt, 3; Mrs. Woodbridge, 1; and Mrs. Chapin, 1. Last year the total number of votes cast was 391, of which Miss Willard received 360.

The report of Mrs. C. B. Buell, corresponding secretary, showed that this was the largest convention ever held by the union. There were 463 regular delegates, to 412 last year; 7,405 local unions were reported, to 7,370 last year. The increase of about fifty delegates represents a correspondingly large increase in membership. Three thousand one hundred and forty-one Loyal Legions have been reported, with a membership of 150,143.

CONVENTION QUOTATIONS.

Leaving every State and individual free, let us speak out our thanks as freely to any and all parties that stand by prohibition, and if in the national arena only one has thus declared itself, let us accept its declaration gratefully, and give it our sympathy and influence, saying to whosoever may strike at us for so doing, "Strike, but hear me"! and to whosoever may vilify our utterances as treason, "If this be treason, make the most of it"!—Frances E. Willard's annual address.

We have the partisanship that in Illinois makes as lend our influence to the prohibition party; in South Dakota to the republican party, and nationally with the prohibition party. But so far as being everlastingly pledged to any one political organization is concerned, we are "strictly non-partisan."—Frances E. Willard's annual address.

Woman's everlasting befrilled, bedizened and bedraggled style of dress is to-day doing more harm to children unborn, born and dying, than all other causes that compel public attention. With ligatured lungs and liver as our past inheritance and present slavery, the wonder is that such small heads can carry all we know! Catch Edison and constrict him inside a wasp-waist-coat, and be sure you'll get no more inventions; bind a bustle upon Bismarck and farewell to German unity: coerce Robert Browning into corsets, and you'll have no more epics; put Parnell into petticoats, and home rule is a lost cause; treat Powderly in the same fashion, and the powder mine of intrigue will blow up the labor movement. Niggardly waists and niggardly brains go together. The emancipation of one will always keep pace with the other; a ligature around the vital organs at the smallest diameter of the womanly figure means an impoverished blood supply to the brain, and may explain why women scream when they see a mouse, and why they are so afraid of a term which should be their glory as it is that of their brothers, viz.: strong-minded.—Frances E. Willard's annual address.

Catarrh

Is a constitutional and not a local disease, and therefore it cannot be cured by local applications. It requires a constitutional remedy like Hood's Sarsaparilla, which, working through the blood, eradicates the impurity which causes and promotes the disease, and effects a permanent cure. Thousands of people testify to the success of Hood's Sarsaparilla as a remedy for catarrh when other preparations had failed. Hood's Sarsaparilla also builds up the whole system and makes you feel renewed in health and strength.

Thanksgiving.

This is the day set apart by the President for thanksgiving to God for his mercies and blessings to us as a people. We have much to be thankful for. Temporal blessings have flowed in upon us. The harvest has been abundant and prices are good. We have been spared any serious sickness. There have been no epidemics. Peace reigns in all our borders. Besides these, there have been religious awakenings all over the land. The revival spirit has been abroad, and there have been outpourings of a spiritual influence whose mighty power has been realized by hundreds and thousands. Surely "a people in such a case" should praise the Lord, and give thanks to his name. "Oh, that men would praise the Lord for his goodness, and for his wonderful works to the children of men." "Bless the Lord, oh, my soul, and all that is within me bless his holy name."

Home Mission Work.

Following up a few remarks made in this paper a few weeks ago on this subject, we recommend that our Annual Conference Boards arrange to hold a public meeting in the interests of domestic missionary work at some favorable time during the Conference session. We do not mean a Board meeting, but a meeting of the whole Conference and as many visitors as will attend, to consider the opportunities and necessities for more mission work in our Conference borders. Our readers know how this paper has been, from the first and under all its editors, foremost in the advocacy of greater diligence and larger giving to carry on our foreign missions, but now we desire to put special emphasis upon our home work. There is a danger here. While we are made "keepers of the vineyards," let us not neglect to "keep our own vineyard." Let us not imitate the Moravians so closely as to decrease at home while we increase abroad. God has given us the fairest heritage on earth to cultivate, and if we fail, he will surely turn it over to some one else.

In the Louisiana Conference (we can not speak so certainly of Mississippi and North Mississippi Conference) we have practically no domestic mission work. Last year we collected about $1,250, which was about equally divided between the six districts. We understand that this money was appropriated, not to domestic missions, but to supplement the salaries of preachers on some very weak circuits. We think this is a misappropriation of that money. It was not given for that purpose, nor was it collected with that end in view. While that money has, perhaps, helped the preacher it his injured his circuit, and the real mission work has gone begging. Human nature is such the world of Methodism over, that where a hundred or so dollars are given from the Board of Missions to help a circuit pay its preacher, there will be no special effort made to get out of circumstances which seem to demand that help. This distribution of this little mission fund over our six districts has been going on for years and years, and if something is not done, it will continue and be handed down to our children of the third and fourth generation, and in the meantime our inheritance will be handed over to a people who will work it up. That there are places in our territory needing help is undoubted. That they have been asking for it for years is also true. That they have not received it our own records show. It is time to change. Some of our best givers are becoming restive under the misuse of the money they have given for domestic missions. Being business men, they see that the little collected is spread out so thin that nothing is accomplished by it. If they could see it applied at a given point in a way likely to result in something, they would give more. People who give money want to know two things—where is it going? what is it doing? If they know that it goes to the proper place, and will be so used as to accomplish good, they not only give liberally, but send an earnest prayer along with their gifts. It is time to appropriate money collected for domestic missions to domestic mission work. Let our Boards follow the law of their own constitutions and make these appropriations themselves.

In order to do this judiciously, let them arrange for a public domestic missionary meeting during the session of the Conference. At such a meeting all the facts in relation to the subject can be brought out. The preachers and the laymen know the whole territory, and the needy places and the available places, and a Conference where everything pertaining to this cause is discussed and canvassed by those knowing the facts, will give the Boards such enlightenment as will enable them to appropriate judiciously such funds as they have in hand. It will not only do this, but it will give every attendant upon such Conference a fresh interest in the work, and kindle a new enthusiasm in the hearts of the preachers and lay delegates. And when our people come to understand that their money is doing the work they contributed it to do, instead of giving the little they now give, the collections will very largely increase. Let our Conference Boards take these hints and see if there is not something in them worthy of attention and consideration.

Letter from Bishop Galloway.

MR. EDITOR: I have not forgotten the promise to write you a letter or two from "the Land of the Montezumas," but constant occupation with Conference and other church affairs have hitherto prevented. Even the "odd half-hours" heretofore devoted to letter writing have been employed either in official business or in studying the scenes and characteristics of this wonderful country. My second visit has only increased interest in this people and intensified desire to see our mission work prosper more and more. I spent a week at San Antonio, holding the Mexican Border Mission Conference. The session was most pleasant, the reports of preachers quite cheering and the outlook altogether hopeful, if not inspiring. There was a net gain in membership of over two hundred, and the contributions to various church purposes were in advance of last year. Several promising young men were admitted on trial; among the number a highly-recommended and well-equipped American from our Travis Park Church, in San Antonio. The joint anniversary of the Mission and Church Extension Boards was a notable occasion. Dr. John and myself made short talks, and Bro. Sutherland lifted the collection, amounting to over seven hundred dollars, all of which, except one or two small sums, was contributed by the Mexicans. Considering the stubborn opposition of Romanism, and the ignorance and superstition of the masses resulting from the domination of that church, the Conference has made gratifying progress. One unacquainted with the facts can have no conception of the spiritual and mental degradation of the people. Of the ten million or more of Mexican population, scarcely one million can read and write. And among that ignorant mass, including the women of the more intelligent classes, Romanism finds her fanatical devotees. As indicative of the vigilant and fierce opposition to Protestantism, our preachers find it very difficult to rent houses in which to live or hold religious services. It is an offense meriting excommunication to rent a house to one who will read the Bible and have prayers therein. But in face of such difficulties the church moves on—slowly, to be sure, but positively—and is becoming a factor in the higher civilization of the long-suffering, beautiful land of the Aztecs. I should note specially the cheering outlook in the Sonora district—the far West, washed by the waters of the Pacific Ocean. The presiding elder reported most inviting openings for our work, and plead earnestly for more men. We need two American missionaries for that field at once. The large cities are less fanatical than the east and ready to welcome the coming of messengers with the true faith. I hope soon to find two men with apostolic spirit willing to enter that open door.

(Since writing that paragraph, a letter has been received, bringing intelligence that one has been secured. Who will be the other?)

The Conference adjourned on Monday morning, and at noon quite a party of us started southward, purposing to spend a day at Laredo. Reaching that city about five o'clock, we were met at the depot by Miss Holding, Bro. Haden and others, who bade us welcome to the banks of the Rio Grande, and thrice welcome to the hospitable roof of Laredo Seminary. The splendid, spacious buildings and beautiful, admirably kept grounds commanded grateful and commendatory comment from all the delighted visitors. On the seminary campus sleeps, in a modestly marked grave, a daughter of the heroic Alejo Hernandez, our first native Mexican missionary. His family Bible was at San Antonio during the Conference session, and was used in conducting the devotional exercises. It contains his family record, including his conversion, license to preach and ordinations, all written by his own hand, and most beautifully. Like all Mexicans, he was a skillful penman. In the seminary there are about 150 pupils. The several departments are thoroughly organized, and the entire institution is managed with consummate ability. It is a magnificent monument to the wise planning and large liberality of the Woman's Board of Missions. I earnestly hope that a similar school may soon be established within the territory of the Central Mexican Conference. A sermon to the congregation in Laredo at night, another to the pupils of the seminary on Tuesday morning, and a drive around the growing Gate City, quite occupied the resting hours of the writer. Bro. Haden was kind enough to introduce Dr. John and myself to a distinguished Mexican citizen, who gave us a letter of introduction to the Secretary of State. The elderly gentleman has an honored civic and military record, and enjoys the personal friendship and confidence of President Diaz. He showed us marked kindness, and took evident pride in calling attention to various valuable souvenirs that adorned the walls of his mansion and filled the shelves of his cabinet. Among other historic things, was a piece of stone stained with the blood of Maximillian, taken from the very spot where the ill-fated Emperor fell by military decree.

At six o'clock, Tuesday afternoon, we crossed the Rio Grande, and, after satisfying the clever custom officers that we had no contraband goods, were soon making moderate speed down the narrow-guage Mexican National toward the far-famed Capital City, whose palaces and plazas it is the dream of every native to see, at least, once before he is gathered to his fathers. During the night we crossed the Sierra Madre Mountains and passed the city of Monterey, but the grand scenery of the one and the historic grandeur of the other were lost to the weary travelers quietly sleeping in the Pullman. We were aroused, however, in time for a seven o'clock breakfast at Saltillo. On alighting from the car, there was abundant evidence that we were in a foreign land—the strange language, the peculiar dress of the people, the wierd cry of the fruit-vender, the barbarously burdened donkey, the rumbling diligence drawn by six small mules, two at the wheels and four in front hitched abreast, the gaudily dressed horseman of the better class and the uniformed military left no doubt of our being in the favored region of revolutions and counter-revolutions. At this point Miss Roberts and Miss Tydings, our valued traveling companions, and brave young sisters in missionary labor, left us to resume work in their prosperous school. It was gratifying to see the large delegation at the depot to welcome their return, which was done in right royal Mexican style. We much regretted not being able to stop over a day, but other appointments prevented. Satillo is the capital of the State of Coahuila, to which Texas was at one time attached. It is an important city, and our Woman's Board of Missions have done wisely in planting schools there. I very much wish that we had an American preacher to appoint there at once, to do needed evangelistic work and give the young ladies sympathy and protection in their lonely, self-denying toils.

A few miles south of Saltillo we passed through the battle-field of Buena Vista. Of course, all repaired to the rear platform for a satisfactory view and to refresh our memories with the incidents of an engagement that crowned the American army with victory and humbled the pride of Gen. Santa Anna, the inhuman hero of the Alamo. As the positions of the two armies were pointed out to us, we could but wonder at the rashness of the Mexican commander in marching to certain defeat. No military prophet was necessary to foretell the result

As the train moved southward we passed alternately through fertile valleys, immense haciendas (plantations), dreary alkali plains, and climbed successive ranges of mountains. Between Saltillo and Catorce we traverse the vast hacienda known as "El Salado," one of the largest estates in Mexico, containing over 885,600 acres of land. The valleys are adapted to the raising of small grain, large crops of which are produced by means of irrigation. The cordilleras running through this land, from north to south, have innumerable and very rich veins of silver, gold, lead, copper and other metals, making it altogether one of the most valuable estates in the republic. As poorly managed as Mexican property is, I am told it yields ten per cent. on a valuation of one million dollars.

At Catorce we enjoyed (?) a Mexican dinner in a superannuated box-car serving as a dining-room. This is a small railroad station. The city of the same name is in full view up in the mountains, some leagues away. It is an old, rich mining place of 20,000 inhabitants, and contains a number of substantial buildings. No wheeled vehicle, it is said, has ever made a track in that mountain city. Its immense business is conducted by means of donkeys. Hundreds of them were being loaded with freight at the depot as we passed. At half-past seven we reached San Luis Potosi, and soon found a comfortable home with Bro. Winton and family. To Bro. Winton, who was an appreciative visitor at the Mexican Border Conference and our traveling companion to San Luis Potosi, we all are indebted for many courtesies and much information. Of our visit there and to this city, I will have to write another letter.

Fraternally yours,

CHAS. B. GALLOWAY.

CITY OF MEXICO.

Work for the General Conference.

In the last issue of the ADVOCATE you have four articles on the above-named subject, contributed by four preachers. Of course, we take it that they are all in earnest, and want what they ask for. Bro. Parker and Dr. Ahrens seem to think that the presiding eldership has fallen into unpopularity, and Bro. Parker suggests the enlargement of the districts as the remedy. That would kill, not cure the trouble. The cause of the declining popularity of the presiding eldership is, there are two many pastoral charges in the districts. Put twelve, and in no case more than fourteen charges in a district, and the presiding elder can give a Sunday to every Quarterly Conference, and that is what all our people want. Enlarge the districts, and let the presiding elder come around only twice a year, and the people would feel that the office was, indeed, a fifth wheel in our church machinery. Bro. Parker says that one hundred presiding elders could be put in the unoccupied territory; as it is, it is a waste of talent and time. Who ever heard the like? A waste of time! Put our strongest men into the presiding eldership, give them twelve appointments in each district, and the old-time popularity would return. But do as many of our Conferences do at present: compel the presiding elder to hold from sixty-four to seventy-two Quarterly Conferences in the year—about one-third of them in the middle of the week—and force him to keep "on the pad" all the while—and you destroy his usefulness and influence to a large extent. In many of our pastoral charges the presiding elder comes in and holds the Quarterly Conference some week-night, and is gone before many know that he has come at all. Hence our people are made to feel that all he has to do is to hold the Quarterly Conference and receive his pay.

Dr. Ahrens suggests two changes in our economy which are radical in the extreme, viz: The election of the presiding elders and the admission of one lay delegate from each district to the Bishop's cabinet. It is remembered that Bishop Soule refused ordination because such a law was passed by the General Conference when he was elected Bishop.

The presiding elder is a chief pastor as well as a sub-bishop. To elect him is to open the way for the election of all who have charge of circuits, missions and stations. It is contrary to the spirit of our policy. To admit a layman from each district would be unwise, because it is not supposed that our best and wisest laymen know much of our work beyond their own church. Unless they could travel throughout the district, they could not know the needs of each pastoral charge. Well, Mr. Editor, I have delivered my soul. I have no idea of going to the General Conference, and I thought that the only way to get my ideas before the public was to write them to the ADVOCATE.

T. W. LEWIS.

WINONA, Mississippi.

Notes.

The Congregationalist says:

The tender prayer of a brother in public service still lingers with stirring grateful thoughts: "When he takes his pen to write for the instruction and guidance of the people, may Christ stand beside him to suggest his thoughts and guide their expression. If an inspired apostle hesitated not to put into his epistle the earnest appeal "Brethren, pray for us," surely the editors of a religious newspaper may untingly ask the prayers of those who they strive to serve for Christ's sake.

One of the most alarming things yet brought to the notice of the public is the fact made known by Thomas G. Shearman in the November Forum. The labor problem and the race question become insignificant in comparison with it. The fact stated by Mr. Shearman is that 25,000 people own one-half the wealth of the United States, and that the whole wealth is practically owned by about 250,000 people, and yet we are a nation of over sixty millions. Just think of it a little, and see how the big danger will grow on you!

Our church papers are practically unknown in the large city churches. The people either content themselves by reading the city dailies, literary and fashion journals, supplemented by small monthlies distributed free of charge. They know very little of the great work of the church outside of their own circle, and of the wonderful religious movements claiming the attention of the world, as set forth in the weekly church press. This error should be remedied. There is no substitute for the weekly church paper, and any effort to supply its place in the homes of the people is a mistake and will prove a failure in the end. Such has been the experience of the church; such it will ever be.—Central Methodist.

We regret to have to say it, but every word of the above is too true. It ought to be otherwise, but it is not.

We acknowledge the receipt from the committee, of the "Plan and Specifications, with approximate estimate of the cost to perfect the Drainage of the City." This is a pamphlet presented to the taxpayers and people generally of New Orleans, and is accompanied with a map showing the details of the plan. We do not know how feasible such a plan is, but we do know that no place we have ever seen ever needed so badly a good system of drainage as this city. Every rain that falls floods some streets, and if it is much of a rain, the whole city becomes a sea. We hope the gentlemen who "got up" this plan will persevere until this or some other is adopted, so that we can go about the streets in showery weather.

Excepting some glaring errors, it gives us pleasure to reproduce, from the Chicago Advance, this personal item:

One of the pleasantest features of the Woman's Christian Temperance Convention in this city was the presence and addresses of a number of representative Christian women from the South, as Mrs. Meryck, of New Orleans, wife of the Chief Justice of the State; Mrs. Sallie F. Chapin, of South Carolina; Mrs. Goodnie, of Mississippi; Mrs. Griffin, of Alabama, and others. Nothing could exceed their frankness in speaking of the feelings of Southern women, or the grace and exquisite charm of their manner in expressing as to the new sentiments which are beginning to be entertained by Southern Christian women toward their Northern sisters, and in respect to the common responsibility and work of saving the country to temperance, and purity, and good homes. The more such women become known to our people in the North the better.

Mrs. Merrick is the wife of an ex-Chief Justice, and Mrs. Goodnie is a resident of Louisiana.

To those of our readers who are beginning to fear that everything is going to the bad, and that the devil is about to take possession of the earth, we commend this paragraph from Dr. Buckley:

"When Methodism arose infidelity was rampant, far more prevalent than it is to-day, and even bolder; religion was scoffed at, the church dead, the majority of its ministers making no pretense to piety, and preaching mere morality and philosophy; yet that revival was the greatest of modern times. In this country, after the lapse of one hundred and twenty-three years, its fruits exist in more than four million communicants and in powerful establishments wherever the English language is spoken, and flourishing missions in many lands.

What a genuine revival will do is thus briefly stated by the same writer:

A genuine revival has more than the moral force of a miracle. Would you answer infidelity? Secure such a revival. Would you antagonize spiritualism? Use the same means. Would you destroy worldliness in the church? This is the only remedy. Would you save young men from ruin? Add to personal appeals and instruction the mighty agency. Would you prevent men from becoming drunkards? Convert them. Would you change the intellectual condition of a community? Only a genuine revival can do it. Has you a church to build? If the people be revived, they will bring all the tithes into the store-house.

Personal and Otherwise.

It is said that as the Yankees leave New England for the West, the French Canadians come in to fill their places, and that in five of the New England cities they are already in the majority.

There are 170,000 miles of telephone wire in operation in the United States. The longest distance over which conversation by telephone is daily made is between Portland and New York, 750 miles. There are 300,000 telephones in use in this country.

The Methodist Episcopal Church raised for missions last year $1,000,681; this year $1,130,137. Good increase, that.

Look at the label on your ADVOCATE! Do you understand it? If it reads, "John Smith, Oct., 89," that means that your subscription became due November 1. If it reads, "John Smith, Jan., 91," that means that you have paid up till January, 1891. Do you understand? Look at it now and see.

The last number of the Southern Christian Advocate was a Conference number. Bro. Kirkland surpassed himself in preparing such a rich repast for his readers. We hope the Conference will re-elect him to the post he has so admirably filled for four years. The "old Southern" is one of the best, and continues to get better.

The Georgia Legislature has passed a bill, and it was signed by Governor Gordon, prohibiting all advertisements of lotteries. The bill goes into effect immediately. Good for Georgia! Now let other States follow.

Before our next issue the North Mississippi Conference will convene in Holly Springs. From reports published in the ADVOCATE from time to time, we believe the year has been a successful one, and we wish the brethren a glorious time at the annual convention.

North Mississippi Conference meets at Holly Springs, Miss., December 4; Bishop Galloway presides. Louisiana Conference meets at Baton Rouge, La., December 12; Bishop Duncan presides. Mississippi Conference meets at Crystal Springs, Miss., December 18; Bishop Galloway presides.

The types, last week, made one of our postal card reports read from "Rev. W. M. Blanks," when it should have been, "Rev. H. M Banks," of Sugartown, La. We are sorry for the mistake, and make the correction cheerfully.

If you do not send on your contribution to the Japan Mission very soon, you will be too late. We are nearly up to our mark. When we reach it, your opportunity will be gone.

A brother writes: "I do think that the Publishing Committee ought to restrict all notices of deaths to ten lines." We will be more than satisfied if such notices do not go over the thirty-five lines now allowed.

Our missionary women and all others concerned are hereby notified that the postoffice address of Mrs. E. J. Fallilove, president of Louisiana Woman's Missionary Society, is now Chalk Level, Shreveport, La.

Sam Jones' meetings at Vicksburg are said to have been successful in every way.

Denver has voted by a good majority to close the saloons on Sunday.

Dr. C. K. Marshall, of Vicksburg, has placed us under peculiar obligations to him by sending us The Church News, which contains an elaborate account of the Catholic Centennial.

We are indebted to Dr. B. M. Palmer, of this city, for a copy of his little book, "Formation of Character." It consists of twelve lectures delivered in the First Presbyterian Church to young men. Having named the author and the subject, our readers naturally infer that the work is of a superior character. For sale by E. S. Upton, 94 Camp Street. Price, $1.

Rev. Alonzo Monk has been transferred from the North Alabama Conference to the Memphis Conference.

The Arkansas Methodist announces the death of Rev. T. G. Galloway. We knew him in days gone by. He was converted under our ministry. He has two brothers in the Louisiana Conference. May the consolations of the Divine Father be poured into the afflicted hearts!

The noonday prayer meeting, which is held daily at Carondelet Street Methodist Church, is open to all, especially strangers who are visiting New Orleans. This meeting is growing in power, interest and effect. All are welcome.

The statement as to the finances of the Carondelet Street Church, in the article, "From the Work," should have been written, "The finances and collections are nearly all met."

The church at Edwards, Miss., has passed some handsome resolutions about Bro. I. W. Cooper, who is just finishing a four years' term on that circuit. A man who goes out at the end of four years in such circumstances is a happy man.

Rev. J. V. Penn gave us a call last Tuesday. He had just arrived from California, on his way to Jackson, La.

The Mississippi College.

MR. EDITOR: In behalf of the Joint Committee, I desire space in your columns for a few words to those who have subscribed to the endowment fund of the Mississippi Methodist College. Subscriptions to this fund are payable in two installments—one due December 1, 1889; the other December 1, 1890. Several subscribers have already paid the first installment, and a few have paid their entire subscriptions. If all who have subscribed will pay the first installment when due, they will greatly facilitate the work of the Committee. Quite a number of persons who have subscribed have not yet given their notes. The reason of this in most cases is that they have not had an opportunity; the blank notes prepared by the committee not having been presented to them. Pastors and presiding elders can render valuable service by sending to Bro. Millsaps for these blank notes and presenting them to subscribers. As the entire $50,000 is not yet subscribed, and as the time until Conference is short, it behooves all interested in the cause to exert themselves to the utmost in behalf of this fund. The preachers in the two Conferences have the success of this enterprise largely in their own hands.

Mr. Editor, I expect to be able very soon to report, at least, a respectable sum from Jackson. W. C. BLACK.

Colportage Work.

In closing this, my fifth, year of colportage work in the North Mississippi Conference, I desire to make the following record with gratitude to Almighty God for his blessings and help.

I have been enabled to attend during the year seven District Conferences; to visit fifty-nine churches in forty-seven pastoral charges; to preach eighty-four sermons and deliver numerous Sunday-school addresses and prayer-meeting talks; to dispose of $2,200 worth of books and collect $225 for church papers.

My object in this work has ever been not only to supply existing wants of the people for books and papers, but to study their real needs and increase their relish for good reading matter. Evidently one of the great needs of the day is a more thorough circulation of pure and wholesome literature. I rejoice in the fact of increasing interest in this matter in our Conference. May the good work continue until all trashy and pernicious books and papers shall be supplanted by those of solid worth and purifying influence. I hope to be in place at my own Conference, December 4, and also at the session of the Mississippi Conference, December 18, with a good stock of timely and helpful books for both preachers and people.

Mississippi Authorship.

The Rev. J. W. Ellison has recently given us a treatise on baptism, in which "The Question Settled" is claimed. It is a pamphlet of 64 pages, well written, logically framed, and evincing far more scriptural research than any argument of the sort I have met with. He goes largely into the Old Testament, bringing forward numerous plain prophesies and symbolisms which are well answered in the brief mission of John the Baptist and other portions of the New Testament which treat the subject. He makes Scripture explain Scripture rather than private interpretation. Really, his arguments are unanswerable. I like the treatise the better still because of what is not in it. There is in it nothing of this ink-and-paper, utterly illogical and wholly inapplicable ding-dong about Greek translation of baptidzo.

—President Hunnicutt writes from Centenary College, Jackson, La.: "Centenary College sends thirty-two dollars to aid in defraying the expenses of a missionary to Japan, as asked for in the ADVOCATE. We hope that you will soon have the one thousand dollars needed. I am also authorized by a brother in our church at this place to say that he will be one of forty laymen to raise another thousand dollars to send another missionary to Japan, along with the one for whom you have been providing. He thinks one will be lonely, going by himself."

—Rev. J. W. Malone writes from Minter City, Miss.: "The year is closing up very satisfactorily at Minter City and Strathmore. I have received ninety-one members into the church during the year. My own and the presiding elder's salary will be overpaid; twenty-per cent. excess on Conference collections, and a live Woman's Missionary Society organized with fifteen members. I have secured over $400 on the college endowment fund, and think I will get more before I leave for Conference. This charge will pay $3,000 this year for church purposes."

About Boxes in Postoffices.

Can anyone assign a good reason why the government of the United States should charge citizens rent for boxes in postoffices when the citizens furnish the boxes and keep them in order? Yet such is the case. Persons living in towns, of more than ten thousand inhabitants, have their letters delivered at their own doors free of extra charge. Why should not a citizen of a smaller town have his letters placed in a locked box by the postmaster, provided the citizen pays the cost of the box? Is not box-rent a charge for delivering a letter? Do not boxes aid the government in delivering, as well as the citizen in receiving letters? And do not boxes save clerk hire in the postoffice? Should a citizen be virtually fined from two to eight dollars a year because he lives in a small town? Why not let citizens buy postoffice boxes, and let the rent for them be abolished?

Mississippi Conference Notice.

We have corresponded with the officials of the various railroads over which you will travel in coming to Conference in regard to reduction of rates, and from the most of them have received favorable replies; others to be heard from. The general plan is this: Purchase a regular ticket at full fare coming, and procure from the agent a certificate of that fact. This certificate, signed by the secretary of our Conference, and presented to the agent here, will entitle you to a return ticket at one cent per mile. You will need a certificate, signed as above stated, for each road over which you travel coming to and going from Conference.

AGENTS WANTED.
AN EXTRAORDINARY OFFER.
We want live, energetic agents in every county in the United States and Canada to sell a patent article of great merit, on its merits. An article having a large sale, paying over 100 per cent. profit, having no competition, and on which the agent is protected in the exclusive sale by a deed given for each and every county he may secure from us. With all these advantages to our agents, and the fact that it is an article that can be sold to every house owner, it might not be necessary to make "an extraordinary offer" to secure good agents at once, but we have concluded to make it to show, not only our confidence in the merits of our invention, but in its salability by any agent that will handle it with energy. Our agents now at work are making from $150 to $300 a month clear, and makes it safe for us to make our offer to all who are out of employment. Any agent that will give our business a thirty days' trial, and fail to clear at least $100 in that time, above all expenses, can return all goods unsold to us, and we will refund the money paid for them. No other employer of agents ever dared to make such an offer, nor would we if we did not know that we have agents now making double this amount. Our large descriptive circulars explain our offer fully, and these we wish to send to everyone out of employment who will send us three one-cent stamps for postage.

Sufferers

FROM Stomach and Liver derangements—Dyspepsia, Biliousness, Sick-Headache, and Constipation—find a safe and certain relief in Ayer's Pills. In all cases where a cathartic is needed, these Pills are recommended by leading physicians.

Dr. T. E. Hastings, of Baltimore, says: "Ayer's Pills are the best cathartic and aperient within the reach of my profession."

Dr. John W. Brown, of Oceana, W. Va., writes: "I have prescribed Ayer's Pills in my practice, and find them excellent. I urge their general use in families."

"For a number of years I was afflicted with biliousness which almost destroyed my health. I tried various remedies, but nothing afforded me any relief until I began to take Ayer's Pills."—G. S. Wunderlich, Scranton, Pa.

"I have used Ayer's Pills for the past thirty years, and am satisfied I should not be alive to-day if it had not been for them. They cured me of dyspepsia when all other remedies failed, and their occasional use has kept me in a healthy condition ever since."—T. P. Brown, Chester, Pa.

"Having been subject, for years, to constipation, without being able to find much relief, I at last tried Ayer's Pills, and deem it both a duty and a pleasure to testify that I have derived great benefit from their use. For over two years past I have taken one of these Pills every night before retiring. I would not willingly be without them."—G. W. Bowman, 26 East Main st., Carlisle, Pa.

"Ayer's Pills have been used in my family upwards of twenty years, and have completely verified all that is claimed for them. In attacks of piles, from which I suffered many years, they afforded me greater relief than any medicine I ever tried."—Thomas F. Adams, Holly Springs, Texas.

MASON & HAMLIN

The Cabinet Organ was introduced in its present form by Mason & Hamlin in 1861. Other makers followed in the manufacture of these instruments, but the Mason & Hamlin Organs have always maintained their supremacy as the best in the world.

Mason & Hamlin offer, as demonstration of the unequalled excellence of their organs, the fact that at all of the great World's Exhibitions, since and including that of Paris, 1867, in competition with best makers, of all countries, they have invariably taken the highest honors. Illustrated ORGANS $22 to $1000 catalogues free.

Mason & Hamlin do not hesitate to make the extraordinary claim for their Pianos, that they are superior to all others. They recognize the high excellence achieved by other leading makers in the art of piano building, but still claim superiority. This they attribute solely to the remarkable improvement introduced by them in the year 1882, and now known as the "Mason & Hamlin Piano Stringer," by which is secured the greatest possible purity and refinement of tone, together with greatly increased capacity PIANOS those of which GRAND & UPRIGHT, for standing in tune and other important advantages.

A circular, containing testimonials from three hundred purchasers, musicians, and tuners, sent, together with descriptive catalogue, to any applicant.

The Game of Progressive Spelling.

Games that are brisk, played without cards or other material aid, and suited to groups of a dozen or more, are so constantly and urgently in demand, that I need make no apology for presenting to you an account of a game which is played, I think, in few localities, and should be more widely known. As the game has no name to my knowledge, I have ventured to christen it "Progressive Spelling." I met with it at a very pleasant little party up in Canada, at the Cardingtons', where I was visiting. You may learn it, as I did, by watching sharply while a game is being played.

Young Dr. Cardington, a tall youth with spectacles, took his stand before the party, about a dozen in all, who were arranged in a long row. This was the order in which they stood:

The Minister.
Miss Willoughby.
Willy Cardington.
The Schoolmistress.
The Professor.
Miss Cardington.
Master John Fallows.
Miss Simpson.
The Organist.
Miss Lucy.
Miss Wilson.

The Minister began by saying "S," thinking, possibly, of the word "soap." Miss Willoughby at once said "T," having in mind the word "stay." Next, young Willy Cardington snapped out "R," adding aloud, with a chuckle, the word he was thinking of—"strap."

"Thank you," said the schoolmistress, "though it is against the rules of the game to think out loud." And so she added the letter "A" The Professor did not dare add "P," because that would have finished the word, and have sent him to the foot of the class. So he said "I," thinking luckily, of "strain."

But Miss Cardington was thus placed in trouble. "S-t-r-a-i," she murmured, perplexed, and fell to thinking. Thereupon the Doctor, in front of the row, began to count deliberately. He counted ten, and Miss Cardington had to go to the foot, being unable to add a letter without finishing the word.

Master John Fallows then made all sorts of faces, while the Doctor counted out his ten, and at last cried in desperation, "L."

Miss Simpson was astonished. "S-t-r-a-i-l!" she cried in amazement. "John, I challenge your word!" "Yes, sir!" said the Doctor, "I don't believe you have any word!" And John was obliged to confess, with much giggling, that he had none, and to take his place at the foot of the class. "If John had really had a word, Miss Simpson, the challenger, would have had to go to the foot," explained the Doctor to me.

But Miss Simpson herself failed to add a letter in the allotted time, and followed John to the foot. The Organist, however, promptly said "G," having improved this little interval in thinking up the word "straight."

"H," said Miss Lucy, whose bright wits saw the word at once, and she clapped her hands as she turned to Miss Wilson, who was compelled, of course, to put on a final "T" and go to the foot, because she had finished the word.

By this time I had seen enough to warrant me in joining, and the Doctor, too, was added to the row, still assuming the duty of counting, when necessary. I took my place next to Miss Wilson, and the Doctor next to me, at the foot.

It was my turn, of course, to introduce a new word, so I started with "J." "E" quickly added the Doctor, crying at the same time to the Minister at the head of the row, "You are caught! Come down here!" "T" said the Minister innocently, and was sent to the foot, having completed a word in spite of his protestations that he was thinking of "jetsam."

"Y," began Miss Willoughby. "O," said Willy Cardington. Then the Schoolmistress, unable to think of anything but "U," went silently to the foot, after the Doctor had counted ten. The luckless Professor, thinking of "young," added the fatal "U," and went down amidst much merriment. "He should have added 'L' for 'yolk,'" said the Organist quietly.

Here there was great amusement at the discovery of the Professor and the Schoolmistress together at the foot, and, by tacit agreement, the Doctor and I entered into a conspiracy to keep them there. The interest of the game was greatly increased by the struggle of these two couples to bring each other to grief by the introduction of words which must terminate with an opponent.

It was found necessary to rule out proper nouns, slang words, and contractions, and to ordain that in case a player, when a combination of letters like "y-a-c-h" came to him, in preference to adding the obvious "t" went silently to the foot, thus forcing his neighbor to go to the foot as well, that trick should be played only twice. The third player should end the word.

It must farther be added that any one may "challenge" a word who suspects that the person who made the last addition is under a misapprehension as to the correct spelling of the word. If the word thought of is rightly spelled, the challenger goes to the foot. If the person challenged has made a mistake, he himself goes to the foot, and his place is taken by the challenger. Of course, a person at the foot, having no position to lose, may venture to challenge freely, in hope of an advance; but a person at the head must be cautious, and only challenge when he sees an impossible combination of letters coming dangerously near himself.

I found this game develop, on acquaintance, into a very bright and instructive amusement. Try it yourself, the next time the neighbors come in for an evening's fun.—Christian Union.

MR. EDITOR: I will write a little letter to the ADVOCATE, as I have never written to you. I am a little girl ten years old. I go to Sunday-school and church. Miss Mollie Norman is my teacher. I am a member of the Methodist Church. I go to the public school during the week, and have five studies. I like to go to school. Miss Nettie Benson is my teacher; she came here from Water Valley. We are having a fine new brick schoolhouse built. I was ten years old the eighth of October, and went out in the woods with fifteen of my little schoolmates and had a nice picnic. I will ask the little cousins a question: Where have we an account of the first missionary meeting in the Bible?

Your little friend,

LELIA SMITH.

WESSON, Mississippi.

MR. EDITOR: As I have not seen a letter from this part of the country, I thought I would write one. I am a great big-little girl. I will not give my age, but will let you all guess. Papa takes your valuable paper, and I like to read the great big-little children's letters. I have three brothers and four sisters. I have got one pet; that is mamma's baby, and he is a boy. He is just as sweet as can be. I am not going to school; for mamma is in such bad health I have to stay at home to help her. I will close for this time, and if I see this in print, I will write again. With many good wishes to the dear old ADVOCATE and its editor, I remain,

Yours truly,

RUTHIE E. BEASLEY.

Household.

Common Sense.

One of the best ways to keep in good health is not to think or worry too much about it. If you feel strong and well, don't imagine that some insidious disease may be secretly attacking your constitution. Eat and drink what you desire, as long as it agrees with you. Your stomach knows pretty well what it can digest.

Take all the sleep you can get, but remember that the necessary amount varies greatly for different persons. Some must sleep at least nine hours, while others thrive under six. Only don't rob yourself of what you really need. The "midnight oil" is a terribly expensive illuminant to burn, either for purposes of labor or study.

Avoid sudden changes of temperature. If you can not avoid them, you can guard against them by always wearing flannel underclothing.

Always treat a common cold with great respect. Ninety-nine times out of a hundred it will get well anyway; but the hundredth cold, if neglected, may lead to bronchitis, pneumonia, or consumption. It is best to take no such chances.

Don't trifle with patent medicines. If you are sick enough to need any medicine at all, beyond the simple household remedies familiar to all, you are sick enough to need the attendance of a physician.

A change of occupation is usually better than a total cessation of activity. By all means take as much exercise as you can, and be in the open air as much as possible. Outdoor life is the natural condition of mankind, and the more one can have of it the better. The practice must not be carried to extremes, however. There are many days when one is much better off in a warm, comfortable, well-ventilated house, than trying to take out-door exercise in a mid-winter storm, or under a July sun.

Fresh air, sunlight, good and sufficient food, pure water, outdoor exercise, temperance in all things, and a cheerful disposition, are the chief remedies in nature's pharmacopœia, and are worth more than all the drugs and medicines of the shops.—Popular Science News.

We occasionally see a young girl who is considered by her parents too delicate to attend school, and yet who is permitted indulgences at home which are far more harmful than a routine of school work, provided it is not too taxing. Under the false impression that all study is injurious to one not in vigorous health, the child is released from learning lessons, but is permitted all the "light" reading that suits her fancy. Bad as such a method would be for a boy, it is far worse for a girl, because her emotional nature is more strongly developed, and should be checked rather than stimulated. The more she is allowed to mope about the house and read novels, the more she will crave the kind of literature which excites the emotions; and these, when over-fed, create unhealthy nervous conditions. More than likely she falls into the habit of looking upon herself as an invalid, to whose whims and caprices the household must submit. If necessary, let her school tasks be lightened, but do not deprive her brain altogether of wholesome activity. Substitute exercise for story books, and, unless there be a root of real disease, such a girl will soon outgrow her delicacy.

A fact. A Baltimore parrot has been taught to say: "Take Dr. Bull's Cough Syrup."

Salvation Oil is a genuine preparation for the cure of all pain. Nothing like it. 25 cts.

The Electric World gives a partial list of patents taken out by Mr. Thomas A. Edison. It is as follows: Telegraphy, 131; electric lights, 108; distribution, 66; generation, 107; railways, 8; telephones, 32; phonograph, 21. The total number, including many not enumerated above, is 493, besides over 300 applications for patents pending.

REV. DR. BELL, Editor of the Mid-Continent, Kansas City, Mo., says in its issue of Oct. 1st, 1887:

It is to be believed that Dr. Shallenberger, of Rochester, Pa., has a sure remedy for Fever and Ague. A gentleman in our employ suffered greatly from Malaria, and tried many remedies to no purpose; when seeing this ANTIDOTE advertised tried it, was immediately relieved, and finally cured. This was two years since, and he has had no return of his trouble.

Scientific.

Intimations of Modern Science.

A crystal that has lost its apex will reproduce this part if it be placed in a solution like that of which it was formed. Scientists ascribe this repair to polarity—that unexplained, but probably electrical property by which the poles or opposite parts of molecules are endowed with opposite qualities or forces. It is concluded that repair in plants and animals is due to the same property. The units in the crystal are homogeneous. In the plants the constituent units are nearly related; so are they in the lower animals. The constituent units are also nearly related in those parts of birds and mammals—the bones, flesh, skin—which are capable of repair.

The complex units which compose cellulose and protoplasm are called chemical units. The cells which these chemical units form are called morphological units, because the process of building the organic structure into form is carried forward by them. But cells are not universal. The slime-moulds, the hydra, the sponge, have no cells; they consist of structureless blastema—amorphous protoplasm. Yet they form the most exquisite structures: there is nothing more beautiful than the sporangia of an Arcyria; or the Venus flower-basket, the fairy queen of sponges.

Where, then, does this power of reproduction and repair reside? Spencer calls it organic polarity, as distinguished from the inorganic polarity of the crystal; and studying its phenomena, he reaches this conclusion: "The chemical units combine into units immensely more complex than themselves, complex as they are;" these compound again into still more complex units which he terms physiological, and which in each organism have characters more or less distinct. The units, then, become more unstable in proportion to their complexity; their differentiation into higher forms becomes more facile because they have increased capacity for exterior correspondences.

But action and reaction are equal. Energy is indestructible; "its total quantity in the whole universe is unchangeable; it can neither be increased nor diminished," to quote the terse language of William Lant Carpenter. Whatever degree of energy an organism puts forth represents the quantity of organic matter in which that energy was latent. In losing it, the organic matter becomes useless waste. Plants and the cold-blooded animals waste little; they can easily make repairs. But in warm-blooded animals, especially in birds and mammals the waste is greatest; it is proportioned to the complex machinery by which heat and motion destroy the fabric. The human body is literally consumed every seven years; the heart is burnt up every month. Your eyes, that smiled and wept with mine when we parted eight years ago, have vanished into ether; yet the indwelling ego, guiding her busy physiological units has restored the waste so deftly that I see no change in you, now that I have come back from the ends of the world, except that my beloved is grown lovelier. The hearts that beat in our bosoms have perished and their ashes have been blown to the formless air a hundred times since then; yet we feel the old bounding pulse of joy, the old loves and memories and hopes. For these are a part of ourselves, not of this tent we dwell in for the little hour we call earthly life. These are the vesture of the soul—woven of an asbestos that no fire, however fierce, can soil or alter.—Annie C. Ketchum, in Home Journal.

An interesting electrical machine can be seen in operation on the framework of the new warship Maine, in the Brooklyn Navy Yard. It is a drill. Instead of the slow and tedious pawl and rachet hand-drill commonly used, is one that is set a-whirling by an electrical current sent through carefully insulated wires. A three-quarter inch hole in a three-quarter inch plate can be drilled in less than a minute. The chief objection is that the propelling current is deadly.—Scientific American.

According to Dr. Ozeretskofski, hysteria exists among Russian soldiers, and presents as various diversities of form as it does among women.

COHEA—DAVID A. COHEA, was born in Brandon, Miss., February 22, 1866, and died in Sharon, Miss., September 8, 1889. His parents—Dr. A. and Clara Terry Cohea—were members of the Presbyterian Church and devout Christians, who recognized the privilege, appreciated the duty, and discharged the obligation of dedicating him to God by baptism in infancy; following it up by teaching him while very young to love and fear God. At six years of age David was deprived of their godly counsel by the hand of death, and he was left an orphan. It was his good fortune, however, to have the tender watch-care of a consecrated Christian aunt until he was sixteen years of age. His aunt died, and he came to Sharon, Miss., to live with his cousin, Miss Mattie Nell, at whose home and under whose tender nursing, with that of an only sister, he passed away.

He spoke repeatedly during his illness of the nearness of death, humbly avowing his readiness and willingness to depart. He said his only regret was that he had not been a better boy, and that he would be taken away from his devoted cousin and his loving, self-sacrificing sister. His habit was to read the Bible every day, and when he was too much prostrated to read for himself he would ask others to read it for him. Notwithstanding his surroundings had been favorable, and the influences over his entire young life had been Christian, he did not make an entire surrender of his heart to God until a few months before his death. The writer received him into the church in the month of July, and placed his body away in the cemetery at Brandon, Miss., September 7, 1889. May God's promises cheer and comfort the sorrowing loved ones!

CLARENCE A. POWELL.

WHITE—On September 24, 1889, Sister HATTIE ENOCHS WHITE'S earthly career was completed and her immortal spirit took its flight from sublunary cares and woes to the region of freedom and bliss, being twenty-nine years old. She was born in Hinds county, Miss., July 21, 1860. In her childhood she was converted and joined the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, to which she was faithful until her exchange of worlds was consummated. She was married to Bro. Walter White, at her father's residence, in her native county, February 15, 1877. After wedlock she went with her husband to his home, in the neighborhood of Steen's Creek, and thence to Brandon, Miss.

Few, if any, who possessed superior traits of character than she. She was kind and affectionate, and evinced great complaisance. Quite a while before her death she was seized with a throat and bronchial trouble, which finally terminated in consumption, the most deceptive of all diseases. At times her sufferings were intense, but she endured them most patiently. The writer of this visited her a number of times during her illness, and always found her very cheerful and fully resigned to the will of God. It seemed to thrill her very soul to speak of his goodness. A few days before her departure she was moved to her father's, where she gave up physical vitality forever. In her last she gave bright evidences of her peace with God and consequent readiness to meet him. May God bless and comfort her surviving loved ones, especially her husband, precious little children and her father and mother!

ISAAC L. PEEBLES.

ROBERTS—Little SALLIE ROBERTS fell on sleep at the home of her uncle, George Q. Roberts, on the night of October 3, 1889. Sallie was one of three orphan children—two girls and a boy. Just ten years of age, remarkably bright, sweet-tempered, helpful, she was the joy of her uncle's home, a ray of light to all, a sunbeam to the preacher's heart. Always cheery, ever thoughtful and kind, she scattered gladness all about her. She suffered intensely two long weeks; then sped away to the glory-land. Heaven grows brighter as our jewels shed their lustre there. Grieve not, oh, my brother and sister, for the fair spirit of our little Sallie; only let us strive to join her within the city of God.

W. G. FORSYTH.

CRAWFORD—Died, Mrs. MARGARET WEBSTER CRAWFORD (nee Kelly), wife of the late Rev. Andrew Jackson Crawford, of the Alabama Conference. Sister Crawford was born in Georgia, November 11, 1805; was married to A. J. Crawford, November 5, 1823, by whom she had twelve children. Of this number only two survive her. Bro. Crawford died at Lindon, Marengo county, Alabama, in 1866. In 1870 or '71 Sister Crawford moved to Marion, Lauderdale county, Miss., where she died October 20, 1889, lacking a few days of being eighty-five years old.

She had been very feeble for some years, but was able to be up most of the time. She was taken sick, Thursday morning, and died the following Sunday, at 11 o'clock A. M. She spoke only a few words during her sickness; but those who knew her needed no words at the last as to her readiness to depart and be with Christ. With her own hand she wrote in her Bible this year, "I have been trying to serve God nearly seventy-three years." As a shock of corn, she was ready to be garnered. Apprehensive of the change, she said on receiving her last year's Conference money from the Alabama Conference, "This will be the last." Her troubles were many; her rest will be sweet, for she rests from her labors. She was a regular reader of the NEW ORLEANS ADVOCATE, which she greatly loved. Seventy-three years on the way: home at last. "Well done, good and faithful servant; enter into the joys of thy Lord!"

L. P. MEADOR, Pastor.

RAINS—Bro. ERASMUS M. RAINS departed this life at his residence, in Choctaw county, Miss., October 10, 1889. He was born in Green county, Ala., January 1, 1824, and moved from that State in 1836, and settled in Choctaw county, Miss. He was married to Martha A. Wood, October 19, 1848, and professed religion in 1849, joined the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, and lived a consistent member of the same until death. He raised three sons and two daughters to be grown, and they are members of the church, also sixteen grandchildren at his death. Bro Rains was an honored member of the Masonic fraternity, and lived an esteemed member of the same. He had been a sufferer for ten years, and gradually grew worse until death. He did not murmur or complain at his affliction, but bore it with Christian patience, submitting to the will of God. His family, his relatives and his neighbors mourn over his departure. He was a good husband, a good father and a good neighbor. While it is our loss, it is his gain. He is reaping his reward with the faithful. This loss will not be long. If we are faithful, we shall meet him again in the beautiful city of God, where parting is no more. It is like parting on the bank of the river of death to be reunited on the other shore. May these live faithful, die happy, and be an unbroken family in heaven.

J. C. WOODRUFF.

ANDERSON—Mrs. ADDIE, wife of James Anderson, was born July 22, 1849, and died October 19, 1889, after a long and painful illness for several months. Her sufferings were great, but she bore them with Christian fortitude. The deceased was an affectionate wife, a patient and loving mother, and a friend to all. She said she was ready to die and admonished all around her bedside to meet her in heaven. She has joined her sister at the golden gate, where happiness shall reign forever. She has left a husband and three daughters and a large number of friends to mourn their loss. What a glorious thought to die at peace with God! The friends, physicians and family did all in their power to relieve her sufferings, but Jesus wanted her in heaven. She had been here long enough. She loved her Redeemer and it was her delight to attend preaching, although she was deprived of this pleasure for several years on account of her ill health. During her illness she would pray, sing, clap her hands and praise God. The hearts of the community bleed with sympathy for her bereaved family. Oh, that every young woman around "old Macedonia Church" would follow in the footsteps of this sainted Christian!

SALLIE NEYLAND.

HUFF—ELIZA MILDRED, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Holliway Huff, died of diphtheria, October 15, 1889, aged six years. Little Eliza was a sweet, amiable girl, the household pet; her beautiful countenance and winning ways caused all to love her. We know she is sadly missed by her fond parents and affectionate sisters, but the Lord doeth all things well.

She died with her head on her mother's breast, was placed in a little casket, was laid in the silent tomb in the churchyard to sleep, and her spirit was born by the angel of death to the throne of his Master, where she received a crown of love and golden harp that she might play and praise God throughout all eternity. How sweet and happy she must be, clothed in her heavenly apparel, as she assists the choir in singing, "Worthy is the Lamb that was slain!"

REPORTS OF GOVERNMENT CHEMISTS AS TO PURITY AND WHOLESOMENESS OF DR. PRICE'S CREAM BAKING POWDER.

Dr. Price's Cream Baking Powder does not contain Alum, Ammonia or Lime, or any adulterant.—R. S. G. PATON, Ph. D., Chemist for the United States Government.

The Cream of Tartar used in Dr. Price's Cream Baking Powder is the strongest and free from all lime and other impurities. The best Baking Powder made.—Prof. PETER COLLIER, Chief Chemist for the United States Department of Agriculture, Washington, D. C.

I have several times examined baking powders in the market to determine their purity, raising power and influence on the health of those using them. I have uniformly found Dr. Price's Cream Baking Powder the best in all respects. In raising power it stands at the head. It is a pure, clean, elegant and healthful preparation. I have used "Price's" in my family for years.—Prof. R. C. KEDZIE, Late President Michigan State Board of Health.

AN Eighteen Years' Cough Cured by Peruna.

For Throat and Lung Troubles there is no better medicine than PE-RU-NA. Better proof of this than the case of Mrs. L. C. Baker, of Bradford, Tenn., could not be desired. For eighteen years a Terrible Cough had afflicted her. That it was Consumption there could be no doubt. During all that awful time she could not sleep once on her back. The poor woman got no relief until she took PERUNA. A half bottle brought her sound sleep, and six completely restored her to health. Dr. Hartman's "Ills of Life," sent free by the Pe-ru-na Medicine Co., Columbus, O., gives many other cures effected by PE-RU-NA. Sold by all druggists—$1 a bottle; 6 bottles for $5. Manufactured by THE PERUNA MED. CO., Columbus, O.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

DOMESTIC.

General W. S. Rosecrans, Register of the Treasury, in his annual report, shows that during the year 21,500 bonds, amounting to $103,891,350, were issued, and 85,149 bonds, representing $231,811,450, were cancelled. The total amount of bonds outstanding is $762,428,812, of which amount only $10,362,859, or 1.36 per cent. are held abroad.

Senator Blair says he proposes to push his educational bill through Congress this session, as he thinks the sentiment in favor of it has become stronger. He also is a warm advocate of a national election law. In fact, the Senator is in for a strong centralized, paternal government that will take charge of all our domestic concerns as well as foreign relations.

The farmers in the vicinity of Hiawatha, Kan., are burning corn for fuel, finding it cheaper than coal. Corn is sold on the farm at 20 cents per bushel while the average price of coal delivered at the farm ranges from 21 to 23 cents per bushel.

Last Saturday was whipping day at the Newcastle (Del.) jail, and Sheriff Allen applied the "cat" to three colored men and one white, all of whom had been convicted of larceny.

The forthcoming report of the Board of Visitors to the West Point Military Academy will contain a paper read by General Lew Wallace, president of the Board, in which he suggests that the system of military education in vogue at West Point be extended to the whole army of the United States. He thinks this could be done in a measure by converting every fixed post in the country into a military academy, with the company officers as instructors.

The Secretary of State of Missouri will issue a proclamation declaring forfeited the charters of about 1000 Missouri corporations which have failed to comply with the terms of the State anti-trust law. Most of the charters forfeited are those of corporations whose charters have already lapsed.

In the United States circuit court in Los Angeles counsel for the United States government filed amended bills in equity against the Southern Pacific Railroad Company in the consolidated cases against that corporation to vacate and annul the patents to lands issued by the land department to that company. The ground upon which the United States seeks to vacate the patents goes into the legality and validity of the organization of the Southern Pacific Railroad Company as a corporation.

Secretary Tracey has made arrangements by which the navy will be furnished with the Brown prismatic powder for large guns and the new smokeless powder for smaller arms.

The trustees of the proposed Episcopal cathedral in New York City have offered to give up the site chosen for the edifice for the world's fair grounds.

The Missouri, Kansas and Texas express train, north-bound for St. Louis, was held up on Prairie creek, near Perry station, I. T., and the express car robbed of about $50,000.

FOREIGN.

It is reported that sixteen of the powers will send ironclads to Rio de Janeiro to protect their subjects in Brazil.

The anti-slavery conference, in session in Brussels, has sent cable dispatches to Henry M. Stanley and Emin Pasha, asking them to telegraph an account of their experience with slaves and slave dealers in the interior of Africa. The dispatches state that if it is found necessary the conference will prolong their session in order to receive the narrative they desire.

Russia, behind a peaceful diplomatic mask, does not cease her massing of troops upon her frontiers. Within three weeks eight regiments of cavalry and six of infantry have been added to the troops stationed on the Galician and Bukovinan frontiers. The work of railway extension on the Vilna, Kovno, Warsaw and Kieff lines is being accelerated in order that the strategic system may be completed by May.

The terms of the truce between Austria and Russia, which Prince Bismarck forced upon Count Kalnoky, are already partly fulfilled on the Russian side. The Czar has stopped the pan-Slavist committee from sending agents into Bulgaria and peremptorily warned them not to foster in the meantime with Bulgaria any agitation. The Austrian side brought about the rupture of the proposed marriage of Prince Ferdinand to the Princess d'Alencon.

The members of the Coburg family, who are related to Dom Pedro, met at Vienna, to consider what action they should take in the event of the appearance of symptoms of a monarchist reaction in Brazil. Telegrams from Lisbon were read at the meeting expressing hope of the restoration of the monarchy. The family feeling is in favor of an attempt to place Dom Pedro's sailor grandson, Prince Pedro, upon the throne. It has been decided, however, to await the arrival of the exiled emperor.

All foreign residents of Apia are anxious to have the question as to who shall be ruler of Samoa settled by the three nations represented in the recent Berlin Conference. The selection of Mataafa last month was a mere temporary arrangement, and the natives look to the three powers to settle the difficulty for them. There has been no trouble among natives recently and reports sent out from there about a month ago saying there was fighting on the islands were not correct.

A letter has been received from Henry M. Stanley, dated South End, Victoria Nyanza, September 3, giving thrilling accounts of the terrible days in Starvation Camp. A number of important discoveries have been made by the explorer. Emin Pasha, whom he had been sent to relieve, is with him.

Wheeze! wheeze! wheeze! What a wretched disease Asthma is, to be sure. It is painful to the patient and painful to those who hear his labored breathings. And yet a remedy is offered that is at once cheap and effective. It is Peruna, backed by Manalin. Both sold by druggists everywhere. Only $1 a bottle.

—Times-Democrat, November 26.

For over fifty years Dr. Davis' Compound Syrup of Wild Cherry and Tar has cured coughs, colds, asthma, bronchitis, throat and lung affections. It is the regular prescription of a physician of extensive practice, who, after prescribing it for twenty years, was induced by the gratifying results to make it a proprietary medicine. Davis' Wild Cherry and Tar soon became known as the best remedy for all throat and lung troubles. Why? Because it has merit and will cure. A. C. Haffelfinger, Philadelphia, says: "I know a man suffering with his lungs who was in the hospital a year without benefit. I induced him to take Davis' Wild Cherry and Tar, and to-day he is well. I know it saved his life." Try it.

The indicted New York aldermen of 1884, known as the "boodlers," have become impatient at the delay in trying them, and on November 23 ex-Alderman Cleary went to court and demanded that his case be attended to.

The Clergy of America take kindly to Life Insurance, and have been its firmest champions. They fight for it and thoroughly believe in it. There are many splendid financiers in the Church; that they are intelligent and thoughtful for their future goes without saying. All denominations seek the protection of Life Insurance, and are careful to select the company offering the greatest security and the most advantageous terms to policy-holders.

The Episcopal Diocese, of New York, has an Insurance Fund for all of its members, and the Mutual Life, which is the largest and strongest company in the world, with over $122,000,000 assets, has been officially selected by that body to issue all the insurance to these worthy people.

A Southern Department of this Company has been opened in New Orleans under the management of Mr. T. H. Bowles, with offices in Louisiana National Bank Building.

Diseases of Women.

The way to make money is to save it. Hood's Sarsaparilla is the most economical medicine to buy, as it is the only medicine of which can truly be said, "100 doses one dollar." Do not take any other preparation if you have decided to buy Hood's Sarsaparilla.

We can never be at peace till we have performed the highest duty of all—till we have arisen and gone to our Father. —MacDonald.

It is a great misfortune for the young and middle aged to be gray. To overcome this and appear young, use Hall's Hair Renewer, a reliable panacea.

A mad dog's dread of water is not greater than some people's dread of the truth.—Pacific Methodist.

A Severe Test.

When a manufacturer, from years of observation, has so completely satisfied himself of the universal satisfaction given by his products, that he feels fully warranted in selling them under a certificate of guarantee, it is very natural to believe that such a producer has implicit confidence in the merits of his goods, and that, too, not without good reason. Such confidence is possessed by the World's Dispensary Medical Association, of Buffalo, N. Y., in Dr. Pierce's Family Medicines, and hence his "Favorite Prescription" is sold by druggists, as no other medicine for similar purposes ever was, under a positive guarantee, that it will in every case give satisfaction, or money paid for it will be refunded. It cures all those distressing and delicate ailments and weaknesses peculiar to women. It is not necessary to enumerate the long catalogue of derangements, both functional and organic, of the female system which this marvelous remedy overcomes. They are, alas! but too well known to most females who have attained womanhood, to need more than a hint to make them plain to their understanding.

A Letter from Dr. Hans Von Bulow.

The Knabe Pianos, which I did not know before, have been chosen for my present Concert tour in the United States by my Impressario and accepted by me on the recommendation of my friend, Beohstein, acquainted with their merits. Had I known these pianos as now I do, I would have chosen them by myself, as their sound and touch are more sympathetic to my ears and hands than all others of the country.

BROTHERHOOD.

BY JOSEPHINE POLLARD.

Two men upon the vessel's deck
Sat friendless and alone,
For neto eanh the other's speech
Was foreign and unknown.
One dwell afar in Eastern lands
His swarthy cheek confessed;
The other one betrayed himself
A native of the West.
And yet, in spite of alien looks,
The pilgrim strangers knew
This much of speech well known to each—
Two words—and only two.
But, oh, how little could be done
With these by tongue or pen!
For Hallelujah was one word;
The other was Amen!
And so it chanced, day after day,
They held themselves aloof,
The vessel's deck their common home,
The sky their only roof;
While still from out their lonely hearts
The self-same prayer ascends—
That God will help and comfort those
So far from home and friends.

As brightly glows the burning lamp
Within the crystal vase,
So does the light that fills the soul
Illume the Christian's face;
And, though he be of alien speech
Or dress, with sweet accord
Kinship and favor he may claim
With those who love the Lord.
And so it came about that these
In distant countries born,
Who slowly paced the vessel's deck,
All friendless and forlorn—
Anxious to break once more the seal
That lay on heart and lip,
Longing to know again the joy
Of fond companionship—
Met face to face; they looked, they saw—
No need of words to tell—
Each was a soldier of the cross,
And served his Master well.
One with his arms extended wide
Cried "Hallelujah!"—then
The other, clasping him as close,
With rapture cried, "Amen!"

IS THE COMPANY LEGAL?

It ought not to exist. It is of no "public utility and advantage;" is no institution of government; has no reason for existence, either in morality or justice; and it produces demoralization in society and corruption in politics. Act 44 of 1879 repealed the so-called charter (see Louisiana Acts of 1879). The component persons then lost their collective being, and became an unlawful combination of men, pursuing a nefarious calling by sufferance. The company ceased to be a legal entity; and the statute killing it was declared by the State Supreme Court to be constitutional and effective, and to go "so far as to withdraw the charter of a corporation up to then in existence." But unfortunately the court, by obiter dictum, and without need, recognized the company's being, its vice, and its contract right to carry on the said vice—all as if springing from Article 167—thus raising the vital question,

DID 167 CREATE OR REVIVE?

All that touches the subject is the following: "The $10,000 now provided by law to be paid by the Louisiana Lottery Company, according to the provisions of its charter, granted in the year 1868, shall belong to the Charity Hospital of New Orleans; and the charter of said company is recognized as a contract binding on the State for the period therein specified ... and all laws contrary to the provisions of this Article are hereby declared to be null and void." (The whole Article is quoted supra.) Instead of construing together Articles 172 and 167, which are close neighbors and congeners, as laws in pari materia, the court ignored 172. It also ignored the fact that 167 at best created a being, or recognized its existence, while the conduct and business of it are under 172, where the power and duty are lodged to stop them, if they injuriously affect public safety, health, or morals; it also ignored the State's decision in 172, that morals are affected; it also ignored the fact that it had no issue before it involving the creature's existence, or its alleged contract; and, finally, it ignored the most solemn rulings of the Supreme Federal Court on the subject, viz: that no Legislature can bargain away its power or discretion over health or morals; that even the people can not do it, let alone their servants; and that "the contracts which the Constitution protects (In Article I., ¶10) are those which relate to property rights, not governmental." The cases in which these rulings are—lottery cases included—are 4 Otto, 635; 7 Otto, 25,659; 11 Otto, 814. Obviously, then, even if the company show a contract, it has no Federal defense. Again, the same court says, in one of the cases, "The power of governing (including the plenary police power) is a trust committed by the people to the government, no part of which can be granted away."

Now, please keep in mind that the Supreme Federal Court holds that "the Legislature can not, by any contract, divest itself of the power to provide for these objects"—"can not bargain away health and morals. The people themselves can not do so, much less their servants." Keep in mind also that the Louisiana Supreme Court holds that Act 44 of 1879 is constitutional and operative, and that it "withdrew the charter of a corporation, up to then in existence." Now, the way is clear to see whether the latter court correctly holds that the company now legally exists.

Article 167 creates or revives nothing; its words, which I have underscored above, being only recognitive or confirmatory of a former entity, which the court itself holds was killed by said Act 44 nine months before Article 167 existed. Not a word of creation or revival appears in said Article, and there is no sign of ambiguity or doubt affording a basis or pretext for construction. Nothing can be assumed as the intent of the Constitution but what the language of it means. It must be kept in mind that the intent to create or revive a given thing, if not obvious, must be found as a fact inside of the language—i. e., in the folds, layers, or plicates of expression, so to speak, for that is precisely what implication means; and no sign or shade of such intent can be found; and, moreover, no doubt in the phraseology justifies inquiry for such hidden meaning. If the words of 167 recognize a pre-existent statutory being, they, therefore, do not create such being, and, therefore, it is not constitutional, but is statutory, and subject to repeal; and the court has decided expressly that it is repealed. And the repealing clause of 167 can not affect Act 44, because itself declares the charter statutory, and consequently repealable, and because the said Act is conformable, in every respect, to 172; moreover, Article 258 expressly saves it by continuing all laws not inconsistent with this Constitution. The entire conformity of the act with Article 172, and consistency with the rest, are obvious. The court, in assuming the charter to exist, seems to have guessed at the intent of the State; but I submit that something more is needed than a hint, or wish, or wink, to justify inferring a charter with all its concomitants; otherwise a State need but hint at what she wants, leaving it to her servants to say and do what it is; and, in the dictum of this new "political science," a constitution should be described "as a series of hints of what government is to do—a nest of ova and germs, on which judges may set, and hatch flocks of blessings, or curses, as good or bad motives may predominate."

Space will not permit further argument on this point; and the foregoing demonstration makes it unnecessary. The company's attorneys cite cases to show that these contentions are covered by "things adjudged." But in the Carcass case, where "gathered the eagles together" and fought over it, in the Louisiana Supreme Court (32 A., 719), no such questions as the company's existence and contract were involved; and the court's dicta were not only uncalled for, but were nullified by its ruling, viz: that the repealing statute was constitutional, and that it "withdrew the charter of a corporation up to then in existence." And so, in the Supreme Federal Court the pleadings are stated by the court itself to admit the incorporation of the company, and that its charter constitutes a valid contract between the State of Louisiana and the company. But the court, while virtually saying these points are settled in the pleadings, proceeds to decide them as follows: "The grant of the charter of the Louisiana State Lottery Company is in the Constitution, and the question is (the very question settled by admission), whether the Legislature acting under that Constitution can contravene it. The statement is a sufficient answer." Several other alleged res judicata cases might be here mentioned; but they all tend to show evasions of the actual judicial hearing and determining of these vital questions of status and contract. In them no chose jugee, in any proper sense, can be shown.

It seems to me now evident (1) that Article 167, by mentioning and recognizing the charter of 1868, did not save it from legislation under the trust of the police power, or prevent its business from being licensed or prohibited; and (2) that the contract referred to—if the iniquitous thing exist—involves a subject of governmental duty, and has no Federal protection (11 Otto, 814). I submit, too, that, as there was, at the time the people acted in 1879, no such corporation in existence, they acted in absolute error of fact; so that, even if the language of 167 is sufficient, it is nugatory, like the legacy of a testator to one previously dead without heirs; and that, therefore, this vicious and foreign thing is not one of the political institutions of Louisiana.

A THORN IN THE FLESH.

I just now spoke of the "vicious and foreign thing" foisted in as an institution of government. Political power to rule human beings is held as a trust from Deity; and the civil government, which the people erect, holds the same trust, delegated. Its power is to do good, not evil. The power to create institutions covers only legitimate institutions; so with corporations—they must be pro bono publico. Says Blackstone: "It has been found necessary, when it is for the advantage of the public, to constitute artificial persons." Domat says, "The design of a corporation is some good that is useful to the public." "General utility," "public benefit," etc., are phrases of others, for example: the Civil Code of Louisiana says they must be of "general utility," and the statutes specify all the subjects for which charters can be granted, and adds, "all works of public utility." (1 Bl. Com., 467; 2 Domat, 452; A. and A. Corpn., 8; 4 Wheat., 637; La. C. C., 428; La. Stat., 1847, 1868.) Such creations, then, are legitimate only when intended for and promoting public good and utility. And, in truth, according to law, getting a charter for gambling, under the cloak of education and charity, was evidently done in fraudem legis; and venality was said to have helped it through.

ON THE POLICE POWER.

I think it will be well to say a few words, not only to further show the want of right in the company to exist, but to indicate the power and duty of the States generally on the subject.

The Legislature is charged by the commonwealth with the power—coupled always with the duty—to protect and promote public safety, health, and morals. The coupled duty is unceasing, and requires a constant watching, and a foreseeing or discovery of evils, defects, and dangers, and a timely suiting of prevention to peril, remedy to wrong, and cure to ills. It is absurd that a Legislature can pretermit its duty or assign its discretion over such subject, or any portion of it, for a term of years, especially to a creature of its own creation, whose soul is furnished by the evil one, for doing "vice" and depraving the people. The incessant exercise of this very "police power"—i. e., the incessant performance of the coupled duty—is the very reason of the Legislature's existence, the very purpose of its creation, and endowment of authority.

Is not the case in hand, then, analogous to that of an educator, employed by parents, who farms out his duty to some creature of his own; so that, for a term of years, the mental, moral, and physical training of the children is done by a person unknown to, and unauthorized by, the parents? Is it not obvious that the chosen agents, charged with the safety, health, and morals of either children or subjects, have no right to shirk their duty, or assign it, and especially to an unholy creation, like that of Frankenstein, which has no moral nature or judgment, no conscience or sense of duty to man, and no final personal responsibility to God? It is easy now to appreciate the full force of the Supreme Federal Court's climax, heretofore quoted, viz: that not even "the people themselves, much less their servants," can create institutions, and let the police power be subsidized for immoral purposes; meaning simply, that it is out of the nature of things, and that we can not predicate of society (or presume any intent to do) that which promotes evil to it, or is self-corrupting and self destructive; just as we can not predicate of the Divine Being sinful conduct, or anything violating his nature, or thwarting his purposes. This is evidently the philosophy of the court's dictum, and it is to the point, and full of force.

For Church-Goers.

BY "IDENBURG."

Peter, in the pursuance of his plain duty in answer to the invitation he had received, stood in the house of Cornelius ready to preach to him and his friends, who made up a congregation, willing and anxious to be instructed in the way of life. Said Cornelius to Peter, "Now, therefore, are we all here." Late attendance upon the services in God's house tends to confusion, and is unseemly and lacking in that respect and reverence we owe to the Lord of the temple. We should honor God with a prompt attendance, seeking to be in our places before the beginning of service; and then, not to converse with others, but by meditation and silent prayer put ourselves in proper frame for the message God sends us through his servant. The being behindhand does damage, distracts the attention of those who are already in their seats and listening, and is apt to annoy the pastor, who, if he be a true man, has only words of soberness and truth to utter, and is anxious that his people should not miss a single thought over which he has prayed and labored. Peter felt, no doubt, great inspiration in the fact of his audience being all present and in waiting for the message. On that account, as is the case with all the heralds of the cross, he was enabled to do better work than if his audience had been coming in and not well-settled for fifteen or twenty minutes. His audience got more out of him because they were waiting for his word.

Waiting on the Lord, among other meanings, has this one of being in our place in good time, silent and prayerful, before service. Peter's audience was a model one, in that all were present. While that is an impossibility in a church where there is a large membership, yet that church of whose members it might truly be said—"all who can be are here"—would go very far toward realizing a successful service and a time of spiritual profit and rejoicing. Often, as is his duty, the pastor prepares himself in reference to certain members who need just that preparation, and though they might have strained a point to attend, he beholds their seats vacant, and they are the losers. Any man or woman who, without an excuse, that can be carried to the judgment, stays away from his own church service, will necessarily deteriorate spiritually. Even when in a pout or smarting under the truth as delivered from their home-pulpit, they do not stay at home, but wander into other churches, where they fancy it is milder drawn, and more of rhetorical flourish and literary finish is had; still there is loss to them in that, as in other things, "a rolling stone gathers no moss." Not only so, but their pastor and brethren have been without reason robbed of their presence, sympathy and co-operation. Said Archbishop Whately: "I remember one of my parishioners at Halesworth telling me that he thought a person ought not to go to church to be made uncomfortable. I replied that I thought so, too; but whether it should be the sermon or the man's life that should be altered, so as to avoid the discomfort, must depend on whether the doctrine was right or wrong." Blessed is the church whose members are all present and waiting in prayerful devotion before service! The pastor will thus be helped mightily, and the members will reap the greater profit thereby.

But Cornelius said, "We are all here before God." There is such a thing as sanctimoniousness in look, speech and act. That is quite a different thing from a positive, real seriousness of look, and becoming, reverent behavior in the sanctuary. Our deportment in church should be in perfect keeping with the holiness and majesty of him whom we have come to worship. There is no sanctity inherent in the wood, brick and mortar of a building; but any building, or any spot of earth, by the seaside or the slope of the mountain, or anywhere that one stands to preach Christ, and dying men and women are congregated to listen, is holy ground. Wherever and whenever we meet for the worship of God, our thoughts should be solemnized, and we should render a true and spiritual worship, coming before him with clean hands and pure hearts.

Cornelius said, "We are all here present before God to hear," etc. Genuine worshipers do not come to church to see or to be seen, but to hear. They do not attend divine service for the purpose of being entertained or gratified, but that they may hear unto their spiritual profit. They can never be delighted with that sort of preaching which consists of dexterous speech, flights of oratory, or the parade of mere human learning. The true worshipers are not to be caught with the cunning words of man's wisdom. They are in their places to hear all things that are commanded of God. They crave the solid meat of the pure and straight gospel. They are full of sympathy with the man of God in the pulpit, and with his God-given subject. There were places where even the Son of God himself could do nothing, because of the lack of sympathy and unbelief of his hearers. So, now, there are churches and congregations so stiff, cold, even icy, that the very thoughts of the preacher are chilled unto death before reaching the people. Quite powerless often are men of the finest abilities and even magnetism in the presence of an unresponsive, callous, worldly-minded audience. How can a man keep from freezing if packed in ice, and how can a preacher resist the depressing influence of a formal, fashionable audience of mere lip or surface worshipers? We may not have given the matter any thought; but it is a fact that the church and congregation have much to do with making the preacher what he is. Many a man has preached with acceptance and power, because he felt the inspiration of a sympathetic audience, who showed in their very faces their eagerness for the Word and their positive appreciation of his feeble efforts. Buds and blossoms come forth under the warmth of the summer's sun; and so warm, truly Christian hearts are sure to draw out that which is best and noblest in a preacher's soul. A preacher can infallibly tell when he has the sympathy, intelligent interest and heartfelt prayers of his congregation; and there are churches where it is a delight to preach, because the pew is so thoroughly helpful, and where, if it be in him at all, the congregation will draw from the preacher a good sermon, thoughtful and in power. Such a church and congregation are receptive and unprejudiced. With every avenue of proper approach open and ready to receive the Word, they are without prejudice, like Peter's congregation. "We are all here before God to hear all things that are commanded thee of God."

It is an exceedingly difficult matter to lodge the truth in a mind and heart encased in prejudice. A congregation tight bound in the evils and sins of a lifetime, and inherited errors and false views based upon sinful practice, is almost gospel-proof. Cornelius and his friends sitting before Peter were models in that they were totally unprejudiced and anxious to give their best attention to all that God had commanded Peter to tell them. They were not assembled for the purpose of hearing whatever might suit their peculiar tastes, and be in accord with their previously formed opinions; but to accept as from God whatever God's minister should declare unto them. It is well-nigh impossible to profit by our church going, unless we go to hear in the utmost simplicity of heart and with a thoroughly unprejudiced mind.

Notice, now, if you please, that Peter's audience had an obedient disposition. They were there not only to hear what might be said, but to be taught their duty, or what was commanded of God in regard to them. In fact, they were there to hear in order to practice what they might hear.

To day there is a great deal of church-going, and multitudes hear the Word; but certainly there is an amazing lack in the matter of putting into practice the things heard and commanded of God. Of what use is our church-going if we are not obedient unto God's commands? All faith and living is only of value in the sight of God, as it is the result of unsolute obedience unto divine authority. The heart right with God, the hearer can not without sin say what of the truth he will practice, and what not. The genuine worshiper is ever in the attitude that would make him declare: Whatever God, whom I serve, declares to be my duty, that I will do to the best of my ability. The law of Christian discipleship is laid down in the Master's words: "If any man will be my disciple, let him deny himself, and take up his cross daily and follow me." The law of Christian growth is embodied in these words: "If any man will do my will, he shall know of the doctrine," etc.

Are we hearers from Sabbath to Sabbath such as were Cornelius and his friends? Do we make it our special care to be in our place in the sanctuary in good time and before service begins, and do we give those moments to preparation, by meditation and silent prayer, for the hearing of the Word? Are we conscientious in regard to attending service, considering it our clear duty to be at our own church unless providentially hindered? Do we divest ourselves, as all God's dear children must do in order to profitable hearing, of all prejudice against preacher, church or God's Word, so that we hold ourselves open to the "entrance of that Word which giveth light?" Listening as for the life of our soul, do we hear what God has commanded his servant to say to us, for the one purpose of practicing the same and squaring ourself and our life according to it? Do we give the preaching we have from week to week an obedient hearing?

Mystery Should Keep No One from Christ.

"I can not believe what I can not understand." How often this remark is made! Moreover, those who make it seem to suppose it a sufficient reason for rejecting the claims of the gospel. There are so many incomprehensible features belonging to the system of Christian truth and life, they declare that they can not become its adherents. They are not willing to walk so much in the dark.

But when this position of theirs is examined, its weakness at once becomes evident. They are seen to be not unable, as they think, but only unwilling to believe. Nothing is plainer, or more often illustrated, than the ability to believe what is not understood. Can not a man, and a thoughtful, wise and cautious man, believe in the fact of gravitation without understanding it? Can he not believe in the existence and power of electricity? Can he not believe in the union within himself of a soul and a body which never has been, and in this world probably never will be, explained fully? These illustrations show that we not only can, but actually do, believe in many things which we do not, and, perhaps, can not, entirely comprehend. Why, then, is it reasonable, fair or safe to make an exception in the case of the Christian religion?

If one can not understand how the Holy Spirit influences the human heart, neither can he understand how his own will operates in determining the movements of his hand or foot. If he can not demonstrate how we can be free agents, in view of the fact that our Creator has ordained all the events of our lives beforehand, neither can he demonstrate—so as to convince all but unreflecting persons—whether free trade or protection is better, on the whole, as the policy of the commercial nations of the world.

Our duty is clear. We must not allow ourselves to be hindered from becoming Christians by the mysteries of Christianity, especially while we make so little account of mysteries in everything else. Enough is simple and clear. Whatever may remain hidden, we know that it is our duty to repent, believe, and obey God. Let us do these duties honestly, and light on the mysteries will be given us as fast as we may need it. "If any man willeth to do his will, he shall know of the teaching."—Congregationalist.

THE CONFEDERATE NOTE.

[The following lines were written upon the back of a Confederate note by Major S. A. Jones, subsequent to the surrender.]

Representing nothing on God's earth now,
And naught in the waters below it;
As a pledge of a nation that's dead and gone;
Keep it, dear friends, and show it;
Show it to those that will lend an ear
To the tale this paper can tell;
Of liberty born of the patriot's dream,
Of a storm-cradled nation that fell.

Too poor to possess the precious ore,
And too much a stranger to borrow,
We issue to-day our "promise to pay,"
And hope to redeem on the morrow.
Days rolled by and weeks became years,
But our coffers were empty still;
Coins were so rare that the treasury quaked,
If a dollar should drop in the till.

But the faith that was in us strong, indeed,
And our poverty well we discerned;
And these little checks represented the pay
That our suffering veterans earned:
We knew it had hardly a value in gold,
Yet as gold our soldiers received it;
It gazed in our eyes with a promise to pay,
And each patriot soldier believed it.

But our boys thought little of price or pay,
Or of bills that were overdue;
We knew it bought our bread to-day,
'Twas the best our country could do.
Keep it—it tells all our history over
From the birth of the dream to its last;
Modest and born of the angel of Hope,
Like our hope of success, it passed.

Enforce the Present Statutes.

BY REV. JOHN PIPES, LOUISIANA CONFERENCE.

Many have taken in hand to suggest work for the next General Conference. It is natural to suppose in these days of progress, after four years' experience, that the methods of church work might be improved by revising some of the old statutes, and possibly by enacting other new ones. But may it not be also well to suggest the importance for the General Conference to take some steps to cause a stricter observance of some of the statutes which are so generally neglected? There are many of these in the book, good in themselves and approved by the church, which remain there almost a dead letter. The class meeting, though it has been one of the most vital means of grace, and still is where it is observed, has fallen into that category. True, its observance is no longer a test of membership, but the statute remains in the book, specific directions are given as to the manner of observing it, and it is as much a law of the church as it is to fast and pray. But where is it observed, and by whom?

I believe in the most of our city churches the forms of class meetings are kept up. How they are attended I do not know, but think it doubtful whether the members generally are very punctual on their attendance. In the country churches the class meeting has no place as a live and practical institution. When even an attempt is made to hold them it is an exception to the rule. What can be done for the class meeting?

The Church Conference is an organ of the church, has a prominent place in the book of discipline, is expected to be observed, presiding elders are required to urge the preachers to hold them, and they always result in good where they are made practical. Perhaps there are no other means of keeping a church roll of membership so correctly and clean as the observance of the Church Conference. Yet in many places they are ignored and looked upon as useless. Some say they have tried to work them and have failed; so the Church Conference, like the class meeting, is a silent letter in most places in this region. What can be done for the Church Conference?

Pastoral visiting is made the duty of every pastor, and the obligation to observe the duty becomes more sacred as it enters into his ordination vows. There is no means of grace which adds more to the size of the congregation or does more to promote the spirituality of the church than practical pastoral visiting. Yet there are more difficulties in the way of discharging this duty than almost any other one. Many pastors find it a great cross, in their social visits to families, to broach the subject of experimental religion or to propose a religious service. Again, it is often the case that the family is scattered, following their respective lines of domestic duties, and frequently are not only indifferent to such service, but can not see the utility of it. Perhaps the greatest barrier to pastoral work is, the preacher, in order to supplement his living, must spend all his spare time in gardening, working patches or following some other industry; so he has no time left to pursue his legitimate calling. And he could not preach as well as he does if he could not work his brains while he worked his hands in getting the grass from his vegetables or while riding to his appointment. The editor may remember the following difficulty a certain pastor urged against pastoral visiting: "The morning must be given to study; in the evening the men were in their stores and on their farms, and the ladies were in deshabille." No time for visiting. The result is, the rule on pastoral visiting remains italicized.

Furthermore, there is a rule in the book of discipline, covering some three pages, giving specific directions as to uniformity in public worship. The church thought this a good rule, as it is designed and calculated to promote harmony in public worship throughout the whole church, as some form is necessary, and this is as easy to observe as any other. There seems to be no good reason why all the pastors should not adopt this, especially as this is one of the rules which they promised to keep and not mend. But, strange to say, there is no rule of the Discipline more generally unobserved than this one. Bishop Paine once said: "The Methodist Church is the only one that has a rule against preaching too long and too loud, and yet her preachers preach longer and louder than any others." He wondered if the rule had anything to do with it. To witness the numerous methods our preachers have adopted in conducting public worship, one might conclude they were trying to avoid the rule.

I know that it is much easier to urge objections and to find fault than it is to make amends and suggest improvements. Would it not be opportune to suggest to our Bishops at their next meeting to deliver an address to the whole church, renewing their former deliverances as to the importance of giving more earnest heed to the observance of the ritual and statutes of the church which have lapsed into disuse. Such an address from our chief pastors would, doubtless, have an influence upon the church which could not be obtained from any other source.

P. S.—If you were ever confined in an upper room on a cold, dark, rainy day, with nothing to do but look at your wife knitting lace, you would not blame me for scribbling. Work for the General Conference.

BY REV. T. CAMERON, NORTH MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.

The ADVOCATE, of this week, is full of interest, in that it contains so many suggestions of "work for the General Conference," some of them wise and some otherwise.

The first of these contributions, by Rev. J. A. Parker, deals largely with the presiding eldership. Dr. Ahrens also makes suggestions on the same subject. Bro. Parker proposes the enlargement of the districts and the consequent reduction of the number of presiding elders. His points do not seem to me to be well taken. His theory is purely mechanical, to the exclusion of any supposed spiritual force in the presiding eldership. "Reduce the necessity of the presiding elder's presence in the pastoral charges to a minimum;" "one or two annual visits to each pastoral charge would be sufficient." As it is now, "each one of them occupies the pulpit on Sunday," leaving "the pastor unemployed," and much more of the same sort.

Now, it seems to me that the very same arguments here used might bear with equal weight in favor of doing away with the presiding eldership. In fact, that is the trend, if not the purpose, of the argument. But is it a fact that the pastor is "unemployed" when the presiding elder "occupies the pulpit on Sunday?" True, he is not preaching; neither is anyone else in the congregation; but does the pastor get no benefit from the preaching of the presiding elder at Quarterly Conference, so as to better equip him for his work? No new thought? no new impulse? no fresh spiritual baptism? Bro. Parker says it is "for the pleasure of the pastors, who are rested and edified by this lost time." Is it time "lost" when a faithful man of God, worn with toil and the care of the churches, is pleased, edified and rested? And are presiding elders out of the field that Bro. Parker should speak of "putting another large Conference into the field" by the change proposed? It appears to me that the measure proposed would defeat the end in view, while the true remedy, if any be needed, lies in this policy: Reduce the size of the districts to such a number of pastoral charges as to enable presiding elders to give four Saturdays and Sundays a year to each one. Let him come in time to have a full account of the work from the preacher in charge before the Quarterly Conference meets, so as to enable him to get an intelligent understanding of the state of the work; preach Saturday at eleven o'clock, and at night; likewise on Sunday, holding a love-feast in addition at nine o'clock, making the Quarterly Conference an occasion, as in former days. Then let him return home on Monday, with the blessing of God and the people resting upon him, to be with his family and to rest and study in preparation for the next Conference. Even as it is now, presiding elders have very little time for studying, and as for Quarterly Conferences—well, our stewards have come to regard them as mere business meetings, at which they are to pay in so much money, and feel under no obligation to attend on Sunday if there is a Sunday in it. Trustees scarcely attend at all.

Already some of our districts are so large that it seems to me the energy and toil of some of our valuable men are being wasted, in a measure.

In a ministry of twenty-three years it does not occur to me that I have heard any of this clamor against the presiding eldership among our members, referred to by writers. I remember that a few years ago some of our preachers wrote and spoke in a way somewhat derogatory to it; but from no other source have I heard it. As to making the presiding eldership elective, as recommended by Dr. Ahrens, it is to be hoped this question will never again be raised to disturb the peace of our Israel. As well make the office of pastor elective, and go into congregationalism at once. To make the office elective would be an invasion of episcopal prerogative and destructive of Episcopal Methodist polity. No, let it remain just as it is, and let our presiding elders have appointments reasonable in size, and when they have done their work faithfully and well, as they will then be able to do it, all friction will cease.

And by all means keep laymen out of the Bishop's council—they have no more right there than the pastors have. Now, Mr. Editor, if you have anything better than this for the ADVOCATE, put this somewhere else.

Work for the General Conference.

BY "ANNANDALE."

While I fear my suggestions will not reach headquarters, and a vast number of the "elected" will not read them, yet I will, in a modest way, offer my suggestions without preamble:

1. Let all ordination of local preachers be abolished. Like the law of the Wesleyan Church in England, require of them full and regular work with the circuit or station preachers, or force them to retire from the ministry.

2. Let no traveling preacher, his widow or orphans, be entitled to any funds from the collections for the aid of superannuates, widows and orphans, unless such preacher at the time of his superannuation or death has been employed five years, consecutively, previous to his death in the itinerancy, and all division of funds be on the basis of the service of each beneficiary, as well as the need of such beneficiary.

3. But if my revolutionary suggestions must go with many others, let the General Conference exercise that sad, but final "quietus," "non-concurrence," freely, generously, and even heartlessly, upon all wild schemes, such as ordaining beardless boys and raw recruits in the itinerancy, the election of presiding elders by popular vote, and the admission of lay delegates into the cabinet.

The addition of that new territory to the Louisiana Annual Conference which J. A. Parker recommends is, to my mind, hasty action. The territory already in the Louisiana Conference can not be occupied for lack of men and money, and to take in more territory without the guarantee of new transfers is, to say the least of it, unwise action. The transfers that fly across our borders have not the powers of the eagle's eye, which can descry the smallest sparrow from far up above the mountain peak. Our birds of passage can only see cities—stations, large and inviting. The territory is hardly important enough to require great ability to secure it at the General Conference, while it is a very grave responsibility for the Louisiana Annual Conference to say to the Mississippi Conference, Give us this territory and we will support Centenary College without your help. The statement by Bro. Parker, that the Mississippi Conference has "practically abandoned Centenary College," is misleading and far from the facts, if I am correctly informed, for the Ministerial Aid Society of that Conference is now supporting young men at Centenary, and there was turned over to Centenary College a very large percentage of her present endowment notes from the bounds of the Mississippi Conference. If that is what is called "practically abandoning" an institution, we want the most thorough abandonment, and all such isolation as will give her an endowment of one hundred thousand dollars, and fifty young preachers from the Ministerial Aid Society of the Mississippi Conference. Let the Mississippi Conference draw off and take the whole responsibility of deserting this college. While this may be a very popular proposition at the annual session of the Louisiana Conference, and it may elect some delegate to General Conference, yet it will be very hazardous for Centenary College, and very premature for the Conference, as it is now barely filling the appointments it has, by putting double work on some of our hard-worked and poorly-paid itinerants.

The General Conference, it is hoped, will be made up of men much wiser and purer than the present writer, and if the above original suggestions are proper and the needed changes, they will be seen, known, and adopted without any argument or discussion upon my part. They carry upon their very announcement their axiomatic characteristics as the very things to be done. I leave them for the consideration of the General Conference without further comment. I shall sleep as quietly and peacefully as ever, assured of one or two things, that the above work for the General Conference will be done or it will not.

Colportage.

Will the editor allow me to add a few words to those so well expressed in your paper, of October 24, by Rev. E. M. Tabor? This subject does not receive sufficient attention. It might be made a strong arm of ecclesiastical power. It lacks not only zeal and energy, but it lacks system. Bro. Tabor speaks well of the necessity for colportage work among the Catholics down towards and about the coast country. I have some knowledge of this superstitious mockery of Christianity, for that is what it really is. I have been for three years, or thereabouts, preaching in the midst of it, and am satisfied that the distribution of cheap pamphlet and leaflet literature, in connection with preaching, is the way to reach these misguided people. But it requires something more than mere exhortation to colporteurs. Preparation is necessary. It is sincerely to be hoped that the General Conference of 1890 will take this matter in hand and give it a practical overhauling. The church must give encouragement to persons to engage in the business. It is believed that, with no additional expense to the Publishing House, it can furnish the literature so as to give such reasonable facilities to persons in this line as will bring many into the field. It seems strange that the General Conference has given no encouragement to this enterprise before. Colporteurs must have encouragement to bring them into the field. They must get their books—that is, certain ones for this special purpose—at cost. It would not do to say that colporteurs may buy books at cost, for that would make everybody colporteurs, which would in effect almost reduce the price of books. The arrangement must be specific and distinct. There are only a few books—in value, not in numbers; perhaps one-twentieth or one-fiftieth of those we publish—that are suitable strictly for colportage. There would be almost exclusively cheap pamphlets and leaflets of two or twenty pages or more. A few might be put up in very cheap binding. That the House be well protected and things be well understood, a special list of these publications should be made and designated on the cover as Colportage, which list may be added to by new publications and otherwise, if found expedient. These books should be sold to regular colporteurs at cost. Let the colporteur have all the profit.

Now, the question is, Can the House afford to sell these books at cost? And the answer is, Most assuredly; and make money considerably by the operation. It becomes a first-rate advertising and business agency—the very thing greatly needed. It anyone will take the pains to consider and look round a little, he will be surprised to see how few of the people generally know anything about our Publishing House. There is not a town or county in the South—not even excepting Davidson county, Tenn., or Nashville, its capital—where one-fifth or one-tenth of the people have ever bought or scarcely seen one of our publications, or hardly know there is such an establishment. The greatest thing the House needs is to be advertised away back among the non-reading masses.

Now, colportage is the best thing I know of to make our House known in the back streets and back neighborhoods. There is no little latent patronage that might in that way be waked up. Practical advertising will soon increase the business of the House fourfold.

In that case, can colporteurs be found and put to work? I think so. The traveling preachers are not going to sell books, but many will do this: Let the pastor find one or more boys or men, and in towns women or girls, who would be glad to sell basket-books and make a few dimes. The pastor could safely order the books in such cases, the operatives reporting to him daily. Many a country town could furnish a smart, trusty boy, not profitably employed, with or without a pony, who could go a few miles in the country and make several dimes before night. Others could get sufficient railroad privileges to sell on the train, or stop at the next town and return; and in many such like ways a little care and attention would put a good many subcolporteurs to work, besides those who could work on their own responsibility.

In these ways something could be done at once, and it could be increased at pleasure until it would become a great arm of our church power. But it must begin in the General Conference. It would be well, however, for Annual Conferences to call the attention of the General Conference to the subject, and that plans might be arranged beforehand. Not much is done at a General Conference that is not, at least, partially cut and dried beforehand. This subject must have attention. It is too important to be longer neglected.

PITTSBORO CIRCUIT, NORTH MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.

MR. EDITOR: This is my first year on the Pittsboro circuit. This circuit is composed of six churches, situated between Yalobusha and Schooner rivers. In Calhoun county, in a very good farming country. The people live well here, though we have some inconveniences. We are twenty-one miles from the nearest point on the railroad, and, being in the fork of two rivers, we are hemmed up considerably in winter time. We need a railroad through this section of country very much, and whenever one is built through here, we will have a fine country. This is a very pleasant circuit to travel. It is compact; the furthest church from the parsonage is about nine miles.

When I came out here last winter I found a blank parsonage—i. e., without furniture, kitchen utensils, etc., and also without water. The preachers who have lived here know something about the trouble it was to get water here at this place; but we have removed that trouble forever, we hope. We have bored a well that affords an abundant good water (thirty feet in water). And we have the parsonage pretty well supplied with household goods, such as bedsteads, chairs, tables, safe, cooking stove and many other things needed in housekeeping—in all, about seventy-five dollars' worth; and now we have a comfortable home. And this is not all. We have built a new church on the circuit, and aim to have it dedicated at our fourth Quarterly Conference. We have held protracted meetings all around, at each church, and the good Lord has blest us abundantly. Sixty accessions to the church. We are now busily engaged trying to wind up the finances of the church, and we hope to be able to make a good report at Conference.

Well, I should not fail to say something of the good people here on this circuit. They have shown their appreciation and kindness to us by bringing and sending us many things that a preacher and his family needs. May the good Lord bless them abundantly for their benevolent and good deeds!

J. M. MASSEY.

NORTH WILKINSON CIRCUIT, MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.

MR. EDITOR: As the year is just about to close, and I have not reported from North Wilkinson circuit since the early part of the year, I will send you a short sketch of my work. After being confined very close at home for the first six months of the year, waiting on a sick wife, whom the Lord saw fit to take from this to a better world, I began a series of meetings on my work which resulted in fifty-two accessions to the church, and fully as many conversions. We have succeeded in getting some of the strongest young men in the bounds of this work into the church. There have been several family altars erected; old difficulties settled. The power of the Lord was with us. On one occasion I saw a man that was not converted go out into the congregation and get several persons to the altar for prayer; and then he went himself, and was converted.

We expect to have a good report at Conference. We were assessed with $50 to help pay for a district parsonage. At the fourth Quarterly Conference we paid the presiding elder $30 in cash; expect to have the other $20 or more by Conference. I think we have as good people here as there is anywhere. They need education on duty. There is still a great work to be done here. Many thanks to Bros. Flowers, Moore, Petty, Jones and Stroud for their help. They did excellent work. To God be all the glory!

The Dead of Camp Douglas.

NO MONUMENT TO MARK THE SPOT, OR SAY HOW 'TWAS THEY FELL.

The Convention of the Woman's National Christian Temperance Union was over. "Battery D," the large auditorium in which it had been held, was stripped of the flags and banners which had told the people of Chicago that twenty nations besides our own had enlisted in the fight in defense of the home against the saloon. The temptation to join those who were going my way home was very strong, but I had heard that eight miles away, where the lake wind moaned weirdly through the leafless trees, seven thousand Confederate soldiers were quietly resting in unmarked graves until the archangel's trump, sounding the reveille of God's day, should summon them to answer the roll call in the sky. These brave men died in the prison hospital at Camp Douglas, and I could not return to the section for which they had sacrificed their lives without visiting their graves.

A cold, heavy, drizzling rain was falling, as with a large basket of white chrysanthemums, I started for Oakwood Cemetery. It was a long dreary walk, from the terminus of the road to the cemetery gate, and very unsatisfactory were the directions I received in answer to the question, where I could find the graves? "I don't know as you can find the Rebel graves at all," was the reply. "They are a great way off, and there is no path that leads to them; the graves are all sunken, and the low, wooden headboards have nearly all disappeared." He stopped, for I was weeping. I remembered how, half-starved upon the coarsest food, our soldiers in Virginia had said: "We will fast two days in the week and send the rations to the women and children," how uncomplainingly they had borne the cold and storm; burrowing in trenches half filled with water, and these I had come to see had the saddest of all sad fates, for far away from those who love them they had languished and died in the dreary prison hospital. Seven thousand! what a terrible death record. There must have been

A lack of woman's nursing,
A dearth of woman's tears.

"Are you kin to any of them?" the man asked, and I answered from my very heart: "Yes, I am kin to every one of them." And was it not true? Did we not buckle the armor on husbands, sons and brothers, and with every heart-string bursting send them from us, bidding them die if need be for the principles we advocated? The sacred dust is ours, and God forbid the time should ever come when we will cease to honor and care for it. There was

No marble slab, no grave-stone,
Their valiant deeds to tell;
No monument to mark the spot,
Or say how 'twas they fell.

So I had to search for two hours before I found, hidden away among the dead leaves, the graves I sought.

The heavens wept with me, and the lake wind wailed a miserere as I scattered the flowers, and prayed Heaven to bless the homes so desolate because these dear ones were sleeping here

——In graves so desolate and lone,
Without a name, without a stone,
Dearly they bought the peace they're won;
Let them sleep on: their work is done;
All ground is hallowed where they lie;
Their gallant deeds can never die.

As I stood among them I thought how many soldiers' widows had come to me in anguish of spirit and implored me to help them save their boys from the accursed saloon, and how pathetic it is to hear them say, "My husband gave his life for a country that heartlessly sells his boys, body and soul, to a foreign foe for a pitiful revenue." And I resolved (God helping me) to work for my Southland as I had never done before.

BOOKS.

OUR CHRISTIAN HERITAGE. By James Cardinal Gibbons, Archbishop of Baltimore. John Murphy & Company, Baltimore.

The author says he has endeavored to "compress within as small a compass as possible a variety of subjects which he considers of vital consequence to all men who take a serious view of the solemn duties and of the sublime destiny of human life." The Cardinal has succeeded well in that endeavor. He has compressed, but not so as to spoil his beautiful style. The book is in no sense polemical. It does not directly aim at vindicating the claims of the Catholic Church, and has "nothing to say against any Christian denomination that still retains faith in the divine mission of Jesus Christ." The book is a sort of treatise on Christianity in its history and relations to the world. There are thirty-five chapters, the last discussing the grave subject, "The Dangers That Threaten Our American Civilization." These dangers, the Cardinal thinks, are five: Mormonism and divorce, an imperfect and vicious system of education, the desecration of the Christian Sabbath, the gross and systematic election frauds and the unreasonable delay in carrying into effect the sentences of our criminal courts. In the chapter on "Christianity and Modern Science," this little paragraph occurs:

"Science and Religion, like Martha and Mary, are sisters, because they are daughters of the same Father. They are both ministering to the same Lord, though in a different way. Science, like Martha, is busy about material things; Religion, like Mary, is kneeling at the feet of her Lord."

SUNDAY-SCHOOL STORIES. By Edward E. Hale.

SUNDAY-SCHOOL STORIES FOR LITTLE CHILDREN. By Mrs. Lucretia P. Hale and Mrs. Bernard Whitman. (Roberts Brothers, Boston. George F. Wharton, 5 Carondelet St., New Orleans. Price, $1 each.)

These are stories based on the golden texts of the International Lessons for 1889. They are admirable in that they illustrate the teaching of the text in a manner that can be understood and appreciated by the young people. It seems to us these books would be a valuable addition to any Sunday-school library.

GREAT SENATORS. By Oliver Dyer. Robert Bonner's Sons, New York. Price, $1.

This is a charming little book, giving fresh recollections and crisp delineations of Calhoun, Benton, Clay, Webster, Houston, Jeff Davis and other distinguished statesmen of forty years ago. The author was a reporter in the United States Senate in 1848 and 1849, and he gives graphic and luminous portraits of the "giants of those days." Everybody will read this book with the keenest relish.

LESSON XI.—December 15.

SOLOMON'S FALL.

1. Kings xi, 4-13.

GOLDEN TEXT.—Wherefore let him that thinketh he standeth take heed lest he fall.—I. Cor. x, 12.

TIME.—B. C. 995.

PLACE.—Jerusalem and the Mount of Olives, on the southern summit of which Solomon is supposed to have erected the altars to the heathen gods, for which reason it was called the Mount of Offence.

4. When Solomon was old—It is evident from Solomon's age at his accession that he could not have been more than about sixty at his death. "Old" in this place must, therefore, mean about fifty or fifty-five. In the time of old age, when the flesh gained the supremacy over the spirit, they turned his heart to other gods, so that it was no longer wholly with Jehovah his God. His wives—The chief queen, no doubt, was the Egyptian princess. But she was surrounded by a vast array of inferior wives and concubines from Moab, Ammon, Edem, Phenicia, and the old Canaanite races. Such a system must have completely destroyed the character of the royal family, and brought with it the inevitable evils of the oriental seraglio. Turned away his heart That is, they succeeded in making him indifferent toward the strict and exclusive religion of Jehovah, and milder and more indulgent toward the worship of their gods.

5. Went after—This expression is common in the Pentateuch, and always signifies actual idolatry. Ashtoreth—Her form is differently represented, sometimes with a bull's or woman's head with horns (crescents); sometimes as a fish (symbol of the watery element). She was especially adored by women. Her worship, which is not exactly known, was most probably associated with indecency. Goddess of the Zidonians—Astarte was the chief female deity of all the Canaanitish tribes. Her worship was also transplanted from Tyre to Carthage, where it flourished greatly. She was the moon goddess, whom the Greeks and Romans called sometimes Aphrodite, sometimes Urania. Other peoples deified heroes, or their own passions, or nature. Their gods were numerous, fierce, vindictive, obscene. Their sacrifices, therefore, were designed to placate, to buy off wrath; and human life itself was sometimes offered—"the fruit of the body for the sin of the soul." Their rites of worship were marked by cruelty and licentiousness. Again, the sacrifices of the Israelites were divinely prescribed, classified, and adapted to various conditions They were not human inventions. Being divinely prescribed, they were efficacious. "It shall be accepted for him to make atonement for him." Further, the sacrifices of the Israelites were educational and typical. They taught the highest truths, and prefigured the one great Sacrifice. Milcom—Probably another name for Moloch. Moloch was worshiped by the Ammonites with human sacrifices, especially children. The rabbins tell us that it was made of brass and placed on a brazen throne, and that the head was that of a calf with a crown on it. The throne and the image were made hollow, and a furious fire was kindled within it. The flames penetrated into the body and limbs of the idol, and when the arms were red-hot the victim was thrown into them, and was almost immediately burned to death, while its cries were drowned by drums. The Jews were repeatedly allured to adopt this idolatry.

6. Did evil—The essence of this sin was that having permitted himself, for purposes of state and pride and ostentation, the love of many strange women, he permitted them, and possibly some of his subjects also, to worship their false gods. And by so doing he gave a direct sanction to superstition. As did David his father—David's sin was more directly against man, indirectly against God. But the sin of Solomon was against God directly.

7. Build a high place—All nations have chosen hill-tops for acts of worship, perhaps as being nearer heaven. Even Abraham built an altar to the Lord on a mountain near Bethel. For Chemosh—Chemosh was a sun-god who was worshiped as king of his people and as a god of war, and, as such, is depicted upon coins with a sword, lance, and shield in his hands, and with two torches by his side. In the hill—Mount of Olives.

8. For all his strange wives—Presently, upon the high hills overlooking the temple of the Lord at Jerusalem, arose the shrines, the altars, and the images of Chemosh, of Molech, of the Ashtoreth, and the other gods of his wives, and the heart of every holy man fainted within him to behold the son of David, himself so highly favored of God, sanctioning by his presence and active co-operation the degrading worship of the grim and bloody and abominable idols of Moab and Ammon, and of Zidon, in the very presence of that "holy and beautiful house" which in his younger days he had reared to the glory of the Lord.

9. Which had appeared unto him twice—And had warned him of his danger. The defection even of Solomon from God, through the influence of his strange wives, is one of the best justifications of God's command to Israel not only not to make marriages with the nations here mentioned, but to exterminate them, lest they should beguile Israel from God to idols.

11. Not kept my covenant and my statutes—It is well worthy of notice that in this announcement the oppression of the people by compulsory labor and taxes, or despotism, is not given as the reason of the dividing of the kingdom by Jehovah, and of limiting Solomon's dynasty to dominion over one tribe; but only the sin against Jehovah, the "going after other gods." It was just the same in Ahijah's address to Jeroboam. To thy servant—That is, "to one of thy subjects." The successor thus designated was Jeroboam, the son of an Ephraimite of the name of Nebat. His birthplace Zereda. Active and of bright intelligence, he had been employed in some subordinate part in the new fortifications of Jerusalem planned by Solomon in the beginning of his reign, and, having attracted the notice of the king, was made superintendent of the task work extracted from the northern tribes.

12. Notwithstanding—The threatening had two gracious and merciful limitations: (1) The blow should not fall until after his death; and (2) the disruption should be but partial. There should be a "remnant." David-thy father's sake—Even Rehoboam was to reap the benefit of the faithfulness of David. Because of David's goodness and of the promises made to him. We little know the benefits or the evils entailed upon us by our forefathers. We should see that we entail not evils, but benefits, upon our descendants.

13. One tribe to thy son—There is some difficulty in understanding why one tribe only is promised to Rehoboam, when he was really to receive the two tribes of Judah and Benjamin. (See xii, 21.) The truth seems to be that "little Benjamin" was looked upon as absorbed in Judah, so as not to be really a tribe in the same sense as the others. Still, in memory of the fact that the existing tribe of Judah was a double one, the prophet Ahijah tore his garment into twelve parts, and kept back two from Jeroboam. For Jerusalem's sake—In this double limitation of the threatened forfeiture, of the kingdom there is clearly manifested the goodness of God; not, however, with reference to Solomon, who had forfeited the divine mercy through his idolatry, but with regard to David and the selection of Jerusalem, as the place where his name should be revealed, which was connected with that promise, might stand immovably as an act of grace, which no sin of men could overturn. The temple was there; the Shekinah was there. Kingdoms are spared the severity of judgments in respect to the interests of religion in many ways little dreamed of by statesmen and rulers.

Missionary.

The Heathen Begging.

THE APPEAL.

The Rev. George Owen, of Pekin, says: An old man, I know not when nor where, wasted and worn by disease, and literally clothed in rags, sat by the roadside begging. But he never uttered a word; his appeal was voiceless. The thoughtless crowd passed him by unheeded; his dumb misery did not touch them. But one gentleman was so much struck by the old man's woe-begone appearance that he went up to him and said, "Are you in want? Are you begging?" "Oh, sir," said the old man, "I am sick, cold and hungry." "Then," replied the gentleman, "why don't you beg?" "Beg!" answered the old man, holding out his thin, wasted hands, and looking at his poor rag-covered body: "I am begging with a thousand tongues!" It is thus that the heathen beg at the door of the Christian Church. It is their misery that begs. They sit in darkness and in the shadow of death, morally and spiritually degraded. In the first chapter of the Epistle to the Romans Paul gives a terribly realistic picture of the condition of the heathen world in his time. But that picture is true of all time and of all heathen nations. Take China, for instance.

"Having no hope," said Paul of the Ephesians. He might have said it of the Chinese to-day. During the twenty-odd years I have lived among them I have never met a heathen man or woman who professed to have any hope beyond the grave; nor have I seen a word of hope on the tombstones of the dead. When a heathen Chinaman lies down to die he believes he is going down to hell to expiate his sins, and, having completed that expatiation, he expects to be reborn into this or some other world as an insect, a reptile, a bird, a beast, or a man.

WHAT IS THERE TO HINDER NOW?

How sorely the heathen need Christ! Their darkness, degradation and hopelessness cry aloud for help.

And these needy ones are our neighbors now. The application of steam to navigation has bridged the ocean and made the whole world near. It was when Paul was at Troas, with only the narrow neck of the Ægean between, that he heard the Macedonian cry: "Come over and help us." Nearness emphasizes most things; it brought home to Paul Europe's need. We come into close contact with all the heathen nations. Thousands of Englishmen live in India, China and Africa; our ships are found in every harbor, and our manufactures in every market. Those that need our help are both near and known, and their cry should be very audible. These heathen lands are also open to us. A century ago the great heathen nations were mostly closed; now the world is an open door. China, with her eighteen great rich provinces and teeming population, is accessible to us. India is part of our own empire, and we are free to preach Christ to her 250,000,000 souls. Madagascar awaits to be evangelized, and Africa is stretching out her hands unto God.

BUT THE CHURCH IS DEAF.

Few hear the cry of the perishing, Christless multitudes. There is a beautiful story told of Buddha, how, while quite a young man, he was so distressed by the world's misery that it haunted him in his dreams, and he would start at night in his sleep, and cry out, as if answering some one, "My world! Oh, world! I hear, I know, I come!" Would that all God's children heard that some cry of woe! I wonder how many do hear it? How many of us pity earth's sinning, dying multitudes that they haunt us in our dreams? Not many, if I may judge by the feebleness of the response. Look at China. There are only 786 Protestant missionaries, male and female, in the whole of that great empire. There are parts of China where you may travel for a month without passing a single Protestant mission station. As you journey you will pass day after day great walled cities, populous towns, almost numberless villages, and all without a man or a woman to tell them of Christ. As I pass along the streets of our English towns and villages I see churches and chapels on every hand, and the sight is pleasant to my eyes. None here need perish for lack of knowledge; all may hear of Christ and be saved. But I think of China and her masses of ten, fifteen, and twenty millions of souls, without a single missionary among them, and I weep for China.—Christian at Work.

Temperance.

It is stated that ninety-three per cent. of all children taking the temperance pledge remain faithful to their early vows.

A total of 1,374 Young Women's Christian Temperance Unions, with 31,657 regular and 6,790 honorary members, was reported to the convention.

Sometimes we think things are going slowly. They are going more rapidly than you think, my friends. There is more motion upon the people who do not stand with us than at any period of the history of the earth.—Clinton B. Fisk.

The sixteenth anniversary of the famous Ohio crusade will be celebrated by the W. C. T. U. all over the land, Dec. 23. A national mass meeting will be held at Hillsboro, Ohio, the birthplace of the movement, at which a large number of the leading workers will be present.

What the voters need to-day is not a baptism of peace, but a baptism of backbone. You take about majorities. It was a majority that crucified Christ. The true principles, the upright principles, always succeed in the end. The defeats of to-day are the victories of the morrow.—Mrs. S. M. Perkins.

Upon motion of Mrs. Mary A. Woodbridge, the following telegram was sent in behalf of the National W. C. T. U., to the Knights of Labor, in session at Atlanta, Ga.: "Brothers and sisters, stand for total abstinence; for a strike against the liquor dealers; a boycott of the saloons; a national day of rest and the ballot for women, and may God be with you."

All over the Christian world the greatest number who suffer from the curse of strong drink are those who "let it alone," yet who must pay the penalty of the sins of others, and all this because the law, for a price paid into the public treasury, licenses a favored few to promote the ruin of many; because a Christian government sells indulgences, and incentives to vice, and for pay licenses its agents to tempt its citizens to crime.—Hon. A. B. Richmond.

The membership of the W. C. T. U., instead of falling off during the last year, as has been asserted, has been actually increased by more than five thousand paying members. The treasurer's report, the final authority, shows for this year a paid membership of 143,865 as contrasted with 138,517 last year. This does not include unreported unions, members that for any reason have neglected to pay their dues, honorary members or the constantly increasing host of the Loyal Temperance Legion.

Have we a Christian civilization? We are told that in the city of New York 150,000 children are day and night, and night and day, under the demoral zing influences of the saloon; we are told by the Citizens' League of Chicago that 30,000 children go day after day into your saloons and drink and bring away drink. We have heard from the platform here of your $70,000,000 for liquor, and $25,000,000 for beer. Do you think the churches pointing heavenward, do you think great societies that meet together and send away their millions to the heathen, can atone for that?—Mrs. Clara Hoffman.

Hark! to the sound of humanity's wails! Millions of people with aches and with ails. Headaches and humors, a merciless flood, Weakness of lungs and disorders of blood. Yet there's a helper that certainly saves Thousands of people from premature graves.

The remedy is Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery. It cures coughs, relieves asthma, checks bronchitis, purifies the blood, heals sores, eruptions and unsightly pimples and is without a rival for all the ills that spring from a disordered liver. All druggists.

Don't hawk, and blow, and spit, but use Dr. Sage's Catarrh Remedy. Of druggists.

Every moral excellence in the New Testament is a feature in the portrait of Christ.—Joseph Agar Beet.

Catarrh

Is a constitutional and not a local disease, and therefore it cannot be cured by local applications. It requires a constitutional remedy like Hood's Sarsaparilla, which, working through the blood, eradicates the impurity which causes and promotes the disease, and effects a permanent cure. Thousands of people testify to the success of Hood's Sarsaparilla as a remedy for catarrh when other preparations had failed. Hood's Sarsaparilla also builds up the whole system and makes you feel renewed in health and strength.

Catarrh

"Hood's Sarsaparilla has helped me more for catarrh and impure blood than anything else I ever used." A. BALL, Syracuse, N. Y.

North Mississippi Conference.

Greeting—"Grace and peace be multiplied unto you through the knowledge of God, and of Jesus our Lord, according as his divine power hath given unto us all things that pertain unto life and godliness, through the knowledge of him that hath called us to glory and virtue."

The NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE bears greeting to you in the name of the Lord. You have come through much labor, and seen many triumphs of the truth. You have experienced many joys and some deep sorrows. You have had privations and losses and "troubles on the way." Some of your beloved comrades have fallen on the field of battle, but with their faces to the foe, and with the shout of victory on their lips. You look back over the year and sing,

> But out of all the Lord
> Hath brought it us by his love.

Under the guidance of our own beloved Bishop, you have assembled to review the work for the year past, and to map out the work for the year to come. May the review of the past be a helpful agency to greater diligence and faithfulness and success in the coming year! May the "wisdom that cometh from above" prevail in all your councils! May the "peace that passeth all understanding" pervade all your hearts! May the Lord be magnified more than ever by this session of your Conference!

Life—Wrong Views.

1. "It is a time to get all we can of this world's goods, therefore, we should use it and all its facilities to heap up money and thus have much 'goods laid up for many years.'"

The acquisition of money is one of the legitimate objects of life's labor; but it should be a subordinate one, for the reason that "a man's life consisteth not in the abundance of the things which he possesseth." To convert life into a busy, babbling bazaar, in which covetousness is the domineering spirit, is to degrade that which is noble and to prostitute to lustful ends our best gift. To turn life into a slaughter-house, where the greed of gain kills and devours everything godlike and everything human, except selfishness, is an exhibition of ferocity that must, in the end, turn in fury upon its possessor. Read James v, 1-5.

2. "Life is for sensual and sensuous gratification. It is a time to seek and enjoy all pleasures of every kind. It is a time to saunter about through the garden of worldly enjoyment and pluck its beautiful flowers and breathe its sweet odors and twine its evergreens about our brows."

This view is very attractive to young people. Pleasure waves her magic wand, and flowers and perfumes and music mingle in such beauty and sweetness and melody as to cast a spell of resistless witchery over the young mind, and they hurry away on a life-long chase after happiness. Experience proves this vision to be a mirage, and nothing more. The flowers fade and the perfumes waste and the sweet melodies change to music written in the minor key of sorrow and disappointment, as experience writes the history of probation. To convert our present life into a second paradise of perennial beauty and perpetual bloom contradicts universal consciousness, and, therefore, such a view of it must be false.

3. "Life is a time when the game for the honors of men must be played. Honor must be had; if honorably, well; if not, at any cost. Let ambition unrestrained have free rein in this race."

Of all the pitiable sights in this world is the sight of an immortal being, with capacities for unimagined development in nobleness, fired with an unhallowed ambition, which causes him to watch with the eye of a lynx the progress of the game he is playing for the honors of men. This sort of life is simply the foulest selfishness, using every facility it can lay hold on to aid in mounting the pinnacle of its unholy hopes. In the lives of most men of this sort there is a repetition and reproduction of the history of Babel, and in the end all they have is, life-work in ruins around them—a sad failure, a complete wreck.

The Sunday Rest Convention.

The call for this convention, made several weeks ago, was answered by a goodly company of ladies and gentlemen assembling in Grunewald Hall, in this city, Thursday, November 28. There was a fair representation from the country, from the city churches and from the labor organizations. The colored people were also well represented. Dr. H. M. Smith opened the convention by a statement of the purpose for which it had been called, after which Dr. J. B. Walker was elected president, and Rev. Mr. Elwang, secretary. Rev. W. F. Crafts, the field secretary of the American Sabbath Union, explained the nature and aims of the Union, and spoke in favor of organizing a Louisiana Society. A committee appointed on organization reported a Constitution which was adopted, and also named the officers and Executive Committee of what is to be known as, "The Louisiana Sunday Rest League." Officers and committee-men have been selected from every part of the State, and are men who stand out foremost in the battle for all just and wise reforms, and against all forms of social and civil wrong.

The sittings of the convention were enlivened by strong and wise and eloquent speeches made by earnest men, and all emphasizing the fact that they were in sympathy with the laboring classes in their toils, and were ready to help them secure for themselves that rest which God and nature have granted as their inalienable right. It is not the purpose of the League to force upon anyone a religious observance of the Sabbath, but to work by all fair means to secure one day in seven for every laborer and everybody else, which may be used as the opportunity for rest or worship, as each may elect. We have not the space to give even a synopsis of the speeches; but the names of the speakers will give our readers an idea of the make-up of the convention and the general direction of the thought. Rev. W. F. Crafts, secretary of the American Sabbath Union, made several addresses, which showed his familiarity with every phase of the subject, and they were listened to with profound attention. Rev. Dr. Snively, of the Episcopal Church, was very happy in his remarks, eliciting frequent applause. Mr. Porter, of the Brotherhood of Railroad Brakemen, got at the heart of the convention, when, in a simple way, he described the need of that class for a day of rest. Dr. Markham, of the Presbyterian Church, presented his remarks in a forcible style. Rev. A. E. P. Albert, editor of the Southwestern Christian Advocate, and representing the colored people, made a short address, and one much to the point. Hon. W. H. Goodale, of Baton Rouge, in his usual lucid manner, held the audience to the great theme of "Sunday Rest" for three-quarters of an hour. Dr. J. B. Walker, president of the convention, closed its sessions with a few well-timed remarks.

The following are the officers of the new organization and its declaration of principles:

President, Hon. R. B. Todd, ex-Justice of the Supreme Court, and forty-three vice-presidents, as follows: Rev. H. M. Smith, D. D.; Charles B. Stafford, Catholic laymau; Father O'Conner, Catholic priest: Rev. A. E. P. Albert, colored Methodist; Dr. A. S. Jackson, colored Baptist; Rev. Adam Jackson, colored: Rev. W. A. Snively, D. D.; Rt.-Rev. J. N. Gallcher, Bishop of Louisiana: Rev. B. W. Bussey, D. D.; Rev. B. M. Palmer, D. D.: Rev. Thomas R. Markham, D. D.; Rev. C. W. Carter, D. D.; Rev. J. B. Walker, D. D.; Breedlove Smith; W. S. Crawford, Knights of Labor—all of New Orleans; W. H. Goodale and Rev. R. F. Patterson, of Baton Rouge; H. P. Wells, of Delhi; Rev W. S. Penick and Col. Lindsey, of Shreveport; Hon. W. H. Jack, of Natchitoches; Prof. S. A. Knapp, of Lake Charles; J. B. McGehee, of Bayou Sara; Col. Ed. Hunter and Rev. Herman C. Duncan, of Alexandria; A. C. Calhoun, of Rayville; Charles Johnson, Hammond; Prof. T. S. Sligh, of Ruston; A. T. Nelson, of Homer; B. F. Carr, of Minden; Dr. Tants, of Mount Lebanon; S. D. Pease, of Ruston; Senator Hurd and Judge Smith, of Vernon parish; John Riley, of Casonville; Dr. Potts, of DeSaird; Col. H. R. Lott, of Floyd.

Recording secretary, Rev. J. Y. Atkinson, of Baton Rouge.

Corresponding secretary, Rev. John Hannon.

Treasurer, Edward Belknap, of New Orleans.

Executive Committee—R. H. Browne, chairman; Rev. W. W. Elwang, secretary, and J. G. Grant, S. S. Prentiss, Edward Booth, Thomas J. McMiller, Rev. John T. Sawyer, New Orleans; and Rev. J. A. Parker, N. G. Samuel, M. J. Williams, of Baton Rouge.

Finance Committee is Revs. John T. Sawyer, B. M. Palmer, D. D., W. A. Snively, D. D.

The report of the Committee on Resolutions was presented and also accepted. It is as follows:

First—It is the sense of this convention that protection of our citizens by law in their right to a weekly day of rest is essential to the public welfare. And we respectfully petition our Legislature to maintain and perfect all legislation requisite to that end.

Second—The Sunday Law of Louisiana has been an unquestionable blessing so far as it has been enforced. We call the attention of the authorities to the fact that neglect in enforcing the law is a public wrong, and is calculated to defeat the purpose of the Legislature in enacting the law, and we appeal to all good citizens to co-operate with the authorities in securing a better enforcement of it.

Third—We regard the Sunday saloon as a deadly menace to the morals and the happiness of our people.

On this issue we welcome the timely and patriotic action of the recent Catholic Congress, at Baltimore, denouncing the Sunday saloon and proposing "co-operation with non-Catholics in securing proper Sunday legislation." We recommend that this convention respond to that deliverance by cordially inviting the concurrence and co-operation of our Catholic fellow-citizens in support of a proper Sunday law, and that the convention elect gentlemen to represent our Catholic fellow-citizens on the Executive Committee of this State association.

Fourth—We join our fellow-citizens in other States in petioning Congress that inasmuch as it impugns the character of the nation, and is an injurious precedent, that there should be no Sunday law in our capital city nor in the District of Columbia, to take speedy measures to release our country from this grievous reproach.

Fifth—So far as the necessities of the case will allow, it appears to us that Congress and the national government owe to the citizens in their employ the same protection in their Sunday rights which is afforded by the States. Therefore we ask for those citizens engaged in the mail and military service of the country, to those under the jurisdiction of Congress, not only in the District of Columbia, but also in the territories, their rights in this matter—rights which can not be denied in a Christian land. We are glad of the reductions of Sunday toil which have been already conceded, and trust that Congress will perfect them and make them permanent.

Sixth—We are deeply in sympathy with the hardships to which the railroad employees all over the land are exposed by deprivation of the day of rest. Reckless competition and unbridled greed for wealth have subjected them to a condition of galling slavery. It is in the power of Congress to remedy this great wrong by legislation which shall subject interstate commerce to such restrictions as will compass the object, thus protecting a useful class of our citizens from becoming outcasts from society, through being shut out from the privileges of the day of rest.

Should it be necessary for this end that all interstate commerce should be suspended on Sunday, it would be far more than compensated by the gain to our citizens thereby effected and to the moral interests of the country at large.

Seventh—We hereby declare our cordial sympathy with the American Sabbath Union in their noble efforts for national Sabbath reform. We shall cordially co-operate in their work, which also belongs to us as citizens of the same common country.

Pass It Along.

In a little social group, the other day, a lady mentioned with enthusiasm the name of another who has been for many years a resident of a neighboring State, and gave details of a kind act of hospitality which had enshrined her in memory as a ministering spirit.

"And I hope," said one of the group, "that you have passed that kind act on by some impromtu, refreshing deed, or, at least, sympathetic and helpful word, to every tired, thirsty soul you ever had a chance to meet on life's thoroughfare since that day."

"Why, no!" exclaimed the beautiful woman, "I can't say I ever thought of it in that way. It would be a good idea."

How many of us think to pass on to others the courtesies and kindness which brighten our lives.—Lend a Hand Echoes.

The writer was once leaving a friend's house for a long day's journey, when the wife came to the door with a large basket of luncheon. The question was asked, "How can I get the basket back to you?" The answer was, "Pass it along; give it to the next one that leaves your home for a day's journey." At another time the writer had occasion to borrow a small sum of money to make a trip. On his return he offered his friend the borrowed sum. The answer was, "Pass it along to help some one else." The last heard of that sum of money was, it was helping to buy a home for a preacher's widow. So let us pass the good things along to others. Let us make ourselves the channels through which blessings shall coutinually flow to others. He who is wiser than all, said: "It is more blessed to give than to receive." The only way to keep the brand of selfishness off our religion is to pass along its blessings.

Sam Jones in Greenville, Miss.

This has been the best year in the history of the Mississippi Delta. More souls converted. More accessions to the churches, and better public sentiment. The good people are united for law and order. Christianity and Americanism are at the front and will control this city and country. The people of God were never better organized. Baptized with the same spirit that actuated our worthy predecessors to claim this great country for Christ, and led by the most effective preacher in America, our ministers and people have waged successful war against sin of every sort and everywhere. The prayers of our fathers are being answered. Every day brings news of new victories for the cross. November 3, Bro. Sam Jones began his second meeting in Greenville, assisted by Rev. G. R. Stuart, of Cleveland, Tenn., and Prof. E. O. Excell, of Chicago, Ill. No place can boast of a more efficient committee of arrangements. Their wisdom was displayed in the purchase and arrangement of the large new tent. All the people were ready to attend the four services a day, conducted by these men of God. They reached all the people in town and country, white and colored. Scores were converted and joined the different churches. The meeting continued eight days, including two Sundays. The interest increased at every service. Bro. Jones grows in power all the time. His meeting here was more powerful than last year. The converts of the other meeting were good workers in this one. Thank the Lord, the meeting never closed, but it coutinues to develop for good in all directions. All the ordinances of the church are better attended. Many new family altars have been erected. The "law and order" movement is capturing our growing city. The liberality of our people is greatly enlarged. The Methodist Church in Greenville will pay this year five thousand dollars to the cause of Christ, and we feel it our duty to pay more. Scores of the best people in this district were brought into church under the ministry of Rev. Joe Jones. His work abides and develops for good. Our presiding elder, Rev. R. M. Standifer, and all his preachers have done a faithful and successful year's work. We will be ready for Conference at Holly Springs, December 4. Pray for us and rejoice with us.

J. A. BOWEN.

GREENVILLE, Mississippi.

P. S.—We were delighted with Miss Belle Bennette, of Richmond, Ky. An introduction by Bro. Jones and a talk by this consecrated young lady resulted in a subscription of thirty-five hundred dollars for her "Bible Training School." All the people gave to her cause. At least twenty-three hundred dollars was paid Bro. Jones, and about six thousand dollars to erect a Y. M. C. A. building here. In all, about ten thousand dollars. Bless the Lord!

The Episcopacy.

The Holston Methodist closes a fine article on what some people are pleased to call, "The One Man Power," by this wholesome paragraph:

The episcopacy makes mistakes, but it protects much more than it oppresses. It may be deceived and consequently make an appointment which is a hardship, but, in many more cases, it prevents such hardship. What would become of those of us, who complain that we are pushed aside and ostracised, if the Bishop did not stand between us and those plotting preachers and pluming churches, which do so much mischief. Take the Bishop out of the way and let the churches and preachers go into a general bargain and contract business, and preachers who are too modest to push and elbow their way to the front would be relegated to the foot of the list and the obscure corners of the church to stay forever. If there is need of additional law to regulate the working of our itinerancy, let such law be enacted by the law-making power of the church. Meanwhile, let us be careful that we do not, by a petty criticism of unavoidable imperfections, destroy that system which has proven itself superior to all other systems known to the church for supplying the world with the gospel. It is a weakness of Methodists to fret and irritate their best servants by sticking pins in them, and to magnify the little imperfections of their polity, which, in spite of these imperfections, is the wonder and admiration of the world.

Notes.

Did you ever think that you will never again write the correct date of a letter or document without some where using the figure 9?

Dr. T. L. Cuyler, in a short article in the Evangelist, favors the revision of the Westminister Confession. He closes his article with these clinching words: "The Confession emphasizes what nobody preaches, and is almost silent in regard to the greatest truth that everybody preaches."

It will not do to make feeling the test of religious life. The Christian who feels right when he does not act right is in a bad case.—Southwestern Methodist.

We have known persons to profess feeling first-rate, spiritually, when they were not keeping plain promises, voluntarily assumed. How does that look in the light of the fifteenth Psalm?

Did you ever know one controversialist to convince and bring an antagonist over to his views? An error becomes doubly dear to one who has fought for it.—Nashville Advocate.

We have heard of two brothers—one a Presbyterian and the other a Baptist—who held a lengthy discussion on baptism, with the result that the Presbyterian turned Baptist and the Baptist turned Presbyterian.

The announcement made by the address of the recent Catholic Congress, that Catholics are ready to share with other citizens the labor of solving social and economic problems, is good. We are glad to note such a sign of progress. The same address, however, shows the old disposition to break up, if possible, the public-school system of the country.

Since Brazil has changed her government from a monarchy to a republic, some Canadians and Australians are talking about the same change in their respective governments. That is, the spirit of democracy is growing in those parts and, indeed, in all parts of the world. Maybe afterwhile we shall have one great big republic embracing the whole planet, with the capital in this country.

The Catholic World says:

Barring the vice of drunkenness and the evil of saloon-keeping, there is little to be said against the citizenship of Catholics, and these defects are odious to the great body of Catholics, and must and shall be remedied.

When said "defects" are remedied there are some places we know of that will have undergone a most wonderful transformation. We hope that this disgrace to the "only Church of Christ on earth" will soon be wiped out!

The editor of the Sunday-school Times returned the manuscript of one of his contributors, because it was not up to the usual standard of the writer's excellence, and he received this in reply:

A man who loves the paper for which he writes would rather have his article rejected on the judgment of the editor than to have it go in, if that were possible, against it. I am, therefore, not less indebted to you for what of mine you reject than for what you accept. That I feel thus, I regard as some proof of a state of grace.

We fear that is a "state of grace" not too diligently cultivated by many!

Joseph Cook's definition of a Christian, as published in Zion's Herald, is as follows:

A Christian is one who has obtained deliverance from both the love and the guilt of sin through the new birth and the atonement; one who has the faith that makes faithful; one who loves what God loves and hates what God hates; one who has gladly, affectionately and irreversibly accepted God in Christ as both Savior and Lord; one who sees God as Creator and Savior so vividly and intelligently as to be willing to accept him as ruler also; one who so beholds the Cross of Christ that it is no cross to bear the cross.

A writer, in an exchange, says this is the way to take a collection:

(1) Ask God's presence to prepare the way. (2) Fill your heart as well as your head with your cause. (3) Act with the conviction that your audience has money. (4) Make them believe that your cause is the supreme thing. You may do it by preaching and arguing, by singing or weeping or laughing, but never by scolding. (5) See that the giving is voluntary. Never try to compel a person to give. (6) Do not suggest a definite sum as their share, but present your cause. The writer says that the cause, the donor and God should be the triune that should settle every donation. There is sound wisdom in these suggestions.

This extract, from the New York Christian Advocate, we cordially commend to the consideration of our young ministers:

Sound common sense, the ability to consider things in all their relations with self-control and reference until opinions mature by a rational process into convictions, can alone give the foundation of a stable character and an enduring influence. God grant this wisdom to our brilliant young men! Personal magnetism and bright parts, as a speaker, are not enough to insure success. Conscientious, earnest piety; a stronger desire to see Christians edified and sinners converted, than the house crowded with the laughing and flattering auditors, and secular newspapers applauding and reporting, and cal a numerous—these are necessary; to these let us take heed, for in so doing we shall both save ourselves and them that hear us.

Personal and Otherwise.

A good sister closes a note on business thus: "I can not close this business note without telling you how helpful the ADVOCATE is to me every week, and how the girls enjoy it." That does us good. If we can only be helpful, that is all we ask.

A good brother sends us the program of a play to be acted for the benefit of a Methodist Church, and asks if that is Methodism. We answer, No. That is a Methodism which no true Methodist will recognize. When will all our people learn that the world and the church can not be made to coalesce?

The Virginia Conference was quite fruitful in "memorials" to the General Conference, and some of them are quite radical in the changes they propose.

Rev. E. R. Shepard, a superannuate of the Indian Mission Conference, died recently. He was transferred to that Conference from Tennessee in 1872. "He was a noble and true man."

The Missionary Committee of the Methodist Episcopal Church appropriated $566,139 to foreign missions, and $460,170 to home work. There was a spirited debate as to dividing the amount equally between the two.

One presiding elder feels secure of his next appointment. His first round of appointments has been received for publication. Nothing like being sure of a thing!

Revs. A. T. and E. B. Galloway, of the Louisiana Conference, have been transferred by Bishop Hargrove to the Little Rock Conference. We are sorry to lose these brethren; but Methodism is one, and we pray God's blessing upon them in their new field of labor.

Revs. J. A. Parker and B. F. White, of the Louisiana Conference, were in the city last week, in attendance upon the Sunday Rest Convention.

You will see that the readers of the ADVOCATE have nearly finished raising that thousand dollars to send another missionary to Japan. If you don't be quick about it, you will let another opportunity pass to do a great good with a little money!

A new sort of strike has "struck" Scotland. It is a strike of the school children. They have paraded the streets of Aberdeen and Glasgow, singing and cheering. They complain of school hours and home lessons, and insist on free schooling. What next?

Bishop Key, who was summoned from the North Texas Conference before its adjournment to see his sick wife in Georgia, passed through our city on his way back to the Texas Conference, which meets, this week, in Lagrange. His wife was with him, much improved in health.

A telegram from Dr. Black says: "Jackson subscribed $3,400 to the endowment fund of the new college, besides $1,100 previously given." Jackson, we believe, is a good deal ahead of any other town, so far.

We have been thinking it over, and have come to the conclusion that if the Methodists and Baptists were to count members as the Roman Catholics do, there would be in the United States about 16,000,000 Methodists and 13,000,000 Baptists.

The latest thing is the "consecrated umbrella." This is the umbrella that never fails to go to church on the rainy Sunday. Have you one?

Dr. W. G. Miller has been transferred from the Little Rock to the Memphis Conference, and stationed at First Church, Memphis.

It is estimated that the accessions to the different churches of Vicksburg as the result of the Sam. Jones' meeting, will reach 125, and nearly as many more connected themselves with the various churches throughout the county.

Next week we will publish a letter from Miss Saillo Phillips, our new missionary to Brazil. In a private note she says: "The ADVOCATE comes to me as a precious and cherished friend."

Bishop Key preached morning and night, last Sunday, in Carondelet Street Church to large and appreciative audiences.

The brother who sent the article on "The General Rules" failed to send us his name, and, of course, we can not publish the article until he does this.

Postal Card Reports.

—Rev. H. S. Johns writes from Washington circuit: "Our church at Bethel needing repainting, I appointed two ladies—Sisters Enochs and Bentley—to solicit the necessary money. They succeeded very finely indeed, raising about sixty dollars. The paint has been purchased, and will by the time this is printed, no doubt, be partly put on. So the beautiful little church on lower Bayou Beauf will again attract the attention of passersby by its whiteness. Other things come on equally as well."

—Rev. R. Bradley writes from Oak Ridge, Miss.: "We are closing up this year's work. There has been a general revival through the circuit. Revs. R. J. Jones, E. H. Mounger, I. W. Cooper, W. P. Jones and C. W. Crisler assisted us. The Word preached by these brethren was accompanied with great power. The spiritual condition of the circuit is good. Members received, fifty-eight; adults baptized, forty-one; infants, twenty-two. We are painting and beautifying Wesley Chapel. Our fourth quarterly meeting has been held. The Rev. J. A. Ellis, our presiding elder, was present and greatly endeared himself to this people by his preaching and careful attention to the affairs of the circuit. I believe all claims of the circuit will be met in full. This year was the best of the four years, both spiritually and financially."

—Rev. Geo. H. Jacobs writes of New Albany circuit, North Mississippi Conference, as follows: "Seeing so many accounts of the work of the Lord in different parts of the field, I thought I would say that we are not idle in these parts. Rev. D. W. Babb, of Ripley and New Albany charge, has done good work during the year. He has had the pleasure of seeing the completion of an elegant house of worship at Ripley. Besides working in his own charge, he has done some faithful and efficient work in different parts of the district, and is in favor with his people, and especially the children. Rev. O. N. Koon, of the Ripley circuit, has done good work. Had a number of conversions and accessions, and some improvement in church building. From other parts of the district we have had favorable reports. Our presiding elder, Bro. Stone, has looked after the interests of the church; preaching in power and demonstration of the Spirit. He preaches much about heaven and the comfort of our holy Christianity, by which many are strengthened and encouraged. This, the New Albany, circuit is a large work, both as to territory and membership. We have had some degree of success. A number of conversions and accessions. We have completed two new houses of worship—one, a very elegant house, costing eleven or twelve hundred dollars; the other, a good house, costing seven hundred and seventy-five dollars. When I came to this work, two years ago, there was but one ceiled church, and now all are ceiled but one; one ceiled this year. Also there was no parsonage; now we have a parsonage, and when paid for will add much to the circuit. Finances are somewhat behind, especially with preacher in charge and presiding elder. We leave for Conference next Monday. There are many good and true people in this circuit, and he who comes to New Albany circuit may feel assured he will find friends. May the Lord bless the people and sanctify what has been done this year to their spiritual development and his glory!"

Catholic Congress on Saloons and the Sunday Law.

From the address, as issued by this Congress, we quote this about the saloons and the Sunday Law:

There are many Christian issues in which Catholics could come together with non-Catholics and shape civil legislation for the public weal. In spite of rebuff and injustice, and overlooking zealotry, we should seek alliance with non-Catholics for proper Sunday observance. Without going over to the Judaic Sabbath we can bring the masses over to the moderation of the Christian Sunday.

To effect this we must set our faces sternly against the sale of intoxicating beverages on Sunday. The corrupting influence of saloons in politics, the crime and pauperism resulting from excessive drinking, require legislative restriction, which we can aid in procuring by joining our influence with that of the other enemies of intemperance.

Let us resolve that drunkenness shall be made odious, and give practical encouragement and support to Catholic temperance societies.

We favor the passage and enforcement of laws rigidly closing saloons on Sunday and forbidding the sale of liquors to minors and to intoxicated persons.

How Will This Do?

Insert the following on page 124 of Discipline:

"Ans. 4. As commerce in intoxicating drink is one of the greatest hindrances to the successful preaching of the gospel, let all our people use all lawful means in their power for its prohibition."

And this?

On page 121, continue Answer 2, as follows: "which places them in the church on probation." And on same page, take out "of the church," in fifth line from bottom, and insert in lieu thereof: "in full connection." I suggest for consideration. R. A.

We have corresponded with the officials of the various railroads over which you will travel in coming to Conference in regard to reduction of rates, and from the most of them have received favorable replies; others to be heard from. The general plan is this: Purchase a regular ticket at full fare coming, and procure from the agent a certificate of that fact. This certificate, signed by the secretary of our Conference, and presented to the agent here, will entitle you to a return ticket at one cent per mile. You will need a certificate, signed as above stated, for each road over which you travel coming to and going from Conference. W. H. LEWIS.

Advertising is evidently becoming an art, and its development may yet lead to the establishment of special courses of training in business colleges. Already nearly $25,000,000 are spent annually in the United States in newspaper advertising, every dollar of which if used judiciously has returned a large interest to the investor. One feature of the advertisements of to-day forms an agreeable contrast to the advertisements of a generation ago. It is the evident sincerity in which they are written and the consequently greater confidence the searcher after information can repose in them. That the advertising page is becoming one of the most interesting pages of the daily newspaper is one of the striking proofs of the growth of intelligence and refinement among the people.—Philadelphia Press.

"Like Magic,"

THE effect produced by Ayer's Cherry Pectoral. Colds, Coughs, Croup, and Sore Throat are, in most cases, immediately relieved by the use of this wonderful remedy. It strengthens the vocal organs, allays irritation, and prevents the inroads of Consumption; in every stage of that dread disease, Ayer's Cherry Pectoral relieves coughing and Induces refreshing rest.

"I have used Ayer's Cherry Pectoral in my family for thirty years and have always found it the best remedy for croup, to which complaint my children have been subject."—Capt. U. Carley, Brooklyn, N. Y.

"From an experience of over thirty years in the sale of proprietary medicines, I feel justified in recommending Ayer's Cherry Pectoral. One of the best recommendations of the Pectoral is the enduring quality of its popularity, it being more salable now than it was twenty-five years ago, when its great success was considered marvelous."—R. S. Drake, M. D., Beliot, Kans.

"My little sister, four years of age, was so ill from bronchitis that we had almost given up hope of her recovery. Our family physician, a skilful man and of large experience, pronounced it useless to give her any more medicine; saying that he had done all it was possible to do, and we must prepare for the worst. As a last resort, we determined to try Ayer's Cherry Pectoral, and I can truly say, with the most happy results. After taking a few doses she seemed to breathe easier, and, within a week, was out of danger. We continued giving the Pectoral until satisfied she was entirely well. This has given me unbounded faith in the preparation, and I recommend it confidently to my customers."—C. O. Lepper, Druggist, Fort Wayne, Ind.

Our Young People.

A WEEK OF WORK.

BY EMILIE POULSSON.

1.

On Monday we will wash our clothes
And hang them up to dry.
On Tuesday we will iron them
And mend each hole we spy.

2.

On Wednesday we will make our bread,
And sometimes, too, a cake.
On Thursday we'll receive our friends
And time for reading take.

3.

On Friday we will sweep and dust
As nicely as we can.
On Saturday, for Sunday's rest,
We'll cook and work and plan.

4.

On Sunday we will learn at church
How to be good:—and then
On Monday cheerfully begin
Our week of work again.

Eva Jones.

My Dear Children: I have an interesting story to tell you of a little girl not four years of age. Her name was Eva Jones, and she lived in Crystal Springs, Miss. She was serious and thoughtful, amiable in her disposition, and winning in her ways. At Sunday-school she had learned to sing some of the popular songs of the day, and often quoted and applied passages from them. I will give you a few instances to show you what was of daily occurrence in her home.

Once her father seemed troubled in mind about some business matter. Eva said, rather to herself than to her father, "Our God is able to deliver thee." At another time she seemed serious, and they asked her how she felt, fearing that she was sick. Eva looked up, and said, "I am happy on the way." One Sunday morning, while the church bell was ringing, Eva said: "My church bell says, 'Bring them in, bring them in, bring them in from the fields of sin.'" No wonder that her parents came to speak of her as their little preacher. Eva would never retire at night without saying her prayers. And often when the time for family worship in the home came she would get the Bible and bring it to her father that he might have prayers. When Eva was dying, she wanted them to sing. They asked her what they must sing. She said, "Sing, 'At the Cross.'" This was only a few minutes before she died.

She was born August 30, 1886, and died November 3, 1889. She was the daughter of Dr. R. E. and Mrs. Lizzie Jones. This remarkable sprightliness and religious turn of mind was the result of the careful training of her mother and father. Had she lived she would, no doubt, have developed into one of the finest Christian characters this country has produced. But God saw that it was best for Eva to develop in a better world, where her pure spirit will never come in contact with sin, and so the beautiful and sweet little girl has gone to him who said, "Suffer little children to come unto me, and forbid them not, for of such is the kingdom of Heaven."

CRYSTAL SPRINGS, Mississippi.

MR. EDITOR: As none of the children have ever written to you from this place, I will try and write you a short letter. I like to read the letters from the little cousins. I go to Sunday-school every Sunday and to day-school in the week. Prof. Harris is our teacher, and we have nearly 100 scholars in school. We have a good Sunday-school. Bro. J. L. P. Sheppard is our preacher; we like him very much. I will answer Carrie Hunt's question. Ham was the father of Caanan. At what place was it that two men were hid in a well and a covering put over them, and ground corn on the covering?

JOHN W. DAWSON.

LISBON, Louisiana.

MR. EDITOR: I have never seen a letter from this part of the country; so I decided to write to your paper. We do not take it; but I have a good kind auntie who subscribes for it and sends it to us every week to read; and we do enjoy it so much, especially the children's corner. I am a little girl, eleven years old. I live in the country, ten miles from Greensburg, and twelve miles from Clinton, La. My papa is a farmer. I have four brothers and one sister—all younger than me, except one brother. We have school about three months in the year. I am just learning to write.

MARY E. CALLIHAN.

DARLINGTON, Louisiana.

MR. EDITOR: I am a little boy nearly six years old. I have never been to school, but am learning to spell at home. My mamma says I may go to school next summer. I have two little brothers. Bro. Bancroft is our preacher; I love him dearly. I will tell you why. I was very sick with croup, and he prayed to God that I might get well. I think God heard his prayer; I got well soon. When I learn to write, you may hear from me again. My auntie is writing this letter for me.

HOW THEY MAKE THIMBLES.—The way thimbles are made in England and in this country is simple enough. Dies of the different sizes are used, into which the metal, whether gold, silver or steel, is pressed. The hole punching, finishing, polishing and tempering are done afterward. Celluloid and rubber are moulded. The best thimbles are made in France, where the process is more thorough. Strange as it may seem, the French consider durability in their gold thimbles as the first requisite. The first step in the making of a Paris gold thimble is the cutting into a disk of the desired size a thin piece of sheet iron. This is brought to a red-heat, placed over a graduated hole in an iron bench, and hammered down into it with a punch. This hole is the form of the thimble. The iron takes its shape and is removed from the hole. The little indentations to keep the needle from slipping are made in it, and all the other finishing strokes of the perfect thimble put on it. The iron is then made into steel by a process peculiar to the French thimble-maker, and is tempered, polished and brought to a deep blue color. A thin sheet of gold is then pressed into the interior of the thimble and fastened there by a mandril. Gold leaf is attached to the outside by great pressure, the edges of the leaf being fitted in and held by small grooves at the base of the thimble. The article is then ready for use. The gold will last for years. The steel never wears out and the gold can be readily replaced at any time. Nowhere else in the world are gold thimbles made in that way. —Chambers' Journal.

DOING THINGS WELL.—The young person nowadays who knows how to do one thing thoroughly well, who is determined to do it better, if possible, than anybody else, is more likely to succeed than one who knows more, but excels in nothing. Mr. Vanderbilt pays his cook a salary of ten thousand dollars a year because he understands the art of cooking to perfection. As Mr. Burdette says, in his funny way, "If Monsieur Sauceagravi could cook tolerably well, and shoot a little, and speak three languages tolerably well, and keep books fairly, and could telegraph a little"—and so on with a dozen other professions—"he wouldn't get ten thousand a year for it." Emerson says that concentration is the secret of success, and Benjamin Franklin, when a poor boy, proved the truth of the remark. He went to London, and applied for work at a printing office. The foreman, doubting whether an American could do anything well, asked Franklin if he really could set type. For reply the boy stepped to one of the cases and set up the forty-sixth verse in the first chapter of John's Gospel. It was done so quickly and so accurately, and conveyed such a delicate reproof, that he obtained employment at once and was rapidly promoted.—Ex.

Household.

Country Difficulties.

In the country housewives have difficulties of which city matrons have not the slightest conception. The latter, with well appointed markets within telephone call, can, in case of an emergency, instantly supply any lack of provision which may unexpectedly arise. Not so with the country housekeeper. If she fall short of supplies by reason of unexpected company the deficit is not so promptly made good. Possibly the butcher comes on his round twice a week, and a modicum of such meats as he has to offer is secured. It is selected with a view to lasting until his next arrival, but some unexpected demand arises and the larder is emptied. Poultry to fall back upon? Alas, poultry is not more common with some country housekeepers than roast beef and venison. Salted meats are generally kept in the cellar to some extent, and upon these the country housewife must and does rely. And eggs and bacon fill the gap to the disgust of all the family, who say plainly that "bacon and eggs are all well enough at the roadside inn, but not the sort of refreshment they care for at home."

If the supply of groceries gives out on other days than those appointed for going to the "store," ten to one the horse and carriage are needed or engaged to go in another direction, so that the housekeeper is at her wits' end for a makeshift. No matter if the preserving kettle is on the stove, and extra sugar imperative. There must be some disarrangement somewhere, and she usually bears the brunt of all such inopportune occasions by readjusting her work to suit them.

In the country the weather is apt to be a great disturber of harmonious routine. The disturbance of the weekly wash, the postponing of the picnic, the drenched clothing if caught far from shelter in some sudden shower, all count for far more in the country than in the city, where a rainy day makes but slight difference in the running of the establishment, for although servants may not like a rainy Monday, those above stairs are rarely disturbed by it.

Dress-making difficulties beset the country woman at every turn. The village dressmaker may have learned to cut a garment fairly well on a now well antiquated pattern, but she rarely or never has the adaptability to seize and modify the prevailing mode. So that the country woman is constantly made to feel how very far her centre is from that of civilization as she regards it, certainly how very far she is from being stylishly appareled. In the case of a woman who has more or less intimate connection with the great world, such as author or artist, the country life offers many drawbacks. The inaccessibility of books and society, the close dependence upon the mails, and the enforced companionship with people of different tastes, all combine to make country life a peculiarly hard one in her case. Nature hath charms, and in her quiet, restful peace there are to be found great compensations, yet she presents some difficulties to overcome to those who fly from the cities to seek rest in her solitude.—Christian at Work.

NINE POINTS OF GOOD HUSBANDRY.—1. When your wife has been busy at home all day, do not immediately on your return spy out some omission, but glance around and recognize her efforts by some such expression as, "This is comfort." 2. Do not refuse to pay her some pleasant little courtesies. 3. Chat with her at table, and do not be always buried in your newspaper. 4. Do not take the children's part against her, but let them realize that you and she are one in your joint care of them. 5. Take her into your confidence, and do not try to bear burdens alone. 6. If she is in trouble, do not pooh-pooh, but let her feel your sympathy. 7. Do not criticise her before strangers. 8. Be always polite to her. 9. Go sometimes for a walk or shopping with her.—Lutheran Observer.

Scientific.

Every-Day Science.

If, on the one hand, we have frequent cause for astonishment at the rapidity with which modern life is being transformed under the influence of scientific invention and discovery, we are, on the other, sometimes compelled to wonder at the extreme slowness with which certain useful and entirely practicable reforms, plainly indicated by acknowledged scientific principles, are adopted by the public. There is a law in these matters which has perhaps never been very clearly formulated, but which it would certainly be desirable to understand. The telephone makes its way everywhere without pause or check, and the same is true of electric lighting and traction; while scientific cookery, though its general principles may be said to be fully established, lags painfully behind. That the latter is a matter of the utmost importance, economically and hygienically considered, needs no laborious demonstration; yet how to interest the public in it seems to be a most difficult problem. People who go wild over the New Jerusalem of "Looking Backward," listen with cold indifference when it is explained to them how they can introduce here and now a most important amelioration in their own lives by economizing at once their worldly substance and the wear and tear of their physical organs. The fact that the reform in question would be particularly beneficial to the so-called "working classes" fails to commend it to those who want a revolution or nothing. It is probably the case that men in general are more interested in spending than in saving, just as they have more admiration to bestow on a great warrior than on a great philanthropist; and that, consequently, inventions that represent and call for expenditure are more attractive than those which simply promote economy. More than one modern "improvement," we doubt not, has been adopted by many, as much from the pleasure of spending and—perhaps a more potent consideration still—of appearing to be able to spend the money required to procure it, as from a sense of its utility.—Popular Science Monthly.

BRICK MAY SUPERSEDE WOOD.—There seems to be a very grave question agitating the minds of architects and builders regarding the building material of the future. The timber is being used faster than it can possibly grow; stone occurs only in isolated places, and rarely, if ever, contingent to places where it is needed in great quantities for building purposes, but material for making brick is in abundance everywhere. As a matter of fact, in spite of the modern use of "fireproof" materials in building, nothing will withstand the onslaught of extensive fires equal to good brick. It has been shown that, notwithstanding the fact that iron, steel, granite, etc., presents a much greater crushing strength than our ordinary brick, during great fires, given two buildings in every way equal, so far as exposure to the heat is concerned, one constructed entirely of brick, the other with iron parts, pillars and window cases, the former will stand until completely gutted by the fire before the walls will totter and fall, in many instances not falling at all, even after the interior is completely burned away, while the latter will often fall before the flames have reached it, the iron bending, twisting and otherwise distorting sufficiently to cause the superincumbent mass to fall for lack of support. There are signs which point to the probability of brick being more largely used than ever in the near future.

At a recent meeting of the Academy of Sciences of Paris, Prince Albert, of Monaco, drew attention to the fact that vessels running short of provisions might obtain food sufficient to support life indefinitely if provided with apparatus for collecting the surface swimming forms.

We can deny ourselves, but we can not cleanse ourselves. The sheep can go astray alone, but can never return to the fold without the assistance of the shepherd.—W. Secker.

COSTLEY—WILLIAM A. COSTLEY was born in Alleghany county, New York, May 8, 1816, and died at his residence, near Martinsville, Copiah county, Miss., on September 12, 1889, having passed his seventy-third year by four months and four days. In early manhood he left his native State and removed to Illinois, from whence, after a short stay, he came to Copiah county, Miss. Here he was engaged for some time in teaching, and many who are now middle-aged men and women in our midst were his pupils and recollect him as a teacher with affection and gratitude. In 1849 he went to California, being one of the earliest gold seekers. He was among the few at that day who were successful, and after accumulating a handsome property he returned to this county in 1852, and in October, 1852, was happily married to Miss Catherine Johnson, with whom he lived in great contentment the remainder of his days. Ten children were born of this union—six of whom died in infancy. Two sons and two daughters, with his devoted consort, survive him.

Mr. Costley was a consistent member of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, for many years, regular in his attendance on the ministrations of the gospel, and possessed of many Christian virtues—the chief of which was charity to the poor. He was in a marked degree a straightforward business man, punctual to all his engagements, and desirous that all with whom he had transactions should be as scrupulous towards him. In his private life, if any characteristic was more pronounced in him, it was his extreme honesty, that rare quality which is seldom observed of late years. Like many other truly pious men, he had his seasons of doubt as to his future prospects, at which times he was accustomed to wrestle in prayer frequently for hours; but in his last protracted illness his evidence of acceptance through faith was very clear, for among his last utterances, while holding the New Testament in his hands, were these words, "I would not take anything for the hope I have of heaven." We can rejoice to believe that from his exemplary life and deathbed confession of faith in Christ Jesus, that he is among the saved in paradise, surrounded by the little ones who have gone before, and waiting for his devoted wife and other children to join him on the other shore.

FRIEND.

SISTRUNK—GEORGE W. SISTRUNK was born in Pike county, Miss., March 22, 1827, and died at his residence, near Crystal Springs, Miss., June 7, 1889. In early manhood he joined the Methodist Church, and remained an acceptable member thereof until he was transferred to the church triumphant.

He was a quiet, unassuming, faithful man, and this faithfulness entered into all the relations of life. All who knew him felt that they could safely confide in him. His tender compassion and sympathy made him many friends. He had a clear, practical mind, keen perception, and good judgment; hence he was safe in counsel and successful in business. With all he was timid and sensitive in his nature, modest and retiring in his disposition, and hence most loved and appreciated by those who knew him best. Gentle, thoughtful and good at home, he was indispensable to the happiness of his family. His health had been precarious for four years, and at times his family felt great anxiety about him; yet after all his death was sudden and unexpected. For some days he had been suffering, but was apparently convalescent. About ten o'clock at night he waked his wife, saying, "I am gone," and breathed his last in about one hour after, leaving a wife and two children bereaved. May the God of all comfort sustain them!

W. B. LEWIS.

COMBS—Bro. W. H. COMBS was born in Georgia, November 8, 1836, and died at his home, near Sylvarena, November 5, 1889, aged fifty-two years, eleven months and twenty-seven days. Bro. Combs has been an acceptable and worthy member of the Baptist Church for twenty-three years. His wife and married daughter are members of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South.

I have been with Bro. Combs and found him a liberal Christian gentleman. He was buried with Masonic orders at Sylvarena, Miss., November 6, 1889. He leaves a widow with seven children, the eldest of whom is married and the mother of one child. We condole with the friends and loved ones of Bro. Combs, and admonish them to be faithful that that they may meet him in Heaven.

JAGERS—WAYNE, youngest child of Rev. J. E. and E. J. Jagers, died on September 19, 1889. He was two years and five days old. He suffered much and long, but the angel Death came to his release. His father died in June last. The mother with two sweet little children are lonely and sad; yet all is well with the departed loved ones. God bless our daughter and her sweet little ones, and preserve them blameless unto eternal life!

E. A. LEWIS.

LEWIS—Mrs. SUSAN LEWIS, daughter of Joseph and Hannah Warren, was born in Marion county, Miss., 1832; was married in 1853, to Mr. Iddo Lewis, and died of hematuria, October 22, 1889.

For more than thirty years she had been a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South. Though never demonstrative in her profession, she was an humble believer on and follower of Jesus. Her health was already impaired, and, knowing the fatal character of the disease with which she was stricken, she expressed a fear that she could not stand it; but assured her loved ones that whatever might be the result she would not be lost. Her house was ever the welcome home of the ministers of the gospel, and all who have enjoyed her Christian hospitality will grieve with us to know they shall see her face no more upon earth.

One who knew her long and well, writes this to her memory: "I never knew a truer, purer, more consistent or unswerving woman." She died in the faith, and now rests in the paradise of God.

She leaves behind her a husband, four children and many friends to mourn her loss—not as those who have no hope, but with the comforting assurance if they prove faithful, they shall one day see her face again, and dwell with her where death and parting are no more.

J. W. TUCKER, P. C.

SIRMAN—HANNAH SIRMAN died October 28, 1889, aged seventy-seven years. She was a mother in Israel. She was afflicted with blindness, but never complained—happy all the time. I called to see her often; never a cloud between her and her Savior; regarded all for her good. She joined the Methodist Church while young. She was the mother of ten children, and raised seven—all are members of the church. She was a woman of prayer and prayed in public all her life. She heard her grandchildren pray in public—young men and girls. She has a son fifty-six years old, and he told me that the earliest recollection of his life was his mother praying in the congregations. I was her pastor the last two years of her life. I am free to say that I have met very few such women. She was pure, and loved her children, pastor, her church, her God. She would shout the praises of God, and was the friend of everyone. Her house was a home for the preacher. Like a ripe shock, she was ready to be carried by the angels into the garner above.

W. HOOVER.

DUN—D. F. DUN was born January 1, 1849, and departed this life, September 4, 1889. He moved to Morehouse parish, La., about three years ago, and located near Oak Ridge. He was a man of great energy, and, no doubt, hastened his death by overwork. He was sick for several months, but was confined to his bed for only a few weeks before his death.

I visited him during his last sickness, and talked and prayed with him. He seemed to enjoy my visits. He expressed himself as having faith in Christ, and a determination to lead a religious life should God spare him. I was not at home when he died, but learn, through his wife, that he was perfectly resigned to the will of God. In his dying moments he said: "I am ready to depart and be with Jesus, where there will be no more trouble, no more suffering, and where death can not come." He leaves a wife, relatives and friends to mourn his death. May they all meet him in the home above!

T. S. R.

COLTON—REUBEN COLTON was born in East Canada, in the year 1815, and died at his home, in Montgomery county, Miss., on November 4, 1889. Bro. Colton professed religion in 1830, and joined the Methodist Church; came South in 1840; married in 1845. He was a zealous member of the church, and observed all of its institutions and ordinances until ten years ago, when disease prevented his attendance. He was a good class leader, Sunday-school superintendent and steward. His home was the resting-place for the preachers; the church papers were there. As the hand of affliction pressed hard, he said it would soon be over, and then he would have eternal life. He died in peace and has gone before to await the arrival of his wife and several children that are following on. His works still live in the minds and hearts of all that knew him as a monument erected by the labors of the life of a good Christian man.

R. C. CALLAWAY.

WILLIS—On September 10, 1889, death ruthlessly invaded the home of Mr. A. Willis and wife, near Monroe, La., and smote their lovely daughter, Miss LILLA C. WILLIS, aged twenty-two years, eleven months and seventeen days.

Miss Lilla made a public profession of Christianity by uniting with the church in Monroe, on April 1, 1883, under the ministry of Rev. B. F. White, and continued that membership to the day of her death, at which time, we have reason to hope, she was transferred to new membership in the church triumphant. She leaves an affectionate father and mother, several sisters and one brother sadly bereaved, though with great expectations of meeting her again.

THOS. J. UPTON.

McQUILLER—On August 27, 1889, the home of our brother, G. W. McQuiller, was draped in mourning, caused by the angel of death calling for their little son, R. A. McQUILLER. Ruby was only spared to gladden the hearts of his parents one year and seven months. He waits for loved ones, on the eternal shore. Our Lord says, "Of such is the kingdom of heaven."

C. T. MUNHOLLAND.

Who is Dr. A. T. Shallenberger? He is a prominent physician of Rochester, Penna, who graduated at Jefferson Medical College in 1846. In 1847 he announced the theory that all Malarial disease was caused by living germs in the blood and demonstrated its correctness by his Antidote for Malaria, which cured when all else failed. The microscope now reveals these germs, and Physicians accept the fact. If you have Malaria in your system, get the medicine and be well.

Timothy Davis, postmaster at Pattersonville La., says: "Some years ago, while living in Algiers, I contracted a cough that everyone thought would cause my death. I was unable to sleep, had night-sweats, and soon became too weak to work. I had several doctors and tried many remedies, but with no improvement. An old friend hearing of my condition recommended Dr. Davis' Compound Syrup of Wild Cherry and Tar. It had cured him of a serious lung trouble, and he had great confidence in Davis' Wild Cherry and Tar. Before three bottles had been taken I was up and about, a well man. It saved my life. I always recommend it for consumption, asthma, bronchitis, any lung or throat trouble." One dollar bottles hold two and a half times as much as a 50c. bottle.

Conservative papers in Berlin continue to predict a break up of the Brazilian republic and discuss the probability of the German colonies declaring an independent southern republic and appealing for the protection of the fatherland. The sentiment of the Evahgelical council now sitting there, of which many members are missionaries in Brazil, favors separation.

The Clergy of America take kindly to Life Insurance, and have been its firmest champions. They fight for it and thoroughly believe in it. There are many splendid financiers in the Church; that they are intelligent and thoughtful for their future goes without saying. All denominations seek the protection of Life Insurance, and are careful to select the company offering the greatest security and the most advantageous terms to policyholders.

The Episcopal Diocese, of New York, has an Insurance Fund for all of its members, and the Mutual Life, which is the largest and strongest company in the world, with over $122,000,000 assets, has been officially selected by that body to issue all the insurance to these worthy people.

A Southern Department of this Company has been opened in New Orleans, under the management of Mr. T. H. Bowles, with offices in Louisiana National Bank Building.

Home Enterprise. Encourage It.

It is said that the ladies of the household of the Lord-Lieutenant of Ireland some time since resolved to wear nothing not produced at home. This was for the purpose of encouraging and stimulating the development of home industry, and was a noble exhibition of a proper esprit de corps. Something of this spirit should be manifested by our people. It is peculiarly opportune at the present time when there seems to be a stir in the air, business and financial—a sort of incipient harbinger of a return to prosperity. If an article produced at home is equal or superior to a similar one made abroad, purchase it. This will give employment to the idle, will develop our resources, restore confidence, life and activity to the community, will invite here the wave of prosperity that has reached some of our neighbors and have a powerful tendency to place New Orleans in the position which of right she should occupy as the queen and mistress of the great Valley, South.

Among the institutions which should receive special recognition at this time is the manufacture of yeast powders, an article demanded by every household, carried on by Mrs. P. M. Goodwyn, widow of the late Rev. P. M. Goodwyn, of this city, known as the Eureka Yeast Powders. This article. It is admitted on all sides, by those who have tried it, has no superior, if an equal, here or elsewhere. It is known to be absolutely pure, with no injurious ingredient in it whatever—a consideration, when the bread question is under review, of the first importance. This lady, left a widow with several small children years ago, and at the time deeply involved in debt, has struggled as few have done against what seemed to be the fiat of destiny and triumphed. She has paid off all her debts, perfected her process of manufacture and produces an article recommended by every person who uses it. Patronize her. She richly deserves it. What she has accomplished has been done quietly, noiselessly, without capital, with no puffing, no heralding, but simply through her own indomitable energy and the intrinsic merit of her goods. Remember the Eureka Yeast Powders!

Most men call fretting a minor fault—a foible and not a vice. But there is no vice, except it be drunkenness, which can so utterly destroy the peace and happiness of a home.—Helen Hunt.

A New Departure

from all the old established conditions on which proprietary medicines are sold, has been made by the World's Dispensary Medical Association, of Buffalo, N. Y., who having for many years observed the thousands of marvelous cures of liver, blood and lung diseases effected by Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery, now feel warranted in selling this wonderful medicine (as they are doing through druggists) under a positive guarantee that it will give satisfaction in every case, or money paid for it will be promptly refunded. "Golden Medical Discovery" cures all humors or impurities of the blood, from whatever cause arising, as eruptions, blotches, pimples, old sores and scrofulous affections. It is equally efficacious in bilious disorders, indigestion or dyspepsia and chronic catarrh. In the head, bronchial, throat and lung affections, accompanied by lingering coughs.

The best form of responsive service is that which consists in putting a good sermon into good practice.—Christian Register.

We call the attention of our readers to the card of the well-known, reliable and deservedly popular clothier, Wm. H. Pierson, which appears in another column of this paper. He is one of the old friends and patrons of the ADVOCATE, his advertisement having appeared in it almost annually for the past twenty years. During this time he has been liberally dealt with by the Methodists of this part of the country, who, doubtless, will not fail to continue their dealings with this honest and fashionable clothing establishment.

The only reliable vegetable substitute for calomel, which acts on the liver, blood, kidneys and stomach, and best anti-bilious purgative is Maguire's Cundurango. Endorsed by Archbishop Ryan, of Philadelphia; Rev. McAnally, of St. Louis, and a host of prominent people.

TRUTH AND CALMNESS.

All truth is calm,
Refuge and rock and tower,
The more of truth the more of calm,
Its calmness is its power.

Calmness is truth,
And truth is calmness still:
Truth lifts its forehead to the storm,
Like some eternal hill.

In Memoriam.

HON. JEFFERSON DAVIS.

SERMON BY BISHOP J. C. KEENER.

Preached in Felicity Street Church, Sunday, December 8, 1889.)

"When the morning was now come, Jesus stood on the shore; but the disciples knew not that it was Jesus."—John xxi. 4.

The taking this passage of Scripture as a subject for our morning meditation is in harmony, doubtless, with the thought which at this moment prevails in your minds, and with the shadows of a recent event that throw an additional solemnity upon this holy Sabbath. When our friends leave us, the firmness of the step with which they pass out of this life into the other leads us to realize, if possible, perhaps more fully that they, too, stand with him on the shining shore. Of course, it is the presence of Christ there, as once here, that is the one great assuring miracle and revelation to all the sons of men of their immortality. This period between the resurrection and ascension of Christ was one of alternations—of revelation and of invisibility. He seemed alternately to be on this side and on that side; on the earth and on the unseen shore. He appeared to his friends again and again in a very intelligent and natural way, revealing to them the great thoughts which he had endeavored to lodge in their minds with additional force; showing to them the ground of their acceptance with God; revealing his wounds; telling them to see and feel for themselves, that they might know Christ crucified as the one great thought before the resurrection and after the resurrection—the one great thought in earth and in heaven upon which sinners especially depend, and upon which they have to depend for justification and final vindication before the Lord. He revealed to them life eternal, in nothing blinding, but in everything very natural; and, after all, this is what we wanted to know. We did not wish to see him descend in a convoy of angels, or yet transfigured, as on the Mount, lest we should begin to suspect that, after all, he was not man. We did wish to see him as he came out of the tomb, to hear his voice, to see if he had the old address and manner with his friends; we did wish to see the power of his hand, to see if he still retained the extraordinary and miraculous power by which he demonstrated to man the invisible and divine world. He had a body full of spirit and a spirit that tabernacled in a body having the full power of expression. He was separated from his disciples, as a matter of course, because he was now in a new existence. They were here, but he was now clothed with eternal life essentially, and it is in this especial aspect that he is presented as standing on the shore. It was such a revelation of Christ as carried them back to their old haunts: he was in the open air, no longer in the shadow of the sepulchre; the atmosphere was fresh as it is by the seaside in the early morning; he was where he had first called them, among their haunts, not especially his, but he was by a water upon which he had illustrated his divinity by walking upon it at midnight, and had stilled its wildest and most raging agitation. He had still further, by a second miracle, and in an instant, shown his omnipresence by the boats being immediately at the further shore. He had afterward searched it for a single coin, and had found it in the mouth of a fish, a coin which paid the exact amount of a tax demanded of Peter. He had thereby shown his omnipotence, omnipresence and omniscience; he had shown there was not a dead spot in the world; that his light shone into the depths of the sea and amid its myriad inhabitants; there was not a spot in the dark realms of the ocean which he did not know. He established the infinite care and personal providence of the Almighty. He is here again, with a company that he was familiar with and that knew him well; there can be no mistaking him; he stands there with his best friends—not very many of them, it is true, but those who had been enlightened by years of intercourse with him—and if you and I have enjoyed intercourse with him through prayer and the Scriptures, what must it have been in the disciples to be with him, and see his figure, hear his voice and understand all the sublimity of his speech and soul, who uttered not a word that was not a permanent contribution to truth. What a teacher! And they, too, had been selected, perhaps, for their art of hearing, remembering, and apprehending, for their ingenuousness, that they might be the witnesses to us of what the Master said and of what he did. He is now on the firm line dividing the natural from the supernatural; the shore that divides the eternal from the temporal. Of eternity and time he is himself the horizon. He is not now merely what he was, but is clad with infinite resources; has come out of the grave, has on him the cloak of the empire of heaven and earth; he is competent to undertake anything, is infinite in his power, for God, he said, has given to me "all power in heaven and in earth." He has come out of the tomb full of life, and that life is life everlasting; a life that can stand all the attritions of the ages, a life that could pass through all the chambers of the grave, lie in the midst of all its obstruction, and go fully and fairly into all the depths of the empire of death. Yet having passed all this, he is here with all his naturalness of manner, with all the infinite power which trickled from his finger ends, with all the persuasive power of an infinite and everlasting love.

His one thought is the care of his people; his address to them is distinctly individual and personal. He gathers up the breadth, length and grandeur of his empire, and hands it over to the care of these seven disciples, suspended only on their responsibility and personal regard for him. He stands upon this marvelous edge; he is there as the Infinite One, the Lord of lords, King of kings, the Counselor, with all his majesty supreme. He is there a single instant, and every conquest and all power is there in the sublime elements of his person; and yet he is there as the host of his people. It is a very marvelous thing to look at the naturalness of his person. There is nothing blinding, nothing that draws away your mind from mortality. What you wanted to see was his mortality, and here it is in its rustic and plain expression. They saw him as they were accustomed to do, heard him as they were accustomed to hear him, and yet, just here by him were the evidences of his empire over the sea—the fish; his empire over the harvests of the world—the bread; his empire over the elements of the universe—the fire. That miracle, seeming in itself so simple, and within the apprehension of anyone, was that by which the Son of God evidenced himself. He was there ready for the entertainment and sacred feasting of his own people. The whole procedure, his coming down to the shore as he used to do, telling them they were fishing on the wrong side of the boat, their success, the resurrection, miracle of so large a take of fish, and his waiting for them to be counted—the whole evidenced that it was Christ. He does not address Peter by his official name, but carries him back to his early manhood, to his relationship with his Savior so long cultivated. After he has handed to him the fish, and handed it to everyone in the same way, and when they were all standing in silence, he begins the conversation at a point no one would ever have thought of. Breathing out of that wonderful atmosphere of death and eternity, he asks him, "Simon, son of Jonas, do you love me?" Had he talked to him about the events of the coming Judgment Day, the tremendous thunders of that hour when the very world itself will be thrown down; if he had spoken of the reign of darkness, it would have seemed to be proper and appropriate to the occasion; but he simply asks him, "Do you love me?" I have no doubt that it took Peter by surprise. "Thou knowest that I love thee," was his answer. After a little pause, during which we may imagine something else as transpiring, he said again, "Lovest thou me?" and Peter answers, "Why, yes, Lord, you know that I love you." By and by again he asks, "Do you love me?" Now, here he ascends to the sublime statement of the greatest solution of power; not the power of miracles, not the power of wisdom, not the power of justice; no, indeed, he ascends far above all these, and that is, to the infinite majesty and expression and essence of the Godhead, which is love. "Do you love me?" Not with the love merely of a husband for his wife; not with the love of a father for his son, though that might be reasonable, as he used it in the parable of the prodigal son; not with the love that exists between a brother and a sister; not the love of the poor one whom God has given us to take care of and provide for; not that, Christian as it may be, and excellent as it is; not the love of a neighbor merely, according even to the divine prescription; but a spiritual, exalted and regenerated love; a love raised by supernatural grace and power to the apprehension of the Spirit of God itself; a love which surpasses all other love, and which is so beautifully characterized in the Bible as a divine charity, a personal and infinite regard for one. Love must always exist between persons, and between one and one. Now, Peter begins to apprehend, to see what is meant. He suspected many things, and not infrequently made mistakes. He thought, perhaps: There is an emphasis given because of what I once said. Oh, how the Savior rises above this! When Peter wept at the look of Christ, that wound up all that event. The Savior does not bring up again and again your faults and repentance and tears. He is far above that. He now comes into that divine fellowship existing between God and man by reason of the divine essence of a divine life—that wonderful love of Christ which has the most terrible sanction attached to it: "If any man love not the Lord Jesus Christ, let him be Anathema." A love that has in its very nature an indication of the presence of God in the heart, "the faith that works by love." The very first apprehension that our faith takes hold of Christ is that experience, the sentiment of love—"We love him because he first loved us." The whole drift of the action of faith is love towards God and man; that wonderful breathing that comes of God to the human spirit, that love of God which is sweeter than anything else, than anything we shall ever experience here, or, perhaps, even in heaven itself. I do not suppose an angel, or an archangel, ever has any more delightful experience of God than that of a soul when it receives it first drop of the divine regard; this wonderful favor of love, which constitutes the life of the sinner, and which supplies in the life of man that filial regard for God which Jesus Christ had for his Father.

"Do you love me? You are an honest, benevolent man, perhaps you are a repentant man; you have your conscience and it is a sensitive one; you have many pious works to your credit; you have great regard for the house of God, great respect for the ministry of God; you have got through with all speculations; you have dismissed all unbelief from you as you would the vileness of the poison of the cobra di capella; you think you have no enmity to God; but, after all, "Do you love him?" That is the point. Do you wake up in the middle of the night hardly able to contain yourself? A good friend of mine, Chancellor Garland, said he would not give anything for a religion which did not sometimes cause a man to feel that he scarcely knew whether he was in the body or out of the body. "Do you love me?" That is the one inquiry that comes home to every heart in this room this morning, and every soul in the church of God.

"Oh, love divine! how sweet thou art!
When shall I find my willing heart,
All taken up by thee!"

"Do you love me?" While it is a very wonderful question, it has a most fearful sanction. Repentance has its own divine sanction—"Except ye repent, ye shall all likewise perish." Then belief has its sanction also—"He that believeth not shall be damned." And then again, conversion has its own sanction from God—"Except a man be born again, he can not enter into the kingdom of God." But this has its tremendous sanction, one which includes the whole—"If any man love not the Lord Jesus Christ, let him be Anathema Maranatha." It is not love simply as a great thought, an essence, an element of being, an affection. No, no, it is not that; it is something much higher than that. It is that which belongs to the personal existence of the Son of God. If you are a truly converted man, you have been introduced to the Son of God. Religion is the art of knowing that Jesus Christ died for you; this you feel in your heart, and there springs up such a gratitude and regard for him as no language can tell. There is a benevolence of temper and charity pervading the whole world, but the divine charity was reserved for the sending of the Son of God into the world, the sending him into the world to die, and not merely that, but to die for you personally. That is the divine charity, without which everything else is nothing. You may give your body to be burned in the extent of your heroism, fighting for the cause of Christ; you may give all your substance in your generosity for the poor; you may have vast stores of knowledge and experience, and an eloquence, if possible, beyond that of Christ himself, an eloquence that entrances like the notes of angels; but, if you have not this one element of life, it amounts to nothing.

But there is another very precious point about this, and that is, the Savior himself enjoyed the love of his people. It is not merely the unrolling of a sublime standard—no, no, but that which comes down to every-day personal experience. All love has in it an element of jealousy; all strong love has this element, I say, and the Lord is a jealous God, and he says, "Do you love me more than you love anyone else?" Not, Do you love me more than these people love me? For Peter could not know how much the other disciples loved him. Not, Do you love me more than you love the material things of life represented by the miracle just wrought, but he says, "Do you love me more than you love anyone else?" How often is that question passed between those united in the most sacred relations of life! I met an old itinerant preacher, a few days ago, at a Conference which I was holding, a very grand character and a very rugged one, and he was telling me about his wife, who was also very old and shared with him all the vicissitudes of the itineracy. He was taking home some apples to her, and he said to me: "I frequently ask my wife, 'Do you love me?' 'Why,' says she, 'of course I do, Mr. B. You know I do; why do you ask me that question so often?' And I reply to her 'Because I love to hear you say it.'" And so it is with our Savior—he loves to hear his people say it. He does not want us to love him occasionally—no, no, he does not want that, but he wants deep, abiding and constant love, as a divine harmony regulating the entire soul and the high fellowship existing between God and man. And finally, and only then, was he willing to commit to these disciples—that is, to their personal, warm, actual heavenly regard—the charge of his church, showing that he wished and intended that this supreme quality should be always kept in view as the grand test of life. You may not have peace always, you may not have joy always, your patience may give way, you may be tempted to think, "Well, I have lost what I once had;" but, if you have love for Christ in your heart, if you love him, do not be disturbed, do not let the enemy get ahead of you. If you have a warm love for him who gave himself to die for you, and if you realize that by the grace of God he tasted death for you, and if you have in your heart a devoted love to him, do not be alarmed or uneasy.

Oh! what a beautiful statement is this of immortal life; it was in the early morning, he was standing on the shore, on the sand where he had often stood; yet though just out of the sepulchre he was full of eternal life. They did not know him, just as you and I find so much difficulty in realizing in the Son of God that he is the fullness of the Godhead, bodily. He came down from heaven and abode with men for thirty-three years, and though he made the world, the world knew him not. He it was that said "Let there be light;" and he is the true light. There he stands, in all his naturalness. What did he come here for? What did he go away for? To wrap around himself our love for him and bear it away that our hearts might follow after him. He came here to win us; he came to remove from us all disabilities of a sinful, lost and wrecked estate; he came from his Father to vindicate the justice of God that afterwards, on certain conditions with which you can comply—namely, faith in his sufferings—we might be accepted; he came to vindicate our race before the law. He has laid down his life; has given more than the law demanded. He took on him the form of man that he might go into the avenues of death, that he might bring divinity and infinite power face to face with the enemy. He has thus provided for you everything that you can require. He has come into the world to show you the infinite regard of God for you, and to give you the boon of eternal life; he not only illustrates the life eternal, but he is your great shelter when the Judge comes to inspect, when you are accused of your sinful career. If you be sincere and conscious of your sin, and come into the court of God, and say, "I am not able to pay the debt I owe, but Jesus has paid it," he will forgive you even as he forgave the two bankrupt debtors because they acknowledged the debt. So he has provided eternal love in all the strength of justifying power. You are not forgiven out of hand, because God is compassionate; that would never do. It would upset everything; you know it and feel it, and want more than that. It is not like a governor pardoning a man, because the law says he can do it. You know sin exists and must be restrained, and God looks upon no sinner with allowance, and somebody must pay the last cent of his debt. If you do not pay it, somebody else must; the steadiness of heaven, the very pillars of it depend on its holiness. As by the old Roman law, and as in China to-day, some one else may take your place for punishment; and although you go free, your sin does not go free. It is because his Son died and suffered for you that you go free. He has bought you in the marketplace of death; bought you with his blood—"You are not your own, you are bought with a price"—redeemed by his wonderful death and intercession for you. Now, it is this which removes all difficulty out of the way of eternal life. You have not your intellect only to satisfy, but your conscience; you may arrange and compose matters with your mind, but after you have got through, all that amounts to nothing; conscience with its accusations, its supremacy and its lashings, with its tremendous thoughts—your conscience, which nothing will pacify, compose or relieve but faith in the blood of Christ. Nothing has ever been discovered in the world that relieves a distressed conscience but the fact that Jesus died. I say, therefore, in this work of the Son of God, as he appeals to you in his life, he indicates that he loves you. Why, you ought to be happy, hopeful; to spring up in delightful expectation when you consider that, despite all your sins, he loves you. All a sinner has to do, is to believe; all things are ready. The Lord will not wait on you to perform any wonderful acts, as some of you may have been imagining. "God was in Christ reconciling the world to himself" long before you were born. God had provided a way of escape for you through his Son. He loved you and he still calls on you, and asks you to come out of your depth of sorrow and affliction, out of your strange and unnatural alienation. He still seeks your love. If you can not love such a character as Christ, with his infinite love for you, then are you the most unfortunate of beings. "Do you love me?" That is the note of immortality, and this is the grand hope of humanity.

I said in the beginning that I took this passage because it is precious to contemplate, and because all are thinking of the death of our very distinguished citizen, Mr. Jefferson Davis, who now lies in his coffin at the Municipal Hall. It is very delightful for us to realize in our thoughts that his hopes are our hopes, and our hopes his; that he was not merely a public character. A man may be a great man, a magistrate; he may be the center of all thought and all eyes; he may be a great figure in history, and yet when he comes to die he dies like anyone else; he is only a man; has to have the same repentance, the same assurance, the same faith in Christ; goes out the same way, passes through the same passages the Savior passed through; is in all points a man; and as Christ was the Son of man, it is essentially all that can be said; he is a man saved by Christ.

I had the good fortune to know Mr. Jefferson Davis personally, and I appreciated his acquaintance very highly. I admired him intellectually. It was delightful to talk with him; his memory was so tenacious and exact, his bearing so admirable. As far as I could see, he was a man of great ingenuousness of character, of lofty, honorable purpose, a man that might well be taken for an example to young men. There was one other man, a Virginian, whose character, spiritually and intellectually, in the light of his achievements, in the light of his gentleness and genuineness, is a model for almost all men. I might venture to say that Mr. Davis had great integrity of character, and he will ever be an object of admiration to all who fairly understand him, just as our revered Gen. Lee now is. Mr. Davis fills the minds and hearts of all the South this day. He lies in his coffin mourned, admired and loved. He was, by the providence of God, called to act a great part in the history of our nation. Events, over which he had no control, placed him at the head of the Confederate government, which, as its Executive, he guided until it yielded to the force of arms. His integrity of purpose and character during all the conduct of the Civil War left him at its close without a blemish. His imprisonment for two years, and the untold humiliations which accompanied it, did not affect the nobility of his mind. He suffered without losing for a moment the grace of his bearing toward foes or friends. He came out of it, and out of the war, a better man and a maturer Christian. Since then he has demeaned himself with all propriety and dignity in his intercourse with the world. He has illustrated and vindicated the soundness of his judgment during the terrible events of war, and that by his firmness and wisdom and observances of the maxims of civilized warfare, the South emerged from its smoke and blood, self-respected, respected by the world, and respected by those with whom it contended.

It was my good fortune to know Mr. Davis intimately. He attended our Seashore Camp Meetings and ate at my tent. He was a sincere believer in the Christian religion. He listened to the Word and to the experiences of the people of God with reverent interest. I remember on one occasion he met me as I came out of the pulpit, and thanked me heartily for the sermon, and said, "You have removed difficulties from my mind in respect to the atonement, and I shall be a better man for it from this time to the end of my life." The sermon was on the sinner who anointed the feet of Jesus, and of the debtors: "When they had nothing to pay, he frankly forgave them both." He did not say this merely as a compliment to the preacher. I was somewhat surprised at the earnestness with which he spoke, and his manner made a great impression on me.

My last conversation with him was on the cars, on the subject of experimental religion, and the wonderful expressions of Napoleon the Great in respect to the Savior and the gospel. I doubt not that he went straight home to the bosom of his Father and ours; that he is now with his Lord on the shining shore in the light of the eternal morning.

SUMMER IN THE HEART.

(An Old Wife's Love Story.)

Dearest heart, the leaves are falling,
And the summer burneth low;
And I hear the crickets calling
When the twilight falleth slow.
Once again the flowers are dying,
And the glad birds southward start;
But no cause have we for sighing,
For 'tis summer in the heart;
Yes, 'tis summer in the heart;
Bird and blossom may depart,
Dim our love will hold forever—
Glad, sweet summer in the heart.

Winter snows will soon be lying
Cold and white on vale and hill;
Winter winds will soon be sighing
Through the branches, bare and chill;
But the icy breezes never
To our lives their chill impart,
For our love doth keep forever
Glorious summer in the heart,
Yes, 'tis summer in the heart;
Snows may fall and tear-drops start,
But the soul that loves forever
Keepeth summer in the heart.

Hand in hand, through life together,
You and I have journeyed long;
Laughing at the stormy weather,
Meeting trouble with a song.
Sorrows, storms have beat around us—
Oft we've felt the tear-drops start;
But, whenever trouble found us,
Love kept summer in the heart;
Yes, 'twas summer in the heart;
Griefs might come and joys depart,
But the sunshine lingered with us—
Love made summer in the heart.

So at last, when death shall find us,
Watching, waiting, hand in hand,
With life's summer-time behind us,
And our feet upon the strand—
Though upon the shores we sever,
Drifting for awhile apart—
We shall meet, and feel forever
Endless summer in the heart.
There'll be summer in the heart,
Though awhile we drift apart,
Love will bring, beyond the shadows,
Endless summer in the heart.

Antiquity and Sanctity of the Holy Sabbath.

The holy Sabbath comes down to us venerable with age, though the blush of fair creation's morn sits upon its brow. The ancient record of creation in Genesis, when "God rested from his works," when he "blessed the seventh day, and sanctified it," is the foundation on which the Christian Sabbath plants itself. Older than the first promise made in Eden, and radiant with its hope; older than Cain and Abel, Noah and Abraham, and all the seers and prophets, and to them the traditional repository of true worship; older than Moses and all the ceremonial law and observances of his dispensation, reiterated to him on flaming Sinai, and by him down through the ages: "Remember the Sabbath day to keep it holy."

Its very venerableness commands our highest respect; its divine origin, our profoundest reverence and most hearty observance. This, the oldest institution of the church, conserves all ordinances and doctrines, and is most fittingly set apart by its Author for universal recognition. "Remember," don't forget to observe it as "holy." The prohibition of labor is to all: children, "servants, cattle and the stranger in thy gates." Man must have the "rest" it brings. This "rest" recognizes worship. This worship implies being brought face to face with God. It is more and better than a law; it is an inestimable mercy, a boon. In the waste howling wilderness the Lord "gave on the sixth day the bread for two," and hence the beautiful "manna like coriander seed" fell as hoar-frost for the multitudes of Israel. Two days' rations. The "two burnt offerings" required on the Sabbath day stamped it as the day of days for calling the people together to dedicate themselves afresh, soul and body, to the Lord's service. It was a "holy convocation."

As a symbol it prefigured the rest of the promised land, the rest of the soul in Christ, the rest of the church in the new dispensation, the rest of the victorious church in heaven. "It is a sign between me and the children of Israel forever." (See Ezekial xxxi, 17). A "sign," standing memorial that he who had delivered and sanctified them was the true God, and its observance on their part as a ratification and recognition of the same. "And the Lord spake unto Moses, saying, Speak thou also unto the children of Israel, saying, Verily my Sabbaths ye shall keep: for it is a sign between me and you throughout your generations; that ye may know that I am the Lord that doth sanctify you. Ye shall keep the Sabbath therefore: for it is holy unto you: everyone that defileth it shall surely be put to death: for whosoever doeth any work therein, that soul shall be cut off from among his people. Six days may work be done, but in the seventh is the Sabbath of rest, holy to the Lord: whosoever doeth any work in the Sabbath day, he shall surely be put to death. Wherefore the children of Israel shall keep the Sabbath, to observe the Sabbath throughout your generations, for a perpetual covenant. It is a sign between me and the children of Israel forever: for in six days the Lord made heaven and earth, and on the seventh day he rested and was refreshed." (See Exodus xxxi, 12-17).

The idea of God is preserved and enshrined in the Sabbath. To abolish the Sabbath is to abolish God. No Sabbath, no Bible, no God! How would that do? We shudder at the very thought.

Can we have a spiritual Sabbath, observe that day according to its spiritual intent and purport, without legal sanction and protection? Suppose the Legislature of the State of Louisiana were to enact more stringent laws respecting the observance of the Sabbath, making it a penal offense to open places of business and restricting all commerce? And suppose the law should be observed in the letter? Are we to conclude by this that the spirit and intent of the day is kept? By no means. It can not be kept by law, and yet we need and must have laws enforced for our protection in its observance. The Sabbath must be kept by the heart, and with delight, according to the Bible standard.

The Sabbath is an older and better institution than the picture gallery, or museum, or even the park; and if people wish to visit these, and similar places of recreation and amusement, let them take their own time for it, and not filch from God that which belongs to him. God, who has given us all our time, has laid his hand on it and "sanctified" it, called it "holy"—his. We dare not, at our peril, desecrate it. Works of charity and necessity can be done, and are blameless, as also visiting the sick and acts of Christian benevolence. Blacking the shoes, shaving and such toilet duties should be performed on Saturday. The cow has to be fed and milked, the horse must be fed and watered, but the currying must be deferred.

But says one: Is it not written, "the Sabbath was made for man, and not man for the Sabbath?" Yes. It fits him, and he must adjust himself to it. It was "made" (that is the word) "for man," and, therefore, he should be scrupulous in its use. It is a great error to say if it was "made" for him, he can do what and how he pleases with it. Such liberty becomes bold rashness, wanton licentiousness. It was "made," reserved, designated, sanctified, set apart from a common to an holy purpose—a resting-place from toil, care and labor.

Suggestive as it is of worship, thanksgiving, praise, an hint, an intimation of heavou, do not touch or mar its sacredness at your peril. We do not contend for a rigid puritanical Sabbatarianism, nor can we condone the Continental Sabbath; but a pure, spiritual, holy day. I heard a man once say he had a disgust for Sunday because his father, when he was a boy, prohibited him whistling on that day. That is puritanism run to seed.

Those who would evade and break the force of the law of the Sabbath by saying, "The Sabbath was made for man," should also remember the same great teacher said: "The Son of man is lord also of the Sabbath." And will we, who have received so gracious a benefaction as this, use it offensively, and in any way forbidden. Surely not.

It is resurrection day. A day of joyful, grateful worship, and never intended to be spent in gloom. "This is the day the Lord hath made, let us rejoice and be glad in it," is the joyful language of the Psalmist.

The influence of the Christian Sabbath on civilization can not be measured. The "labor problem," which threatens our peace and security as a nation, in its relations to overbearing capitalists and cruel and heartless monopolies, is to be adjusted largely by this Sunday law. The poor and helpless have their rights, and they must be vindicated. The artisan, laborer, toiler at manual labor, needs the rest and quiet which the Sabbath brings. The din and whirl of machinery, the constant draft on the forces of the body, nerve and brain tissues impairs the health, destroys and undermines the constitution, and shocks the sensitive, nervous powers, did not the holy Sabbath intervene, and by its hallowed associations and influences check the strain and overcome the wear, and proclaim a jubilee of rest. What a benediction to tired and wearied limbs and harassed and chafed mind!—the sweet light of God's blessed Sabbath disclosing to our senses the beautiful and charming services of religion, which come to the sin-tired soul as a balm of fragrance wafted from heaven's own spicy shore.

Let its religious observance be intensified and emphasized. Let it be by far the best day of the week. A day of joy, happiness and doing good. Let it typify and adumbrate the eternal Sabbath of joy—the "rest which remaineth for the people of God." Let its hallowed and hallowing influence permeate, penetrate and imbue the whole week. The strength thus gathered and husbanded will enable us to cope with the enemies which may lie in our pathway, and be the living talisman of our success.

We plead for the holy Sabbath; its Christian observance in the household, the sacred precincts of home, in the counting-room, in the field and workshop, in the busy marts of trade, in the manufactory—everywhere.

Let Saturday plan and arrange to abridge all Sunday duties. Let travel for pleasure, pastime and business cease; let the tired, hard-worked animals have a solid day of rest; let the mail be given up, that all cars, stage coaches, mail agents, clerks, postmasters, engineers, brakemen, conductors and porters, aggregating hundreds of thousands in the United States, may have immunity from work and care. Is it a self-denial, a mortification? Be it so. Self-denial is an all-important factor in discipleship. This denial of fleshly lusts and appetites is of incalculable value to ourselves in our Christian discipline. To others, the masses, it is certainly conferring a welcome blessing. The command of God is: "Remember the Sabbath day to keep it holy." There is no command more legitimate and reasonable, and that promises better results.

Work for the General Conference.

I am sure I would not have thought of writing on this subject had not those in position and experience above me asked me to do so. I have seen many suggestions by men much my superiors in judgment, that appeared immature and rickety. And brilliant men, on this subject, have shot wild and wide of the mark. So I have been afraid to make any suggestions about changing our laws, lest I should make a ridiculous show.

In the issue of the ADVOCATE, of November 21, the first page is given to this subject. Some things written were wise; some, I thought, far otherwise. Dr. Parker starts on the presiding eldership, which he calls "one of the chief pillars of our polity," and proposes a change that looks as though it would ruin it. His object is economy; to save labor for unoccupied fields, and to give more importance to District Conferences. He argues that half the presiding elders could do the work, if twenty-six appointments were put in each district, and thus one hundred men would be placed in the pastorate. This calculation needs revising. Here is a Conference with one hundred appointments. By our present law, twenty appointments in a district, five presiding elders could serve them. Increase the districts to twenty-six appointments, and four presiding elders would be required still—a saving of one-fifth only. If his plan succeeds, I think it will eventually save all of the two hundred presiding elders for the pastorate. Again, is it wise to destroy, not only the presiding eldership, but the Quarterly Conference, to make a District Conference effective? Have you heard of the man that had a wagon he had used much taking it to the shop for repairs? The smith added a fifth wheel. After using it awhile longer, by close attention, he discovered that the fifth wheel did not touch the earth as his wagon rolled on. He further noticed that the extra wheel had only one or two spokes in it. An idea strikes him; he rejoices at its conception. Here is what I will do: take it back to the shop and have most of the good spokes taken out of the fourth wheel and added to this fifth wheel. Sir, would it not be better to take out the solitary spoke in the fifth wheel and put it somewhere else? Provide some other way of electing delegates to the Annual Conference rather than destroy the Quarterly Conference and the presiding eldership, or, as Dr. Parker calls it, reducing it to its lowest requirements.

I see that several writers advise ordination with licentiation. I do not see the necessity for this change. I have served for six years the largest district east of the Mississippi river—one that has had all this time more under-graduates in it than, perhaps, any other district. So I stand in a place to know something of the inconvenience that arises from want of ordination in pastors in charge. With us it has been small. I agree with Dr. Parker in regard to the change of the boundary lines of the Louisiana Conference, so as to include the entire State in that Conference. I agree with him again on the subject of evangelists—I think an active presiding elder reduces the office of an extra evangelist to its lowest requirement.

Dr. Hunnicutt speaks wisely about revision in our financial system. Yes, let all the collections be placed in the hands of the laymen. That is now the plan in several charges that I know of, and it works well.

Dr. Ahrens says make the presiding eldership elective. Why so? Might it not open the way for cunning electioneering by ambitious men? He says admit one layman from each presiding elder's district into the Bishop's cabinet. I do not know so well about that. When I am in the cabinet assisting in its delicate work, I feel like I would be glad to have two or three of my wisest laymen present; but when I remember that not a layman in the district knows anything about the district, except his own charge, and, perhaps, an adjoining charge, I do not see how his advice could be very valuable. Every prominent layman in this district wants about the best preacher in the Conference sent to his work. If he was a member of the cabinet, he would be apt to work to that end. Might it not be necessary to have two or three, or more, laymen from districts when there are rival cities and towns? This measure had better be well considered before it is acted upon. The prominent laymen about our chief cities have great influence in the Bishop's council. Now I am inclined to think they do not care to be burdened with any further responsibility in this matter.

Work that Ought to Be Done.

Dear Brethren of Southern Methodism: As our General Conference is approaching to again look with careful eye over the vast field of earth; as she moves her glorious train toward the port of heaven, I wish to wave a danger signal and ask you to see the man, who, going from Jerusalum to Jericho, has fallen bruised and mangled by the way. I speak of an army of perishing men; falling daily in our very midst without the comfort and ministrations of a gospel minister to, in any way, prepare them for the sudden death and tragic calamities that befall them. I refer to the army of railroad workmen in general, and to the class called brakemen in particular. I saw a statement that in one State (Ohio), last year, 2,700 brakemen were instantly killed and 7,500 were maimed by the loss of arm or leg. Now, if there was an army of soldiers suffering such mortality would our church hesitate to appoint a chaplain, and make the necessary arrangements to sustain such chaplaincy, so that it might do the greatest amount of good to the army, donning the uniform, entering the camp and in every way identifying himself as in sympathy with that army. I have been suddenly awakened to this important duty of our church ministry, the consolations of our glorious gospel to these toiling, suffering, dying thousands of our fellow-men, and my heart burns within me to think of our neglect. What good can be accomplished by the distribution of our papers, books and tracts, none but God can know. If the secular press and news companies can arrange to send their agents out on every train, can not each Annual Conference send, at least, one chaplain to travel from lodge to lodge of the Brotherhood of these laborers to teach and preach Christ to them, bury their dead and administer to the wounded? Was it not the glory of Methodism that she found the miner in his sooty toil and sang glory and preached hope that gave joy to many souls? No railroad company would be so lost to humane feeling as to charge fare for such a messenger of love and mercy among them. No Domestic Mission Board would refuse to support such a missionary. Heroism for our God and our perishing fellow-men is abundant. Then, why not? Oh, brethren, you who are old in the work for the Master, and wise to know "what Israel ought to do," hear this cry of agony and lend a helping hand now! Brethren, you who wield the pen and speak so loudly to all the world, will you join me in this cry for help?

MINUTES

TAKEN AT THE SEVERAL

ANNUAL CONFERENCES

OF THE

METHODIST EPISCOPAL CHURCH,

FOR THE YEAR 1785.

As it was unanimously agreed at this Conference that circumstances made it expedient for us to become a separate body, under the denomination of the Methodist Episcopal Church, it is necessary that we should here assign some reasons for so doing.

The following extract of a letter from the Rev. Mr. John Wesley will afford as good an explanation as can be given of this subject:

"BRISTOL, September 10, 1784.

"To Dr. Coke, Mr. Asbury, and our Brethren in "North America—

"1. By a very uncommon train of "providences, many of the provinces "of North America are totally dis-"joined from the British Empire, and "erected into Independent States. The "English government has no authority "over them, either civil or ecclesias-"tical, any more than over the states "of Holland. A civil authority is ex-"ercised over them, partly by Con-"gress, partly by the State Assemblies. "But no one either exercises or claims "any ecclesiastical authority at all. In "this peculiar situation some thou-"sands of the inhabitants of these "States desire my advice; and in com-"pliance with their desire, I have "drawn up a little sketch.

"2. Lord King's account of the prim-"itive church convinced me many "years ago that Bishops and presby-"ters are the same order, and conse-"quently have the same right to or-"dain. For many years I have been "importuned from time to time to ex-"ercise this right by ordaining part of "our traveling preachers. But I have "still refused, not only for peace's "sake, but because I was determined, "as little as possible, to violate the es-"tablished order of the national church "to which I belonged.

"3. But the case is widely different "between England and North America. "Here there are Bishops who have a "legal jurisdiction. In America there "are none, and but few parish minis-"ters; so that for some hundred miles "together there is none either to bap-"tize or to administer the Lord's Sup-"per. Here, therefore, my scruples "are at an end; and I conceive myself "at full liberty, as I violate no order "and invade no man's right, by ap-"pointing and sending laborers into "the harvest.

"4. I have accordingly appointed "Dr. Coke and Mr. Francis Asbury to "be joint *superintendents over our "brethren in North America. As also "Richard Whatcoat and Thomas Vasey "to act as elders among them, by bap-"tizing and administering the Lord's "Supper.

"5. If anyone will point out a more "rational and scriptural way of feeding "and guiding those poor sheep in the "wilderness, I will gladly embrace it. "At present I can not see any better "method than that I have taken.

"6. It has, indeed, been proposed to "desire the English to ordain part of "our preachers for America. But to "this I object. (1) I desired the "Bishop of London to ordain one only, "but could not prevail. (2) If they "consented, we know the slowness of "their proceedings; but the matter ad-"mits of no delay. (3) If they would "ordain them now, they would like-"wise expect to govern them. And "how grievously would this entangle "us. (4) As our American brethren "are now totally disentangled both "from the State and from the English "hierarchy, we dare not entangle them "again, either with the one or the "other. They are now at full liberty "simply to follow the Scriptures and "the primitive church. And we judge "it best that they should stand fast in "that liberty wherewith God has so "strangely made them free.

"JOHN WESLEY."

Therefore, at this Conference we formed ourselves into an independent church; and following the counsel of Mr. John Wesley, who recommended the Episcopal mode of church government, we thought it to become an Episcopal Church, making the episcopal office elective, and the elected superintendent or Bishop amenable to the body of ministers and preachers.

Bro. Mellen on Missions.

In coming out of the Methodist Church, the other night, I saw a little pamphlet, with Rev. T. L. Mellen's name as author. I picked it up and took it home. My wife and self read it through when we got home. I must say, according to my best judgment, it is the best thing on the subject of missions for the conversion of the world I have seen. It was an essay read before the Brookhaven District Conference, Mississippi Annual Conference. I heard him read it; but it did not strike me very forcibly at the time. Bishop Keener recommended it at the time that it be published in pamphlet form. I do wish ten thousand of them were circulated all over the land. I suppose he has them on hand. I don't know the price. I suppose about a dime. If I was a young preacher, I would get one and commit it to memory, and use Bro. Mellen's thunder and turn it into lightning.

Now, I recommend the preachers throughout the country to send to him for some of them. The title of it is "Obligations and Objections." I don't say, but I suppose on missions. It is a grand thing, according to my judgment. Direct to Wesson, Miss.

From the Work.

OPELOUSAS, LA.

MR. EDITOR: Thanksgiving Day, November 28, was generally observed by our people, and will long be remembered by many of us. We held a union service here in the Methodist Church, at eleven A. M., in which all the Protestant pastors officiated. A large congregation was present, in which all the denominations were represented. The service of song was appropriate and delightful; engaged in by the congregation generally. We were treated to an excellent sermon by our Presbyterian brother, F. W. Lewis, followed by appropriate addresses by Bros. Cason and Mack, of the Baptist and Episcopal Churches, respectively. After the service we, the pastors, were invited by some of the brethren to a Thanksgiving dinner, which invitation we were not slow in accepting. During the repast one of the brethren expressed audible thanks for the turkey, which contributed largely to our enjoyment on this occasion, to which we all responded with a hearty Amen.

My Conference collections are coming up handsomely, and the ADVOCATE fund will be increased on my arrival at Conference. The Conference year with us, has been a fairly prosperous one in every way, and the outlook is encouraging.

WALNUT GROVE CIRCUIT, MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.

MR. EDITOR: I am closing up the fourth year on this circuit, and, while I regret to part with these people to whom I have become so much attached, yet I am fully convinced that four years is long enough for a preacher to stay at one place—at least, long enough for me. In reviewing the labors of those four years, I find nothing to boast of, but can say, after I have done all, I am an unworthy and an unprofitable servant. We have built two churches; received one hundred and fifty into the church; baptized fifty infants; have furnished the Mississippi Conference with three young preachers, all of whom are doing good work for the Master. In addition to this we have pruned and whittled down the local preachers from nine to five, and the membership from six hundred and twelve to four hundred and seventy. The collections have never been paid in full, but have increased a little every year. This year the Conference collections will be considerably in advance of any former year.

W. W. CAMMACK.

God needs every believer in the work of disciplining others. This is no limiting God. What he might do and what he will do are two different questions. His declared plan is and always was to use the disciple as a witness for him and a winner of souls. There never was nor will be a body of ordained preachers large enough to evangelize the world without the help of the great body of disciples.—A. T. Pierson.

LESSON XII.—December 22.

CLOSE OF SOLOMON'S REIGN.

1. Kings xi, 26-43.

GOLDEN TEXT.—Let us hear the conclusion of the whole matter: Fear God and keep his commandments; for this is the whole duty of man.—Eccl. xii, 13.

TIME.—B. C. 980.

PLACE.—Zereda (cooling), a town in Ephraim, on the plain of Jordan.

26. Jeroboam—Jeroboam was an Ephraimite of Zereda—that is, Zarthan in the Jordan valley, son of a widow, and a subject, but an officer of Solomon. Lifted up his hand—This is the Hebrew phrase, signifying, "he rebelled."

27. Solomon built Millo—Solomon made Jeroboam superintendent of all the forced labor ("the charge") exacted from his tribe—the tribe of Ephraim—during the time that he was building Millo and fortifying the city of Jerusalem (ix, 15).

28. Mighty man of valor—The phrase here seems to mean here "a man of strength and activity." It is a vague term of commendation, the exact force of which must be fixed by the context.

29. At that time—The time when Jeroboam had become overseer over the heavy works, and not after he had already stirred up the rebellion. The Shilonite—An inhabitant of Shiloh in Mount Ephraim, the earliest and most sacred of the Hebrew sanctuaries.

30. New garment . . . rent it—The first instance of the "acted parable." Generally this mode was adopted upon express divine command. A connection may be traced between the type selected and the words of the announcement to Solomon. There was something significant also in the circumstance that it was a new garment, which is stated twice, and indicates the newness, that is, the still young and vigorous condition, of the kingdom.

33. They have forsaken me—Several Hebrew manuscripts have the verbs in the singular number throughout this verse, and so the Septuagint renders. This sense is cleared by this change; but, perhaps, here as elsewhere, the difficult reading is the true one. By "they" the writer probably meant Solomon especially (and hence the expression at the end of the verse, "as did David his father"), but he intended likewise to convey the notion that others, too—his wives, his court, his children—had partaken of the idolatry of the monarch. Worshiped—On the southern heights of Olivet, looking toward the royal gardens, were three sanctuaries on three distinct eminences, consecrated respectively to Astarte, the goddess of Phenicia; to Chemosh, the war-god of Moab; and to Milcom (Molech), the divine "king" of Ammon. The licentious and cruel rites with which these divinities were worshiped attached a name of infamy to the whole mountain. In part or in whole, it received from these shrines the name of the "Mount of Offense," which it retained, together with the more innocent name of "Olivet," till the Christian era, when the darker name was confined to the southernmost of the four heights of which that mountain is composed.

34. Take the whole kingdom—Translate—"Howbeit I will not take aught of the kingdom out of his hand." The context requires this sense. Make him prince—"Set him for prince," inasmuch as leaving him upon the throne was not merely a divine permission, but a divine act.

36. A light alway—The exact meaning of the expression is doubtful. Perhaps the best explanation is that "light" here is taken as the essential feature of a continuing home. This phrase, which is repeated in chap. xv, II. Kings viii, 19; II. Chron. xxi, 7, is to be explained from II. Sam. xxi, 17, where David's royal rule is called the light which God's grace had kindled for Israel, and affirms that David was never to want a successor upon the throne.

38. Build thee a sure house—To "build a sure house," or "give a house," is to give a continuity of offspring, and so secure the perpetuity of a family. The promise, it will be observed, is conditional; and as the condition was not complied with it did not take effect.

39. Not for ever—In no case, not even if Jeroboam and his seed continued faithful, serving God as David had served him (verse 38), was the seed of David to be afflicted forever. David had been distinctly promised that God should never fail his seed, whatever their shortcomings. The fulfillment of the promises was seen, partly in the providence which maintained David's family in a royal position till Zerubbabel, but mainly in the preservation of his seed to the time fixed for the coming of Christ, and in the birth of Christ—the Eternal King—from one of David's descendants.

40. Sought therefore to kill . . . fled into Egypt—As Solomon's luster faded, as oppression became greater and its objects more selfish, and as a prospect of deliverance arose from the personal difficulties of Jeroboam (ver. xxviii), the tribe of Ephraim, to which he belonged, began to aspire after its old position. Jeroboam, active, energetic, and ambitious, placed himself at their head. The step proved premature. The power of Solomon was too firmly fixed to be shaken; and the hopes of the insurgents had to be deferred till a more favorable season. The exact date of Jeroboam's flight into Egypt can not be fixed. It was certainly not earlier than Solomon's twenty-fourth year, since it was after the building of Millo. Ver. 41. But it may have been several years later. Until the death of Solomon—During his stay he noted, with a statesman's eye, the institutions and strange relics of the country which had been the scene of ancient bondage of his people. It is to be feared that there was much that met his view which could only be abhorrent to a true believer, but which inspired him with disgust—much which he regarded with admiration—some things that he deemed worthy of imitation, and that treasured up, what appeared useful hints, which might be applied with advantage when his predicted destinies were fulfilled. But whatever was the immediate safety found in this Egyptian refuge, he lived to rue that his steps had not turned some other way. The visit was ruinous to him, by filling his mind with ideas wholly alien to the Hebrew constitution, and the attempt to work out which brought ruin upon his house and disbonor upon his name.

41. And all that he did—Whether Solomon turned to the Lord again with all his heart, a question widely discussed by the older commentators, can not be ascertained from the Scripture. If the preacher is traceable to Solomon so far as the leading thoughts are concerned, we should find in this fact an evidence of his conversion, or at least a proof that at the close of his life Solomon discovered the vanity of all earthly possessions and aims, and declared the fear of God to be the only abiding good, with which a man can stand before the judgment of God. What personal piety he ever had was crowded out by the business of the state, withered by the prevailing worldly atmosphere, spoiled by the indulgences and luxuries of court life. During the principal years of his reign he was a man preserving with jealous care all religious ceremonials and festivals, and fulfilling all public religious duties, without being personally godly or keeping watch over his own heart. It is not strictly correct to think of Solomon as a backslider: it is more true to say that his religion had always been imperfect and incomplete; it never gained its only worthy and effective sphere, the sphere of his heart.

Missionary.

Letter from Brazil.

MR. EDITOR: At last the briny Atlantic has been crossed and the mission field reached! Two months have glided past since my arrival in Piracicaba, Brazil. During that time I have been busily and delightfully engaged from day to day in a new routine of duties. Each day has been precious because it was another day for Jesus; each day has been lightened of its care because it was wholly done for Jesus. And thus the time has flitted by in this land of beauty, and yet one so sadly darkened by idolatry—an idolatry which claims the Bible as the foundation of its faith and government, yet a church which effectually shuts out its people from the knowledge of the revealed will of God.

There is so much to be done here, so little has been accomplished, comparatively (and yet a great deal), that the magnitude, the volubility of the work urges each new-comer at once into zealous activity. "Oh, to do more; to do much for the Master!" is the cry of everyone. Acquiring the new language is an arduous task which consumes the time and taxes the patience of each new-comer. Though that is the case, still there are numerous duties for the new missionary to share with her co-workers. These, together with the study of Portuguese, about fill up my time.

The Woman's Board of Foreign Missions of our church has provided a comfortable home here, which is supported, in the main, by the school. There are many charity pupils who live with us. These are supported by the means collected from those pupils who are able to pay tuition. Thus we keep here in the college a goodly number of poor children whom we are training, educating for the Lord. These poor heathen children demand constant and vigilant attendance, so ignorant are they of what is right and what is wrong. The native Brazilian is kind, but untruthful, unreliable and immensely selfish. To rear these children up for God is our chief work, and this we endeavor to accomplish by example and precept all the time. The Scriptures are read and expounded to them daily. They each day memorize Bible verses and sing the songs of Zion. They are taught to pray, to give thanks for all things, and in their school and domestic relations God's loving care and omnipotence are pointed out to them. Some of these children are Christians; from time to time there comes up among them a new candidate for church membership. Those who are not professed Christians imbibe such strong principles of the religion of the Lord Jesus Christ that we feel confident that they will never be Catholics; that, sooner or later, there will come a time for them to profess Jesus as their Savior. Thus from day to day we are sowing seed for the future to develop, to bring to maturity. To-day is the Day of All Saints. We have no school; all the day pupils are kept at home to take part in the cathedral celebration, which always takes place on this day. It is really a gala day in the city. The bands will play the gayest music through the streets and at the cathedral; the streets will be blockaded with peddlers selling their wares and sweets; all will be gaiety and carnal indulgence—no spirituality.

The Church of Rome, the Church of State here, in the great empire of Brazil, which surpasses the United States in area, is a form of the vilest paganism, more disastrous than the idolatries of China and India, because it professes the guidance of the Bible! (What a work here for the evangelical churches to accomplish!) To such an extent is the worship of images carried, the mediation of saints implored, that images are worshiped as God himself. The atonement and mediation of Christ is rejected for that of the Virgin and other saints. The Trinity is openly declared to be "Father, Mother and Son." The multiplicity of idols is fearful. Various rivers and other natural features of the country are taught as being guarded over by certain images; different diseases, different classes of evils having, respectively, their presiding images. When persons are converted these images are all given up—usually burned. There are shops in the large cities where the selling of little statuettes (images) of plaster, wood, metal, etc., form the chief traffic. The desired image is purchased for a nominal sum and taken to the priest to christen and bless. In such a way the little statuette is endowed with supernatural powers, and is ever afterwards bowed down to and invoked as a saint.

The Sabbath is a day of traffic, pleasure and riotous drinking. There is nothing to indicate Christianity among these people, save where the missionary has left footprints. The work is fast gaining ground; the cry for more help is heard all over the land. Oh, that our home people could see the joy, the devotion of these native Christians! How happy they are in the religion of Jesus! Piracicaba is a Methodist stronghold; yet the Church of Rome is the predominant element here. We long to see the whole city converted to God. Pray for us unceasingly that our efforts may be successful, that we may continue strong and faithful in the Lord.

The weather is balmy and sweet with the fragrance of spring. During the holidays we have our warmest weather. We are now preparing for the semi-annual examination of the school, which takes place in December. It is the event of the season, and, though the people do not generally attend our church, yet our school is highly appreciated, patronized and visited by the best of them. This is sufficient evidence of their esteem for the missionary workers among them. God grant that we will ever be faithful!

Your sister in Christ,

SALLIE M. PHILLIPS.

A Woman in the Case.

There always is. She is the power behind the throne. A woman's influence over the man who loves her is often absolute. To wield so great a power to guide, strengthen and help her husband, a woman's mind should be clear and healthy. It can not be if she is suffering from any functional derangement. How many a home is made unhappy because she who should be its life and light is a wretched, depressed, morbid invalid! Wives, mothers and daughters, why suffer from "female complaints" which are sapping your lives away, when Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription will renew your health and gladden those about you? It has restored happiness to many a saddened life. Why endure martyrdom when relief is so easy? In its special field there never was a restorative like the "Favorite Prescription."

To cleanse the stomach, liver, and system generally, use Dr. Pierce's Pellets. 25 cents.

The injuries of life, if rightly improved, will be to us as the strokes of the statuary on his marble, forming us to a more beautiful shape, and making us fitter to adorn the heavenly temple.—Mather.

Many people neglect a cold, thinking it will go as it came. Frequently with serious results, the cold of to-day may be the pneumonia of to-morrow. Nothing will cure a cough or cold so rapidly as Dr. Davis' Compound Syrup of Wild Cherry and Tar. Its reputation has been established for over fifty years as the best remedy for coughs, colds, bronchitis, asthma, all throat and lung troubles. For croup and whooping-cough it is invaluable. Mothers will be saved much anxiety and loss of children by having Davis' Wild Cherry and Tar always on hand. Consumption has been cured many times by its use. One dollar bottles hold two and a half times as much as a 50c. bottle.

Many favors which God giveth us ravel out for want of hemming, through our own unthankfulness; for though prayer purchaseth blessings, giving praise doth keep the quiet possession of them.

Attention! If you desire a fine head of hair of a natural hue and free from dandruff, Hall's Hair Renewer is the best and safest preparation to accomplish it.

How easy is the thought, in certain moods, of the loveliest, most unselfish devotion! How hard is the doing of the thought in the face of a thousand unlovely difficulties!—Macdonald.

ORGAN OF THE LOUISIANA, MISSISSIPPI AND NORTH MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCES OF THE METHODIST EPISCOPAL CHURCH, SOUTH.

Rev. C. W. CARTER, D. D., Editor.

CORRESPONDING EDITORS:
Rev. J. D. CAMERON, D. D.
Rev. B. CARRADINE, D. D.
Rev. W. L. C. HUNNICUTT, D. D.

THURSDAY, DECEMBER 12, 1889.

North Mississippi Conference.

FIRST DAY.

This Couference met, December 4, in Holly Springs, Miss. Bishop Galloway opened the Conference by the administration of the sacrament of the Lord's Supper. A large number of communicants partook of the elements, and it was a season of precious communion with the Lord and with one another. The Lord was manifest in a peculiar manner, recognizing the faith of his servants and blessing their souls with a peace "unknown to common minds."

The secretary of the last Conference, Rev. John Barcroft, called the roll, and a large number, both of ministers and laymen, answered to their names. A crowd of visitors filled the large church at the first session. Rev. John Barcroft was elected secretary. Revs. Thomas Cameron, J. S. Oakley and T. Y. Ramsey, Jr., were elected assistant secretaries. The hours of meeting and adjournment were fixed at 9 A. M. and 12:30 P. M.

The presiding elders reported the standing committees as follows:

Public Worship—J. W. Honnoll, J. A. Randolph, J. F. Fant.

District Conference Records—G. E. Kelsey, P. T. Callicutt, W. W. Dorman, H. R. Tucker, H. H. Estes, J. R. D. King, W. M. Young.

Observance of the Sabbath—Eugene Johnson, R. A. Burroughs, W. C. Lester.

Spiritual Interests—J. W. Bell, W. S. Shipman, J. A. Bowen, A. H. George, E. H. Cascy, J. A. Whitehurst, J. T. Moody, F. P. Spencer.

Bible Cause—L. W. Worsham, C. H. Owen, H. L. Vaughn.

Temperance—J. C. Lowe, J. Y. Murray, P. B. Jones, J. W. Malone, W. W. Mitchell, S. A. Ellis, B. F. Phillips.

Memoirs—W. W. Williams, R. G. Porter, W. T. J. Sullivan,

Books and Periodicals—Edward Mayes, J. C. Kyle, R. A. Ellis, J. A. Leech, S. D. Long, J. M. Barnes, Joseph Johnson, N. G. Augustus.

Conference Relations—K. A. Jones, T. B. Malone, G. W. Gordon, R. M. Davis, H. C. Morehead, D. W. Babb, J. W. Dorman.

A communication from Rev. W. C. Dunlap, commissioner of education, was read and referred to the Board of Education. A communication from the Publishing House, at Nashville, was referred, without reading, to the Committee on Books and Periodicals. A communication from Dr. Morton, secretary of Church Extension Society, was read and referred to the Conference Board of Church Extension. A communication from the General Board of Missions, at Nashville, Tenn., was read and referred to the Conference Board of Missions. A communication from the Publishing Committee of the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE was referred to the Committee on Books and Periodicals.

Bro. Holt, of the Publishing House, was introduced, as was also Rev. W. L. Wilson, publisher of the Alabama Christian Advocate.

The names of the presiding elders were called, and they gave short accounts of the work of God in their districts during the past year. There has been much progress, and the kingdom of the Master is gradually broadening. The characters of the presiding elders all were passed. The names of the superannuates were called, and the characters of such as had not gone to the eternal home were passed. The characters of the supernumeraries were passed.

The examination of elders was taken up, and the following passed: John Ritchie, E. H. Casey, R. G. Porter, K. A. Jones, R. P. Goar, A. P. Sage, W. J. O'Bryant, A. P. Leech, T. Cameron, J. W. Bates, R. M. Davis, H. L. Vaughn.

At this point, Rev. A. J. Jones, and Rev. W. D. McCullough, from the Methodist Free Church in America, presented themselves for reception into membership in the Conference. After some discussion the Conference voted to receive them on condition of assuming our ordination vows without re-imposition of hands.

The examination of elders was resumed, and these passed: J. E. Thomas, H. C. Morehead, J. M. Wyatt.

At this point Bishop Galloway, in a few felicitous remarks, introduced Mrs. Bishop Wightman, of the Woman's Board of Missions, who gave the Conference a resume of the work of that Board since its organization, and spoke specially in favor of the Mission Training-school at Kansas City, Mo., which she said would be in successful operation within the next year.

Dr. Morton, of the Church Extension Society, and Dr. Bennett, of the Arkansas Methodist, were introduced to the Conference. Bros. Taylor and Freeman, of the Memphis Conference, and Bro. Matthews, of the White River Conference, were also introduced.

The report of the Joint Committee of the two Mississippi Conferences on the Methodist College was presented by Dr. J. J. Wheat, read and referred to the Board of Education. The committee reported $43,000 raised on the endowment fund, and made the recommendation that eight persons, clerical and lay, be appointed from each Conference to compose, with Bishop Galloway as president, a Board of Trustees for the new college. Conference adjourned with benediction by the Bishop.

SECOND DAY.

Conference opened at 9 A. M. with devotional exercises conducted by Dr. David Morton, secretary of the Board of Church Extension. The roll was called and the Minutes read and approved.

A paper was presented from Vanderbilt University by T. Y. Ramsey, and read and referred to the Board of Education.

Bro. Bennett, of the Arkansas Methodist, at this point, spoke in the interest of his paper, and in favor of church papers generally. He made some good points, which were well received and will bear fruit in the future.

Question 1. Who are admitted on trial?

C. W. Perkins, G. H. Lipscomb, R. O. Brown, J. C. Mimms, W. J. Burt, J. R. Rogers, H. C. Edmondson.

He represented the cause of church extension as gradually increasing in favor with the people. All that the people need is correct information as to the work being done, and they will respond promptly to carry on the work. In seven years 1,482 churches and parsonages have been assisted by this society. A special collection to build a church at Eagle Pass, Texas, was taken by the Doctor and $123 55 was realized.

Rev. A. R. Wilson, of the Memphis Conference, was introduced, as also was Rev. J. W. McLaurin, of Mississippi Conference, and agent of the American Bible Society. Bro. McLaurin made a telling speech on the work of the Bible Society in Mississippi and Louisiana, urging the audience to renewed effort in this, the grandest of all missionary work, circulating the Holy Bible.

Louisiana Conference.

"Grace, mercy, and peace from God the Father and the Lord Jesus Christ our Savior."

The ADVOCATE brings greetings in the "name of him who was, and is, and is to come."

And are we yet alive
And see each other's face?
Glory and praise to Jesus give,
For his redeeming grace!

Through toils and labors, through joys and sorrows, through triumphs and defeats you have come to meet again in annual session. The Lord hath been, as of old, the pillar of cloud by day and the pillar of fire by night, guiding in the way and protecting you from the spoiler. Hence you look back with gratitude that deepens with the memories of the closed year, and you look forward with hope, heightened by the knowledge of promises fulfilled in the past. You do not grieve over your fallen comrades, for they have entered into rest, and

E'en now by faith you join your hands
With those that went before.

May the Divine Spirit fill your hearts with his gracious presence, so that all your deliberations may redound to the progress of the Master's work! May the Conference be brought to a close under such a fullness of the blessing of the gospel and such a baptism of the Holy Ghost as shall create a spiritual momentum that will sweep away all obstacles to your success during the coming year!

Hon. Jefferson Davis.

Since our last issue this great and good man has been called from earth. He died peacefully in this city last week. Mr. Davis has been a prominent public man for more than half a century. In Congress, in the army, in the Cabinet of President Pierce, in the United States Senate, and as the first and last President of the Confederacy, Mr. Davis won a prominence in public opinion that is reached by but a few persons. Millions of Southern people love the name and revere the memory of Jefferson Davis, and vie with each other in doing honor to his character. While many have opposed his public life, we have never heard aught against his private life. That was stainless and pure. In this city there were manifestations of grief on all sides. The public buildings and offices and private residences on every hand were draped in the emblems of sorrow. Uncounted thousands of our citizens, for hundreds and hundreds of miles around, gathered at his funeral to pay the last rites to the memory of the dead chieftain of the "Lost Cause." New Orleans had never witnessed such a scene before, and it is hardly probable that it will ever witness such again. The great man is gone; but his memory will be gladly cherished by our people and by our descendants until the "last syllable of recorded time" shall be spoken.

Planning for Work.

The St. Louis Advocate, in an article on "The Business of the Church," rebukes the church for spending time in devising plans. It says:

We are fooling our time away and spending our labor for that which is naught, in trying to devise plans. Plans will never reach the masses. We do not need plans; we need consecrated men. Men fired with zeal, filled with readiness, largeness and self-denial for Christ. The harvest is ripe, reapers are needed. God furnishes the plans. What we need is ability to execute his plans. God's plans are consecrated men and women, pressed out by a consuming zeal, by a tender concern for the lost, by a constraining love for Christ. God's plan is, go out into the hedges and highways, and compel them to come in. This is not simply to invite; it means searching for, helping, enabling them to come in. It is, Go out where they are, frequent the haunts where they are found, and by all spiritual pressures to force them to come.

We are pained to chronicle the death of Mrs. Lizzie Gale, wife of Rev. R. S. Gale, of the Mississippi Conference. She died on the fourth Sunday in November. Bro. Gale has our sympathies in this great bereavement.

North Mississippi Conference Notes.

One church, reporting two hundred and eighty-five members, raised $4,421 the past year. That is as good a report as we have heard.

Bishop Galloway said that the brother who "jumps" the collections has no right to discriminate between the collections in his own distribution of the same.

The congregations that assembled to see and hear the proceedings of Conference were larger than any we have been accustomed to see on such occasions.

Notwithstanding the short crop in many sections, the reports from those sections revealed that the brethren had been earnestly at work, and the results showed to very great advantage.

The lay delegation of the North Mississippi to General Conference is a representation which will show at St. Louis as fine a type of cultivated Methodist gentlemen as can be found on the planet.

Bro. Morrow, of Nashville, gave the Conference a practical talk and exhortation on keeping our young people in the Sunday-schools. No more important subject can come before a deliberative body of ministers, nor one upon which more earnest thought and prayer ought to be bestowed.

Bishop Galloway spoke in a very emphatic manner to the Conference on the necessity of administering the law of the Discipline in regard to local preachers. The itinerants must assign them work in the bounds of the circuits where their membership is held. He said: "No man need locate with the expectation of becoming a traveling evangelist."

The delegates to the General Conference from the ministers are J. J. Wheat, D. D.; W. T. J. Sullivan D. D.; W. B. Murrah, D. D.; J. W. Price, D. D.; and T. W. Dye. The alternates are J. D. Cameron, D. D.; and J. S. Oakley. From the laity the delegates are: J. T. Fant, Chancellor Edward Mayes, Judge W. R. Trigg, J. R. Bingham and Gov. G. D. Shands.

The hospitality of Holly Springs was warm and genuinely Christian. The open doors and the bountifully spread tables evinced, that not only was the hospitality not taxed, but its generosity was more than equal to the demand made upon it. The preachers and delegates not only appreciated it, but were warm in their praises of its bountifulness.

The faithfulness and efficiency of the secretary, Rev. J. Barcroft, was recognized in a neat speech by "Gilderoy," who, in behalf of the brethren, presented him with a fine copy of "The Life of Bishop Pierce." The secretary acknowledged the compliment and prayed the blessing of God upon the Conference. The secretary has served for twenty years.

Mrs. Bishop Wightman, of the Woman's Board of Missions, spoke to a crowded church, on Wednesday evening, in the interest of the Mission Training-school, to be established in Kansas City. She spoke so clearly, so lovingly, so forcibly on the subject, that when the collection was made the audience responded by giving one thousand and forty-one dollars for the furtherance of that enterprise.

The report on the NEW ORLEANS ADVOCATE was read by Chancellor Mayes, of State University, at Oxford, and was a model report in every respect. For the good words we are profoundly grateful. We trust the brethren will remember the report and go earnestly to work. Remember that in extending the circulation of the paper, you are enlarging the area of your own influence.

The editor expresses his gratitude to Bro. Randolph for placing him under the "roof-tree" of Bro. Rand and family, where, with Judge Wilson, of the Alabama Advocate, and Bro. Mitchel, of the NEW ORLEANS ADVOCATE, and Bro. Long, of Macon, and Bro. "Gilderoy," of Senatobia, he spent a few days of unalloyed pleasure. Such company is only found at an Annual Conference.

Judging from the number of newspaper men at the session of the Conference, one would suppose that its territory was lying around loose, and that one paper had no more right there than another. Why is this thing thus? Have the papers all worked up, their own territory? Is our territory better picking than their own? In the nature of things, is such a procedure exactly right to all concerned? However, the NEW ORLEANS ADVOCATE carried the day over all the "poachers."

The Bishop's address to the candidates for full connection was plain in statement, practical in its reach and pointed in its application. Such an address was the thing for the candidates, and was highly appreciated by every minister present, and will, doubtless, bear fruit in the future. Such addresses stimulate the energies and reinvigorate the aspirations, and force the soul out after the greater experiences of our holy religion.

On Friday evening, Dr. Lafferty gave his inimitable lecture, "Luck and Pluck," to an immense audience in the Masonic Hall. The hits of history, incidents of observation, illustrations from every-day life, and humorous anecdotes contributed to make up a most enjoyable hour to an appreciative crowd. The local paper dubbed Dr. Lafferty as "the Texas Siftings of the Southern Methodist Press."

There are many old soldiers of the cross in this Conference. They have for long years been leading the hosts of God to battle and victory. They must soon resign their great commissions, but they have the satisfaction of knowing that those who come after them will be worthy successors, and will still lead the van of the army. The young men, to whose keeping the great interests of Zion shall be committed, are diligently preparing themselves for the trust. We know of no more promising men than the young preachers of the North Mississippi Conference.

The NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE never had more royal treatment than at this Conference session. The editor and business manager were homed where they enjoyed the generous hospitality of the Christian family of Bro. Rand, and in company of several genial Christian gentlemen. The editor saw all the Conference from opening to the final benediction, and never saw a more pleasant and profitable session. The weather was perfectly delightful and everybody in a good humor with everybody until the dis-appointments were read out. Such hearty greeting and good-fellowship and hospitable entertainment could not be excelled outside of Holly Springs.

The educational meeting, held Thursday evening, in the Methodist Church, under the auspices of the Board of Education, was in every way a success. The house was crowded to its utmost capacity. The meeting was opened with devotional services conducted by the venerable T. Y. Ramsey. T. J. Newell, secretary of the Joint Committee of the two Mississippi Conferences, gave a history of the inception and progress of the work of establishing the Methodist Male College, after which Bishop Galloway addressed the audience in the interest of the college. The address was one of the Bishop's best, and was listened to by the audience with most intense attention. The collection resulted in about $600.

The missionary meeting was held Saturday evening. The church was crowded from floor to ceiling. The meeting was opened by Rev. Amos Kendall. The treasurer and secretary made their reports, when the president of the Board, Dr. Price, introduced Rev. T. J. Newell, who spoke forcibly on the question, "When to take the missionary collection." He was succeeded by Rev. R. G. Porter, who discussed the question, "How to take the collection." In his usual felicitous manner he presented the subject, and convinced his auditors of the religious duty of giving, and the preachers that the best way to take up a collection is to begin early and continue late. At this point the president called for experiences on taking collections, when several brethren presented their methods by which they achieved success, much to the edification of the hearers. Then came the collection which resulted in a handsome sum.

Sunday was, indeed, a high day. The love-feast at the Methodist Church, conducted by the venerable J. H. Brooks, was a time of sweet communion of saints, and the power of the Lord was present in great plentitude. The various churches were draped in mourning in memory of the dead chieftain of the "Lost Cause." Bishop Galloway delivered a missionary sermon to a packed house, Dr. Wheat ministered, in his grand style, to the Presbyterians, and Dr. Murrah gave the Baptists a taste of his peculiar power. The other churches round-about were served by members of the Conference. Dr. Lafferty preached, at 3 P. M., at the Methodist Church, after which the Bishop ordained the elders. The evening service was the memorial service, and was a time of great preciousness. The tributes to the departed brethren were such as brought out the full force of gospel power to comfort and save. It was a season of refreshing.

—Rev. J. S. Parker writes from Newton station, Miss.: "The year is winding up very satisfactorily on the Newton charge. We have all the collections in full, and the preacher in charge will be overpaid. The good people here have presented their pastor with a very fine Conference suit. Our venerable and beloved brother, Rev. D. W. Dillehay, a superannuated member of the Mississippi Conference, is lying very low at his home here. Let the brethren remember him in their prayers. He talks sweetly of the rest in heaven for God's people."

—Dr. W. C. Black writes, December 7: "Jackson has contributed $5,060 to the endowment fund of the Mississippi Methodist College. Are there not twenty other towns in the State that are able to do as much? And if they should do so, would it not be a glorious thing for Methodism?"

BOOKS.

THE PUBLIC REGULATION OF RAILWAYS. By W. D. Dabney. O. P. Putnam's Sons, New York. Eyrich, 130 Canal St., New Orleans. Price, $1 25.

This is number sixty of the Putnam series, "Questions of the Day." The author, who was formerly chairman of the Committee on Railways and Internal Navigation in the Virginia Legislature, treats the subject in all the various aspects in which it presents itself. Four chapters are devoted to the Legal Aspects, three chapters to the Economic Aspects, one chapter to the Interstate Commerce Act, and one chapter to the Express Traffic. In these chapters a great variety of subjects come under review. The book is one of great interest and value.

THE DOCTRINE AND FUNCTION OF REVELATION. By Joshua H. Harrison, D. A., Principal of McTyeire Institute. Printed for the Author by the Southern Methodist Publishing House, Nashville, Tenn. Price, $1.

The author has divided his book into three parts. Part I. treats of the doctrine and function of revelation. Part II. treats of revelation in its relation to the doctrines of physical science. Part III. treats of "man in his relation to the universe." The book is an interesting one to students of the Bible in its relations to science; but there are parts of it that are exceedingly obscure to us. That, however, may be owing to our dimness of perception. We have no doubt it is all clear to the author.

MONEY. By James Platt, F. S. S. G. P. Putnam's Sons, New York. Eyrich, 130 Canal St., New Orleans. Price, 75 cents.

This is a popular reprint from the nineteenth English edition. It treats of, The Origin of Money, What is Money, Currency, Gold Money, Silver Money, Paper Money, Exchange, Banking, Interest, Wealth, Capital, Panics, Individual Success, National Prosperity, Conclusion. We imagine this to be a valuable book for the man of business.

EATING FOR STRENGTH. By M. L. Holbrook, M. D. M. L. Holbrook & Co., New York. Eyrich, 130 Canal St., New Orleans. Price, $1.

This is a valuable little book, treating of food and diet in their relation to health and strength. It has a value also in the sick-room, and will be a special service in the kitchen, containing, as it does, several hundred recipes for wholesome foods and drinks.

"IN THE BEGINNING." By Annice R. Butler. J. B. Lippincott Company, Philadelphia. Geo. F. Wharton, New Orleans. Price, $1.

The little volume contains the "stories" related in the book of Genesis. They are written in an easy and pleasing style, one just suited to young minds. The mechanical work displayed in this book is superior to most books of its kind.

GENEVIEVE; OR, THE CHILDREN OF PORT ROYAL. J. B. Lippincott Company, Philadelphia. Geo. F. Wharton, New Orleans. Price, $1 25.

This is a story of Old France by the author of The Spanish Brothers.

The Holidays

And the colder winter weather are now rapidly approaching. The joyful season is eagerly anticipated by young folks in thousands of homes; but in nearly all there are one or more older ones to whom the cold waves and the storms mean renewed suffering from rheumatic back or limbs. It is not claimed that Hood's Sarsaparilla is a positive specific for rheumatism; we doubt if there is or can be such a remedy. But the remarkable success Hood's Sarsaparilla has had in curing this affection is sufficient reason for those who are suffering to try this peculiar medicine

The Clergy of America take kindly to Life Insurance, and have been its firmest champions. They fight for it and thoroughly believe in it. There are many splendid financiers in the Church; that they are intelligent and thoughtful for their future goes without saying. All denominations seek the protection of Life Insurance, and are careful to select the company offering the greatest security and the most advantageous terms to policy-holders.

The Episcopal Diocese, of New York, has an Insurance Fund for all of its members, and the Mutual Life, which is the largest and strongest company in the world, with over $122,000,000 assets, has been officially selected by that body to issue all the insurance to these worthy people.

A Southern Department of this Company has been opened in New Orleans under the management of Mr. T. H. Bowles, with offices in Louisiana National Bank Building.

Holiday Excursions.

The Texas & Pacific Railway will sell excursion tickets between local stations on its line within distances of 200 miles, on December 23d, 24th and 31st, 1889, good until January 2d, 1890, for return, at one fare for the round trip. This company will also sell excursion tickets at a one-fare rate on December 21st, 22d and 23d, 1889, good thirty days from date of sale, to all principal points in the Southeastern States. Advertising is evidently becoming an art, and its development may yet lead to the establishment of special courses of training in business colleges. Already nearly $25,000,000 are spent annually in the United States in newspaper advertising, every dollar of which if used judiciously has returned a large interest to the investor. One feature of the advertisements of to-day forms an agreeable contrast to the advertisements of a generation ago. It is the evident sincerity in which they are written and the consequently greater confidence the searcher after information can repose in them. That the advertising page is becoming one of the most interesting pages of the daily newspaper is one of the striking proofs of the growth of intelligence and refinement among the people.—Philadelphia Press.

A Fact

WORTH knowing is that blood diseases which all other remedies fail to cure, yield to Ayer's Sarsaparilla.

Fresh confirmation of this statement comes to hand daily. Even such deep-seated and stubborn complaints as Rheumatism, Rheumatic Gout, and the like, are thoroughly eradicated by the use of this wonderful alterative.

Mrs. R. Irving Dodge, 110 West 125th street, New York, certifies:—

"About two years ago, after suffering for nearly two years from rheumatic gout, being able to walk only with great discomfort, and having tried various remedies, including mineral waters, without relief, I saw by an advertisement in a Chicago paper that a man had been relieved of this distressing complaint, after long suffering, by taking Ayer's Sarsaparilla. I then decided to make a trial of this medicine, and took it regularly for eight months. I am pleased to say that it effected a complete cure, and that I have since had no return of the disease."

Mrs. L. A. Stark, Nashua, N. H., writes: "One year ago I was taken ill with rheumatism, being confined to my house six months. I came out of the sickness very much debilitated, with no appetite, and my system disordered in every way. I commenced to use Ayer's Sarsaparilla and began to improve at once, gaining in strength and soon recovering my usual health. I cannot say too much in praise of this well-known medicine."

"I have taken a great deal of medicine, but nothing has done me so much good as Ayer's Sarsaparilla. I felt its beneficial effects before I had quite finished one bottle, and I can freely testify that it is the best blood-medicine I know of."—L. W. Ward, Sr., Woodland, Texas.

MASON & HAMLIN

The Cabinet Organ was introduced in its present form by Mason & Hamlin in 1861. Other makers followed in the manufacture of these instruments, but the Mason & Hamlin Organs have always maintained their supremacy as the best in the world.

Mason & Hamlin offer, as demonstration of the unequalled excellence of their organs, the fact that at all of the great World's Exhibitions, since and including that of Paris, 1867, in competition with best makers, of all countries, they have invariably taken the highest honors. Illustrated $24 to $900 catalogues free.

ORGANS

Mason & Hamlin do not hesitate to make the extraordinary claim for their Pianos, that they are superior to all others. They recognize the high excellence achieved by other leading makers in the art of piano building, but still claim superiority. This they attribute solely to the remarkable improvement introduced by them in the year 1882, and now known as the "MASON & HAMLIN PIANO STRINGER," by the use of which is secured the greatest possible purity and refinement of tone, together with greatly increased capacity GRAND & UPRIGHT, for standing in tune and other important advantages.

Our Young People.

THE STATE OF TUSCON.

BY AUGUSTA LEONARD.

You have doubtless read of the state of Tulait,
Of the little girl's dream, and King Blizzibee great;
Of the fate that befalls all people who go
To church or to school or elsewhere too slow.

'Twas a terrible dream the little girl had,
But I know of another nearly as bad,
Of a bright little boy who was always too fast;
So impatient, he never could bear to be last.

He hustled and jostled and crowded along,
Never stopping to think which was right or which wrong;
And long before schooltime off he would go,
Bang the door, slam the gate, he never was slow.

Rush off without stopping good-morning to say,
And out on the green with the children to play.
Too fast in his play, must have all the best:
Was selfish and mean, never thought of the rest.

His buttons were wrong, his hair never straight,
It took too much time, he never could wait;
Why he never could wait as every boy should
For apples and melons and fruit to get good.

And the reason this dream came into his head
Was eating green fruit before going to bed.
He dreamed of flying away to the moon,
To a country they called the state of Tusoon.

Such woeful disorder the lad never saw;
The inhabitants there were too fast for all law.
The farmers so hurried their crops always lost;
They planted too soon and were caught by the frost.

At church or at school, at picnic or fair,
The same rush and hurry prevailed everywhere;
And the frightened boy saw that his chances were slim
In a country where all could match elbows with him.

He awoke from his dream, resolving at last
He would try to be patient and never too fast;
And he said to himself, "What a terrible state!"
But which is the worst, Tusoon or Tulait?

Baby's Surprise.

Mamma went away to stay a month. She left Dorothea Percival Parks at home. She was only a baby, though she did have a long name.

Grandma called her "Darling little Dor-o-the-a," mamma called her "Dorree," brother named her "Det," but papa always said "My little D." He said that name was long enough for such a short baby. I think so, too.

D was happy while mamma was away. She had grandma and papa and brother, and her nurse, Nanette.

Sometimes she did not know which she loved most, mamma or her dear Nanette.

One day baby D sat on the floor. She was not playing or looking at her picture book. She was thinking. She thought so hard her eyes got big. This is what she thought:

"I am tired of going about on my hands and knees. I get my paddies soiled, and spoil my white dresses. Why shouldn't I walk? Caterpillars creep. Folks can get to places faster when they walk. I don't believe it is such hard work as creeping. My knees get so tired. Feet are queer things. Brother walks; I'll see how he does it; he puts one foot down and then the other. I could do that; that's easy—that's nothing. I mean to get right up and walk across the floor."

So D took hold of a chair and got up. She let go of the chair and put out her foot. That was a step, all alone, too! D laughed and crowed. She laughed so loud she fell down; but she got up again. She spread out both her hands and tried again, first one foot and then the other. "Hi! that's walking," said D to herself.

Then grandma came into the room and said, "The precious child! she's walking."

Grandma sat down in the rocking-chair a little way off and held out her hands. "Come to grandma, little Dor-o-thea," she said. So baby took another step and another—one, two, three, four steps—and she was in grandma's arms. Such a hugging and kissing as she got then!

After that D walked a few steps every day, and soon she did not creep any more.

When mamma came home what did she see? Baby walking—walking all about the house.

"She can dance, too," said Nanette. "Come and dance a jig," said Nanette.

So baby D took hold of her dress and lifted up first one foot and then the other, while Nanette sang "Rig-a-jig-jig."

Baby D looked so sweet and so funny shaking her curly head and opening her mouth till she showed all her little white teeth! Mamma laughed till she cried, and they all laughed. Grandma said the baby did it all alone just to surprise her mamma. So she did, precious darling.—Mrs. C. M. Livington, in Pansy.

Jack's Text Book.

"He's the decentest little chap I've ever seen," said Mrs. Ray, who kept the Sailors' Boarding House. "As quiet and mannerly as a grown man, while most of the other boys keep up such a fussing that I'm clear worn out."

Jack, the little sailor, had been staying for a short time at her house before sailing on his second long voyage.

"I'll pack your box for you, my boy," said the kind-hearted woman, when he was going. "I'd like to help such a well-behaved boy as you."

"Ah," said she, as she lifted the cover of the trunk, "is this yours?"

She held up a Bible in her hand.

"Yes, ma'am," said Jack; "my mother gave it to me, and I promised to read it. She said it would always tell me the right thing to do."

"H'm," said Mrs. Ray; "was it this that taught you to bear it when Jim Pond abused you and tried to quarrel with you?"

"Yes, ma'am; it tells me that a soft answer turns away wrath."

Mrs. Ray silently went on with her packing. She had thought little of the Bible, and knew as little of what its pages contained. But the thoughtful face, good manners and kindly disposition of the little sailor had drawn her attention.

"If it's the book makes him so different from the others, it must be a book worth looking into," she said to herself.

"Keep it up, Jack," she said, as she wished him good-bye; "and I'm going to try it myself. If it's good for boys, it must be good for old folks, too."

Jack had never thought of being an example; but he surely must have felt glad and thankful in having led anyone to read the pages which point the way to eternal life.

LEARNING IN YOUTH.—Daniel Webster once told a good story in a speech and was asked where he got it. "I had it laid up in my head for fourteen years, and never had a chance to use it until to-day," he said.

My little friend wants to know what good it will do to learn the "rule of three," or to commit a verse of the Bible. The answer is this: "Some time you will need that very thing. Perhaps it may be twenty years before you make it fit in just the right place; but it will be just in place some time. Then if you don't have it, you will be like the hunter who had no ball in his rifle when the hear met him."

"Twenty-five years ago my teacher made me study surveying," said a man who lately lost his property, "and now I am glad of it. It is just in place. I can get a good situation and high salary." The Bible is better than that. It will be in place as long as we live.—Exchange.

HOME AND HEAVEN.

BY JONES VERY.

With the same letter heaven and home begin,
And the words dwell together in the mind;
For they who would a home in heaven win
Must first a heaven in home begin to find.
Be happy here, yet with a humble soul
That looks for perfect happiness in heaven;
For what thou hast is earnest of the whole
Which to the faithful shall at last be given.
As once the patriarch, in a vision blest,
Saw the swift angels hastening to and fro,
And the lone spot whereon he lay to rest
Became to him the gate of heaven below;
So may to thee, when life itself is done,
Thy home on earth and heaven above be one.

"A Comfortable Sort of Woman."

Said a homely, bent little man pathetically, when speaking of the mother of his children, who had done her life-work: "It comforts me to know that Sally would allus lie down every afternoon an' sleep a bit. Some folks tho't 'twas a dretful lazy habit, and 'twas no wonder we didu't get rich faster, but she suited me jest as she was. Sally was comfortable sort of a woman to have around, never frettin' at a feller or faultin' him when things didn't go right. When feelin' troubled she'd often say, 'Father, I believe I'll lie down for a few minutes,' then back she'd come spry and chipper as a canary bird. Sally didn't drive and scold, bat she wasn't lazy, an' she brought up the youngsters to do their part. I don't see that drivin' women gets on one mite better than she did. It does comfort me to know that Sally would take her rest."—Selected.

(That man used homely phrases, but his heart was in the right place, and it was the right kind of a heart. Sister, did you ever try Sally's receipe for a domestic trouble? Try it and see if it don't act like a charm. Nothing is so refreshing as a good "nap" when you are worried.—EDITOR).

Christmas.

A novel and pretty way of distributing Christmas gifts is to set your dining-table as you would for a meal. Put on your choicest cloth, and at each one's accustomed place set a soup-dish. The center of the table may have some pretty decorations arranged to suit the fancy; a pot of tall ferns would be lovely. Festoons of evergreens and holly may hang from the chandelier or lamps, as the case may be. All the small gifts can be put into the dishes, while others may be neatly arranged in front. Such gifts as sleds, rocking-horses, etc., should be placed where the chair usually stands. Let some one have special charge of the arrangements. When all is ready, the bell may be rung, as at dinner time, and the household called together. In this way the older folks may share the surprises and pleasures with the younger.

Let me whisper a word or two more to my young readers before I lay down my pen. Perhaps you are happy; perhaps you have all that you can wish to make your cup of joy run over; but stop and think a moment. Do not you know some one who may be less fortunate; whose Christmas will be empty and dreary, unless some one else (which may be you) brightens it? Remember even in your gladness that "it is more blessed to give than to receive." The giving of one little token to some poor little child will bring you much additional joy. Try it.—American Agriculturist.

We wish that more women considered it a religious duty to dress simply for church. A few set a noble example in this matter, but there needs to be concerted action in order to bring about any general reform. Showy apparel in the Lord's house not only indicates very poor taste on the part of the wearer, but it distracts weak-minded worshipers, and deters some in straightened circumstances from attendance altogether. One of the most impressive sights in the cathedrals of the old country is the poor peasant and high-born dame kneeling together, clad in simple black. But uniformity, either in color or style, is not necessary, or even desirable. We plead only for what is so unostentatious as to attract no special attention, and will not awaken feelings either of envy or discouragement in those who have little of this world's goods.—Ex.

Hypnotism.

The term "hypnotism" is coined from the Greek word hypnos, signifying sleep. It is self-explanatory. A "subject" susceptible to the power of the hypnotizer becomes his automatic machine. For the time being, the subject is not endowed with the liberty of his mental faculties. His individual will is slave to that of his hypnotizer. He does not intelligently see or hear. He is free to move, yet, being destitute of will power, is unable to do so, until thus commanded by the master of his will. Temporarily, his is a dream existence. He is in an hypnotic sleep, which lasts from a few minutes to a quarter of an hour or longer. While in this condition, he is entirely unconscious of his startling—ofttimes highly ridiculous—actions. The hypnotizer makes his subject discern the most ferocious of beasts in the inanimate chair before him. In sanguine faith he accepts from him the proffered broom-stick and paper-knife as effective weapons of defense.

At sight of this, the skeptic exclaims, "Possum!"—that the hypnotizer and his victim are conniving with each other. But the hypnotizer dispels further doubt by making the sleep so profound that cataleptic tetanus of the muscular system takes place. In such a case the physiological department of the subject is almost miraculous. A limb, an arm, or half the body, may be tetanized, and made to act entirely independent of its complement. When the whole body has been tetanized it will maintain the most trying of positions for many minutes; positions which the professional athlete would find it extremely difficult to assume. The tetanized subject is utterly oblivious to the pain and discomfort of his awkward postures. At all events, in this instance, the behavior of the subject is genuine.

Should there yet remain a possibility of fraud, it is effectually eliminated by hypnotic experiments on animals. The simplest and best known instance of hypnotism in animals is the experiment first described, more than two centuries ago, by the noted Jesuit, Father Athanasius Kircher, of Fulda, Germany. In his work, published in 1646 at Rome, under the title, Ars magna Lucis et Umbræ, he describes this experiment, under the heading of Experimentum Mirabile de Imaginatione Gallinæ, or experiment on the marvelous imagination of the hen.

* * * * *

Frogs have also been hypnotized, but in a somewhat different manner. A frog is not specially affected by being placed on his back—he promptly turns over and leaps off. Dr. Lewissohn, of Berlin, however, found that by firmly tying the feet, and then putting the frog on his back, he would remain in that position, even after the thread had been cut. He then lies still, as if robbed of his will, as if he had lost all the little intelligence he possessed, or as if sleeping with open eyes; indeed, he is in hypnosis. Special physiological experiments convinced Dr. Lewissohn that the result is due to an effect on the sensory nerve-fibres, distributed in the skin of the frog, at the point where it was tied.

In Czermak's experiments on chickens, he sometimes changed the position of the head, raising or lowering it by gentle force, and the bird would not only follow the motion as if the neck were of yielding wax, but would retain the position given as if the neck, after the hand was withdrawn, were of iron. This is clearly the condition of catalepsy, as has been seen in studying experiments on the human subject.

By gentle, but unyielding force, assisted by certain actions on sensory nerves of the skin, greatly facilitated by a definite, very near, bright object, on which the eyes are fixed, birds and other animals readily fall into a state of apparent sleep. While in this sleep they lose their will of voluntary motion, and even disregard noise that, in a normal state, would greatly frighten them. They are in a state of hypnosis, from which they gradually recover, and which they assume with more readiness at each successive time.—Christian Weekly.

EATON—Died, in great peace and in the full assurance of future bliss and immortal glory, at her home, in Franklin parish, La., on October 9, 1889, in the sixty-sixth year of her age, Mrs. MARGARET EATON (nee Williams). Her parents settled in this country in 1815, when what is now Franklin parish was a part of Catahoula parish—in Burnt Prairie, near Bœuff river. Of this family there were six sons and three daughters—all lived to mature age. Their father lived to see them all members of the Methodist Church except one, who joined the Baptist Church, and died in the faith thereof. Their mother died some years prior to their father. After the death of their mother, Sister Eaton, being the eldest daughter, assumed the care and responsibility of the family and household affairs, which duties she performed to the satisfaction of all and credit to herself during her father's life.

Sister Eaton joined the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, and was happily and soundly converted to God in the fifteenth year of her age, and lived a consistent Christian life till her death. She was ever faithful and true to her church vows and the performance of every Christian duty. The writer has been acquainted with her for thirty-seven years, and often have I heard her talk in class meetings, experience meetings and love-feasts of her hopes and fears, prospects and expectations, and she always expressed unwavering faith in her acceptance. She was never despondent, but always hopeful, and disposed to look on the bright side of every subject. She never murmured or complained of her misfortunes and sore trials; but when these things befell her, in answer to the condolence of her friends, she would say, "It is all for the best."

About two weeks before her death the writer was preaching in her neighborhood, and at the close of the service she met him at the pulpit, took him by the hand, and, with streaming eyes, said: "My race is nearly ended. I am on my way to heaven and I expect soon to be in the paradise above." The writer never saw her afterwards. Her last intelligent words were: "I am ready to go; I have no fears of death." As it was said by one in the early history of Methodism, so it may be said now—"Our people die well."

Sister Eaton was a good neighbor to all, and especially to the sick and distressed. It is the universal exclamation of all who knew her, "She was a good woman!" A. W. MOORE.

RUBLE—SARAH H. RUBLE, wife of George Ruble, died at Vaucleave, Miss., August 16, 1889, aged twenty-eight years, sixteen months and fourteen days. Sister Ruble joined the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, in 1876, under the ministry of Rev. L. R. Roberts. She was a devoted mother, loving wife and an excellent neighbor. It is said of her that she was very kind to orphan children. She was useful and bid fair to be more useful to Mt. Pleasant Church. She was a fine-looking woman, very cheerful and genial in her manner. Those who knew her learned to love her. She leaves a husband and five children to mourn for her, and a host of relatives.

Yes, Sister Ruble is gone; her pew is vacant in Mt. Pleasant Church; her voice is no longer heard in the congregation, singing, "Oh, I will be there," but is singing, "Oh, I am here." There is no one to make the home of Bro. Ruble happy; there is no mother now to comfort the little ones, and hear their little prayers and put them snugly to bed these cold winter nights and kiss them good-night. May God's blessings ever be upon Bro. Ruble and those precious children! May God take care of the two little girls, and may all the children be brought safe home to heaven, and then they will see mamma.

M. L. WHITE, P. C.

CASSITY—MRS. MARY L. CASSITY died in Birmingham, Ala., October 12, 1889, in the seventy-eighth year of her age, surrounded by loving children, grandchildren and great-grandchildren. Mrs. Cassity was one of the Leftwichs, of Virginia, one of the oldest and most influential families in the State. For the last five years of her life she was an invalid from paralysis. These last years were made comfortable and happy by the devotion of her three daughters.

She was an active and honored member of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, for nearly fifty years. The Sunday-school was her favorite field of labor. Her home, her heart and her purse were ever open to the poor and helpless, her hands ever ready to nurse the sick and minister to the wants of the needy. Many a poor orphan child was fed and clothed by her bounty; many a struggling man and woman owe their start in life to her aid and sympathy. During the war she devoted her time and means to the service of her country, spending months in the hospitals, asking no reward and receiving none save the consciousness of duty performed. After the battle of Shiloh, she went on the battlefield and ministered to the wounded and dying. She mingled freely among the enemy (making herself known as a Mason's widow), obtaining many necessaries and comforts for the wounded Confederates. Hers was truly a useful life—useful at home, in the church and among the poor. She died—full of years and of honor, and has gone to reap her reward. She has entered into the "rest that remains for the people of God." "Our loss is her gain." God grant that we may all meet in that bright world where partings are unknown! DAUGHTER.

TALLEY—Died, on Thursday, October 24, at his residence in Hattiesburg, JOHN TALLEY, Sen., aged fifty-five years. Deceased was born in St. Tammany parish, La., September 24, 1834, and died as above stated, at his residence in Hattiesburg, Perry county, Miss. The demise of such a man creates a vacuum in the church and in society that can not readily be filled. Words are inadequate to eulogize such a character; one that combined all the graces of the Christian and as free from fault as commonly falls to the lot of frail mortality. Though modest and retiring by nature, Bro. Talley was nevertheless firm in his purpose, steadfast in faith, serving the Lord—letting his light shine in all the relations of life. Joining the Methodist Church at the early age of sixteen years, and professing religion two years after, he learned to bear the yoke in his youth, and, at intervals, filled with credit to himself, and usefulness to the church, the several offices of class leader, steward and Sunday-school superintendent.

His affliction was protracted for months and often exceeding painful, but was marked with patient resignation and abiding comfort drawn from the precious promises of God. No marvel, that such a life would end in triumph over death. The closing scene of Bro. Talley's life justifies us in apostrophizing with David: "Mark the perfect man, and behold the upright, for the end of that man is peace."

HUNT—CRAWFORD D., son of Bennett Hunt and Harriet H. Weaver was born in Alabama, July 21, 1854; came to Louisiana when about seventeen years of age, and finished his earthly pilgrimage at Atlanta, Winn parish, September 25, 1889. Bro. Hunt was married to Mattie A. Barr, January 11, 1875, who, with five children, are left to mourn the loss of a tender husband and affectionate father.

He joined the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, when but a boy, and ever afterward remained true to her interests. He loved his own church, but had a brotherly feeling for the good of all other churches. He was an official member for many years, and was the best collector as steward within the bounds of our circuit. He was liberal with his own means, and urged others to the support of the gospel. Bro. Hunt was a fine singer, and his place as leader in vocal music is hard to fill. He was specially blessed in a revival meeting which closed but a few days before his death. Though called suddenly away, and in the midst of his usefulness, we feel satisfied of his readiness to meet the summons. We expect to hear his melodious voice again singing among the redeemed in glory. J. F. W.

GORTON—The following resolutions were adopted by the Waterproof (La.) Sunday-school:

Whereas, In the providence of God the Waterproof Sunday-school has been deprived of a good member, and a life-long friend, by the death of our Bro. JOSEPH GORTON, late a member of our society; therefore, be it

Resolved, That we deplore our loss and deeply feel the want his absence details upon us; that we covenant to follow his bright example of a Christian life that shines as a "light along the shore;" that we tender our condolence to the many bereaved, and join them in the prayer that we may all meet him where "congregations ne'er break up;" that a copy of these proceedings be furnished the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE.

The American Octopus.

BY B. J. SAGE, ESQ.

Having now mainly disposed of the general subject, exhibiting the vice uncloaked; and showing the absurdity and wickedness of its being ensconsed in the organic law of Louisiana, as an institution of government; and of the so-called "franchise" of what that organic law itself characterizes as a "vice," being "imbedded" therein, as the so-called company boasts and advertises; and having, furthermore, fairly indicated the duty of the State in the premises, I proceed to ask,

WHAT CAN THE OTHER STATES DO?

Each has, and is responsible for, the proper use of the plenary police power described. Those commissioned to act should knew and feel that "government is a trust," as the last-cited court says; and that the beneficiaries of the trust are God's human beings—his immortal souls; and that, therefore, the execution must be in accordance with their moral nature—to improve, and not deprave. Each State should pass stringent penal laws against the surreptitious lottery dealings; should require the lower courts, grand juries, and States-attorneys to take cognizance of the subject at every session; should take some action on the inducements to violate the law—lottery advertisements, for instance; should confiscate all prizes; and if the criminal escape to enjoy his unlawful gains abroad, provide for his extradition. Moreover, the States, as such, should all intercede with Louisiana to stop up the head-spring of the ever-flowing and ever-widening iniquity; and let all the people, in all the States, memorialize the people of Louisiana, and her government, to cease invading their States, violating their laws, and depraving and criminalizing their citizens. And, finally, let States and people address the Federal government on the subject; and instruct their senators and representatives to take constitutional steps, and pass constitutional laws, to prevent the said government from longer being a propagator of, and an accomplice in, (especially as to mail service), the vice and criminality referred to.

We now come to the question:

WHAT CAN THE GENERAL GOVERNMENT DO?

This being, perhaps, the most important one in the discussion, if not the most interesting.

Uncle Sam is presumed, by law, to intend what his action necessarily effects; hence he is an accomplice of the evil-doers referred to, in helping them to invade, unlawfully and criminally, all the other States. If the said communities united, as they must have done, for the common defense, they have signally failed in their purpose, if their instrumentality for it can be used to thwart their efforts in defending the health and morality of their people. Uncle Sam can, if he choose, carry disease and death to both body and soul; and the officials of the States can not stop him at their borders, and nullify his acts. Hence he himself must, in duty, say: "I am their agent, as well as friend and benefactor, charged with defense and not attack; and I must not violate the laws they make (under their police power) to defend their public safety, morality and health; for to do so would be worse than to turn inward upon the people the batteries for defense planted on the outer walls of their union. This vicious creature is ever riding with me, just as a highwayman might have done with Uncle Tony Weller, to the scene of the intended crime; and its undoubted purpose is to scatter the seeds of vice and death for its gain. I have become a carrier and, in some degree, an instrument of a most pernicious evil; and it seems that I ought to refuse these mail facilities to a business, the special object of which is vice and immorality. What is my power, right and duty?"

In answering this question, it is well to consider, at the outset, that power and duty are coupled, correlative, and commensurate; and duty, in the nature of things, necessitates conscientious judgment, and discrimination between good and bad, virtue and vice, safety and danger, and the innocuous and the pernicious. All public functionaries of States should recognize the line between virtue and vice; especially should legislators do so, their duty being to make rules of action for all the subjects of the law. They must require all conduct of affairs to be on the right side. They know what tends to public order, health and morals and what does not. They know that a mercantile, manufacturing, mining, canal, railroad, telegraph, literary, charitable, educational, or religious company may properly be put in a continuing charter, and left free, because engaged in legitimate business, which is not injurious to public safety, morals, or health; while companies for prostitution, gambling, burglary, or thieving, or those that carry on slaughtering, making of explosives, chemicals and manures, drug-vending, grog-selling, etc., must, because of their constant influence on public safety, health, and morals, be kept under continuous control, ceaseless vigilance, and unremitting duty. Such is the field of the State police power.

When making and executing laws within the Federal sphere, the legislators and officers of the Federal government, being likewise members, citizens and agents of the States, are to make the same moral discrimination in using their powers that the home agents of the States do in using theirs. They read in the "Federalist" (No. 46) that "Federal and State" officers are "but different agents and trustees of the people," and they know that no one State can create and send entities and artificial persons into all the other States, exempt from their rightful prohibitions; and they knew, too, that they must make laws to carry and control mail matter, and must handle and sort it, excluding the unfit and the unsafe—must, in short, provide for proper, and prevent improper, use of mails; and that already, by law, they exclude obscene and other immoral matter; and they naturally suppose that, as thirty-five States have prohibited lottery traffic as immoral, it is a Federal duty to avoid forcing on them, through the mail service, what they prohibit, and to prevent the abuse and prostitution, against them, of this great blessing. And it is a monstrous proposition that Uncle Sam can hide vice and criminality in his mail-pouch, and thereby carry and force them into a State, despite her police power, which she has, in duty, exercised in prohibiting them. If an independent State rightfully forbid a thing within her boundaries which another State persists in doing or causing, the former can treat it as a casus belli. But for the Federal pact, Louisiana's aggression could be so met now. The teaching of "Augusta v. Earle," as well as common sense, is that the questions covered and closed by our Federal system were interstatal until they became constitutional, and were subject to the jus gentium; and, in this case, it does not matter whether the objectionable thing belongs to a citizen of Louisiana, a corporation of that State, or the State herself. And, even if she be a shareholder, a partner, or the sole owner of a gambling institution, her Statehood gives her no advantage, for according to "Murray v. Charleston," as well as to reason, when she leaves governmental, and comes down to common business (either legitimate or gambling), she leaves her sovereignty behind. So that, while I contend for the principle that the Federal power can go into States only in cases provided for in the written law, I submit that, as to the Federal mail power, the holders of it must act with Federal mind and conscience and oath. Exemptions from what States constitutionally prohibit are undeniable State rights. And if the Federal government does not take cognizance, ex-officio, of State prohibitions, which are affected by its duties, notifications should be provided for. If the State's prohibition of what is vicious, immoral, obscene, dangerous, hurtful to health, etc., can be violated with impunity by evil-doers from a distant State, with the connivance, help and protection of the offended State's own Federal power, it is evident that "the house is divided against itself!" But I pass from the subject, aiming to suggest mercly, so far as the great constitutional question is concerned.

I conclude that Federal duty must be done under the Federal oath, and with the Federal mind and conscience; and that the Federal Legislature is in duty bound to prohibit the use of the mail to obscenity, indecency, vice, immorality, fraud, crime, etc.; and that modes can be devised to execute such laws, consistently with other rights and duties.

A seeming difficulty was raised at this point by some excellent State-rights' men in a recent House debate. They protested against lottery-dealing being called vice, immorality, etc., and being treated as such, because Louisiana's sovereignty has stamped it otherwise. There is no ground for the protest. 1. In the first place, Louisiana herself characterizes the business, in her aforesaid Article 172, as a "vice," concerning which Gov. McEnery said, in his message. "The Constitution declares gambling to be a vice;" and spoke of this lottery business as the "vice, in its worst form." Gov. Nicholls, in his former and his present term, took the same view; and the legislative and the judicial departments are so on record. Look, too, at the characterizations, heretofore given, of the Supreme Federal Court. 2. It is, on the face of it, an absurdity that the moral judgment and freedom of speech of forty-one States shall be governed by the fiat of one, or sixty million people by one million. 3. This exceptional and exceptionable thing is thought by many to be the offspring of stratagem and venality, and not entitled to any consideration whatsoever. To sustain this, much strong circumstantial and moral evidence exists.

In conclusion, I beg leave to say that the principles of Louisiana should not be judged by this iniquity, this "thorn in the flesh." Article 172, and Act 44 of 1879, exhibit her real intent, which the evil being has ever fought, a l'outrance. The fifty-two members of her Convention, that steadily opposed the iniquity, represented nine-tenths of the respectability, the property, and the mental and moral force of the State.

Just now she is peculiarly subject to temptation, and is timely and sorely tempted. The octopus is rumored to have proposed, or intended to propose, thus: "Hold a convention; give us a charter for fifty years; we will pay your debt of $13,000,000; and with the aid of Uncle Sam, whom we can count on, our tentacles can suck the most of it from the other States. It will bring wealth home, and make times easy, and money plenty." If there be a proposition, or if one be made, its express and implied terms, or inferences, will be found to be nearly as here suggested.

Meanwhile, some new ideas are being imported and added to our "political science," e. g.: "It is the best policy to recognize irrepressible evils, regulate them by law, and make them pay revenue. In this way we can minimize their harm, and make them support education, charity," etc. Thinkers, who keep in view the line of demarkation between virtue and vice, above referred to, will probably keep on thinking, as follows: "Why not extend the good, and make vice and crime free us from taxes, and not only aid charity and education, but religion? Why not make intemperance and debauchery build churches, and pay the clergy? If we incorporate burglars, bullies, bawds, bunco-men and beggars, regulating them by law, and giving them monopolies, and make them pay the real value of such 'institutions' and 'franchises,' we shall not only 'minimize' these 'irrepressible evils,' but utilize the companies as police, to suppress all low competition; pay all our debts without oppressing the people; stop taxation, and make government (which is generally thought an evil) as free and beneficent as dew, rain, and sun!"

I submit that legislation is on the right side only when it takes cognizance of vices, immoralities, and crimes, to mitigate, suppress, and punish.

And in this last great struggle with her monster evil, Louisiana is in sore need of both human and divine pity and aid. Chained to physical and moral corruption, and absorbing virus in both body and soul, she has greater reason than had the Roman prisoner for the agonizing cry: "Who shall deliver me from the body of this death?"

Home Missions.

BY REV. S. S. KEENER.

In your editorial on "Home Mission Work" you make assertions which are far from the facts, namely: that there is no practical mission work in our Conference, and that the $1,250 collected for that purpose is divided out to supplement the salaries on weak circuits in the six districts. In five districts of the Louisiana Conference there is a region where there would be no preaching unless an itinerant or local preacher was sent there by this missionary appropriation. There is territory in this district which is wholly dependent on this fund for the gospel, and will be dependent on this for years to come.

What constitutes a mission field? A place where Methodism is unknown, and where we can make a lodgment and spread the kingdom of the Lord, is a mission field, as far as our church is concerned. If such a region has no regular ministry, no organized churches, surely it is a full-fledged mission field; and if our ministers succeed in such regions, we are bound to call such appropriations as just and proper.

Now, there are just such places in each district of the Louisiana Annual Conference. They are reported and considered at every Annual Conference, and they are so represented in the cabinet, and men are appointed to them as missions. There is territory in this Conference that will remain as missionary for years, for the people are poor, and have been poor for years back, and, in all probability, will be poor for years to come; and if you were to send a star preacher to them, they would be no more self-supporting, as a circuit, when this educated, highly brilliant divine finished a quadrennium there, than when he began.

Do not assert a fact that all our domestic missionary money is misappropriated because one or two preachers' salaries are supplemented by it, or because you have forgotten the missions in the various districts. Furthermore, you will find that the amount collected for domestic missions has been gradually increasing for four years past. When, ten years ago, this fund was divided out, it was barely $700; last year it had grown to $1,250.

Now, is it just or righteous to leave fields destitute of the gospel, and appropriate the whole fund to, say, two appointments, just because the two may eventually make self-supporting circuits; and these other regions are made up of poor people unable to support a preacher? While there is a fine opening on this district (the Opelousas) for building a good circuit along the railroad by appropriating a large fund and sending a first-class preacher, yet there are other places which must be bereft of all preaching by this action. Shall these poor go on in their state and die unsaved, because the regions next door are better off and will eventually prove self-sustaining circuits?

The source from whence you obtain your information is either wholly unreliable or so prejudiced that they can not give the truth, for there are five presiding elders who can point you out pure and simple missions to which appropriations were made, places considered as such and named as such in the cabinet.

Now, as to centralizing this fund—say, appropriating it to two or three appointments, and disregarding the claims of these poor people who have no gospel—in the very outset the unanswerable difficulty meets you when you ask, Have you the man to suit this especial work? This Conference has not men enough to meet the natural and steady development of the circuits that ought to be divided into two. Where are your men? The filling of the regular appointments that will support their pastors is a task both difficult and perplexing. How, then, can these unusual undertakings be managed? There can be no such men found in our Conference, for the demand for preachers is beyond the supply; and, then, you know this kind of work is not sought after by our class of transfers—that is, those who have usually come to our Conference. If you can find enough men to meet our present demand, and these men suitable to missionary work, or the rapid development of missions into self-sustaining circuits, then a new plan might be inaugurated by turning out all these poor who can never make self-supporting circuits, and take charge of prosperous communities which have mere hope of soon returning the funds expended on them. That might strike some of our business men as more remunerative; but how it would appear to the Master is the question. The Lord might look upon the matter as to the greatest number having the gospel preached unto them, and not in the light of the greatest number of circuits formed.

WHAT MIGHT BE DONE.

BY CHARLES MACKAY.

What might be done if men were wise,
What glorious deeds, my suffering brother,
Would they unite
In love and right,
And cease their scorn of one another.

Oppression's heart might be imbued
With kindling drops of loving kindness,
And knowledge pour
From shore to shore,
Light on the eyes of mental blindness.

All slavery, warfare, lies and wrongs,
All vice and crime might die together,
And fruit and corn,
To each man born,
Be free as warmth in summer weather.

The saddest wretch that ever trod,
The deepest sunk in guilt and sorrow,
Might stand erect,
In self-respect,
And share the teeming world to-morrow.

What might be done? This might be done,
And more than this, my suffering brother;
More than the tongue
E'er said or sung,
If men were wise and loved each other.

Thoughts on Finances.

BY REV. T. B. HOLLOMAN.

Just at this time no thoughts have so ...rbed me as those which pertain ...to the finances—the collections which ...re ordered by the Conference, and ...on which I am to make report in a ...w days. If there is anything that ...ll wake a fellow up and make him ...ve lively, it is the fact that Confer...ce is close at hand, and the finances ...behind; for it is a well-known fact ...at success or failure in this direction ...largely the basis upon which judg...ent is passed upon the work of a ...other. In everything else his work ...ay be most excellent; but if he fails ...answer well to the collections, his ...neral average is greatly reduced. ...is ought not so to be. While in ...me instances the preacher may be ...rgeable with indifference, I verily ...lieve in the great majority of cases ...at honest, earnest efforts are made to ...ng up the assessments in full. The ...th of the matter is, with the multi...ied collections upon us, the preacher ...rdly hears his appointment until he ...gins to plan for his collections; so ...enters upon his work under fear ...d embarrassment on this score. With ...e four standing collections, and what ...extras are usually ordered by the ...rious Conference Boards, we have ...average of six or more collections ...on us, besides what is given into the ...nds of the presiding elder to look ...er. To those who serve the stations ...e matter is not so embarrassing; but ...perience has taught me that a col...tion every other time you preach to ...congregation is far from being pleas...t. And this is necessarily the case ...th brethren on circuits, or what is ...ually disagreeable, the giving out of ...ds or the taking subscriptions which ...st be finally looked after with as ...ch vigilance as the tax gatherers of ...d. Every preacher has found that it ...much easier to take subscriptions ...an to get the cash. Storms, rains, ...ouths, most any excuse serves to ...validate a subscription.

I prefer the translation in the New ...rsion of Acts vi, 2, where the clause ...rendered: "It is not fit (or marginal ...leasing") that we should forsake the ...ord of God and serve tables." Truly, ...is neither pleasing to preacher nor ...ple, nor do I think it well for the ...urch to lay so much stress upon money as to make it appear as the chief work of the minister of the gospel. If the church would get the best work out of its preachers, they should relieve them of this great embarrassment; free them from everything that would hinder them in their pastoral or pulpit work. Let the stewards take this matter in hand as they do all the other finances of the church. Under the present system there is often rivalry between the stewards and the pastor. The one intent only upon the "pastor's salary," and the other intent only upon the collections; whereas the honor and standing of the church is equally involved in both. Let the stewards make one fund, including all monies for every purpose, and then upon this base the assessment of the individual members, taking out of their collections the percentage due the various causes. In this way many pay to these causes in proportion to their ability who will contribute but little under the present plan, and many pay something who would otherwise plead inability to pay more than assessed. I think this is a matter worth looking into by our Boards of Stewards. I have served one church where the plan worked admirably and successfully, and I know of one church on a circuit in the Mississippi Conference where, by this plan, every assessment was easily met, and a surplus reported. It is only reasonable to suppose that the men who compose our various Boards, as business men, are working to accomplish some necessary end; and when they send down their requests to the people, should be accepted as honest statements of their needs, and should be so met by the church. This recognized, then adopt the above plan, and we will get the money desired for the work more easily than by the present plan. I do not know that we need any legislation especial upon this point; only let the Boards of Stewards act.

This, Mr. Editor, is not written as an excuse. I shall have everything in full, and to spare, at our approaching Conference.

The Study of the Greek Testament.

BY T. C.

For a long time it was the belief that as the Bible was an inspired book, there ought to be, in the nature of things, but one source from which its teachings could be gotten. People lost sight of the fact that the Bible has a human as well as a divine side, and so were led to reject many things which are now known to be necessary to a right interpretation of it. God wastes no miracles. After the Holy Spirit had inspired men to write the Book, it was left in men's keeping. Hence it is that while the Bible is the Word of God, it is, at the same time, not exempt from the errors of translators, nor the mistakes of transcribers. From this we see the need of studying it in the original. In this article we shall confine ourselves to the New Testament.

The text of the Greek Testament is the most trustworthy record with which modern scholarship has had to do. It is a significant fact that very few of the manuscripts of classic authors are older than, or even as old as, those of the New Testament; while for the number and variety of its manuscripts, the New Testament stands without a rival. Counting all, there are nearly eighteen hundred, containing, some, a large, others, a very small, part. At first glance, these eighteen hundred more or less complete texts, with their one hundred thousand or more different readings, would seem to defy any attempt to reduce to unity. Such, however, is not the case. In textual criticism, the more there is from which to choose, the more firmly may the result obtained be relied on. We have many illustrations of a lack of sufficient basis for criticism in classic authors. Take, for example, Æschylus. With what delight would students hail some fragment, ever so small, that would throw light upon some of the many obscure passages in the Agamemnon! But such a discovery has not yet been made, and until it is the most sublime poet of Greece must suffer at the hands of modern conjecturers, and students must lose much of the beauty and power of the "poet of the gods." Bearing this in mind, we see that the great number and variety of readings, instead of indicating uncertainty, are, on the contrary, the very elements of genuineness. Hence the fears brought about by the discovery of new manuscripts were groundless, since these discoveries were the best possible means by which the truth of the record could be most firmly established. In this connection we are led to ask, Should not our young ministers study the Greek Testament? By many this question will be set aside with possibly but this notice, "What's the use of Greek now?" To this class of objectors the answer is made that it is not so much the object to study the Greek in the Testament as the Testament in the Greek. As far as mere language is concerned, the pages of Plato afford better and purer Greek than do the writings of Paul; while, for purity of diction, Xenophon outstrips any of the evangelists. The fact that the New Testament was originally written in Greek, of itself, constitutes a sufficient reason for its careful study in that language. There is nothing more certain than that thought loses its beauty and force in proportion as it is expressed in a language more or less removed from the thinker's own. This we are forced to admit as true even when we presuppose verbal accuracy. However true the translator may be to the letter of the text, in very many instances he falls far short of its spirit. When we couple these two—the dissipation of the energy of thought and the mistakes of the translator—we have, indeed, sustained a loss. Of course, we are not to hold the translators of the Authorized Version guilty on either of these points. That, with the material at hand, they did the best that could be done, no one can dispute; but, at the same time, we are not to forget that since their time a great advance has been made in biblical research, for the proper use of which we are responsible.

In this day we appreciate anything that approximates to an authority. The New Testament, having been originally written in Greek, that language necessarily affords a standard more nearly absolute than any we can otherwise arrive at. In all living languages, words and phrases are constantly changing their meaning—this very change constituting their life. Such, however, is not the case with a dead language. As it dies, so it remains—a striking illustration of an analogous law in the spiritual world. The Greek Testament means exactly what it meant fifteen hundred years ago, while its English version does not, in many instances, mean what it meant two hundred and fifty years ago.

Having briefly given a few reasons why such a study should be undertaken, let us now consider the feasibility of it. There are two suppositions which arise. The first is, that the preacher has a fair knowledge of classic Greek. The Greek of the New Testament belongs to the age of the decline of everything Greek, and, like all else, partook of the corruption of its time. If one is familiar with the classics alone, the Greek of the Alexandrian age will seem somewhat strange to him. In another light it may not be so unfamiliar as might be supposed. The reader of New Testament Greek is constantly meeting old acquaintances in the shape of mistakes he used to make. How often has the use of a participle in the very construction he sees before him been condemned as "late Greek" by his professor? The careless use of the relative will often recall to him references to his grammar. The vocabulary, too, will have changed. He will find many words possessing a far deeper and more elevated meaning than ever they had in the classics; and, needless to say, he will find very many words possessing not a vestige of classic authority. These are some of the peculiarities that will be met; but, after a little practice, one becomes reconciled to such a state of affairs, and need have very little trouble in making a thorough study of the Greek Testament.

The second supposition is, that the young man knows no Greek at all. That there are such men in the ministry is a great fault. For such an one, the only resort is to study it. New Testament or classical? To study the former would be of comparatively little value, since about the only way of doing it would be to take the Greek text, and learn from the English. In other words, he would simply go in a circle, and land at the place from which he started.

Again, one of the benefits lies in what may be termed comparative word-study—that is, taking a word as used in classic authors, and following its history until we come to its transferred sense in New Testament writers. This is only one of many beautiful lines of study which could not be followed by him that knows New Testament Greek only. Hence the best plan is to have a course in the classics.

To argue want of time, inability, or any such excuse, is to forget the immortal examples of Kitto and Schliemann, and a host of such men who, in spite of poverty and scant opportunities for education, found time and perseverance, in the midst of lives spent in the fight for daily bread, to raise themselves to pre-eminence in studious research.

Coupled with this array of excuses from the young men themselves, comes the old one from the people in regard to the education of ministers. Well, the income of the average preacher amounts to about this: his living, and what he learns. As the former is not oftentimes superfluous, then let him have as much learning as he has capacity for.

No doubt the four years' course already prescribed by Conference, together with hard work at a station, or on a circuit, precludes much outside work; but the little time it does allow would, in the hands of a diligent young man, be productive of great benefit. "But," some one will say, "what's the concordance for, and what is the object of the commentary, if not to supply all this?"

Now, it is not the spirit of this article to throw discredit upon any such helps as these, but, on the contrary, to urge their constant use; but, at the same time, we must remember that without a spiritual insight into the meaning, these things, which might be so helpful, can but become merely mechanical. Perhaps it has never occurred to some people that a diligent study of God's Word, accompanied by the enlightening influence of the Holy Spirit, constitutes the best commentary that can be had.

A few words to the young ministers themselves: There is nothing further outside the bounds of controversy than that you are expected to study the Bible more and understand it better than the people to whom you preach. How this expectation can find an excuse is not clear to many minds. Such is, nevertheless, the case. People expect more, in every way, of their preacher than they do of anyone else. He must possess all the good qualities, and in the superlative degree. In so judging they unconsciously approximate to the estimate that God himself puts upon the calling.

You will, in a measure, have to think for your people. How often has this been heard: "It's not my business to study the Bible; I pay the preacher to do that?" Leaving the duty of the laity out of the question, there can be no doubt that if any man is to understand the Word of God, the preacher is the man. To be able to acquit yourselves of this trust necessitates that you should use the best method of study available, together with all diligence. The Greek Testament fulfills the first condition, and, in its proper study, opens up an unlimited field for the satisfaction of the second. Rest assured that any outlay in this direction will yield most handsome returns.

Work for Great Workers.

BY C. K. MARSHALL, D. D.

The late numbers of the ADVOCATE have borne evidence of a profound and seer-like solicitude, on the part of many able and godly men in our beloved church, for the fuller evolution of her hidden forces and the wider expansion of her operative instrumentalities. These are gracious indications of growing power for good, and suggestive of the duty of our complete availment of the grand opportunities unfolding at every advance we make in a Christly direction. And the true philosophy of Methodism, next to her orthodox theology, is her capability of adapting men and measures for the accomplishment of her mission, as well as measures and missions for the saving of the lost and the sanctification of the saved. Her government is elastic, yet so rigid as to hold all to a high responsibility, while the paternal care and spiritual kindness so enswathes her administration that none who aim, however feebly, to perform their duty can feel otherwise than under the overshadowings of a divine protectorate. Hence the stirring pens and tongues at this period in view of the obligations of the approaching General Conference.

Your correspondents, dear editor, touch many momentous themes. Perhaps Dr. Black's epitome of Miss Bancroft's excellent book on the "Deaconesses of the Church" is as suggestive of something to do, which in the near future will be done, as any communication you have furnished for our edification. Some weeks since I sent an article, on this theme, to the Nashville Advocate, and designed one for your readers; but now I am glad that I did not, for Dr. Black has done a great service of fact and thought far better than I could have done, and I believe the workers, and men of the times in the next General Conference, will, at least, initiate some measure looking to the employment of the latent, yet matchless force possessed by a large multitude of saintly and noble Dorcases, Phœbes and Priscillas of our vast sisterhood.

Were I able to endow a college, I would endow a deaconess' home. Not a nunnery, not a prison, not a hiding-place for those who need to hide; but an open home for the abode of the approved and trusted to come and go as duty led the way. These should visit the poor, sick, afflicted and dying, and minister, as only woman can, to the wretched and crushed, the heavy-laden and sad. No pastor—except in a mere village or country neighborhood—can begin to meet all these necessities, and give himself to study, and the nameless calls and duties that devolve upon him.

But, by all means, I trust your readers will obtain a copy of Miss Bancroft's book. She is a Ph.D. (a Doctor of Philosophy), and the daughter of a loved and honored Methodist clergyman, and herself one of the most artless, modest, eloquent and learned women of this brilliant age, and worships lovingly at the altar where her venerable father gave her in baptism to God, whom she faithfully tries to honor.

Now, a word on a matter near my own heart. Look over the wide field of our work, and consider the thousands of converts that have recently crowded to the ranks of our Southern Methodism. Thousands come into our great bosom who have never read the Bible, never prayed, know nothing of theology, Christian growth, church usages, history, work, and communion—nothing of the duties required of young converts, nor of their trials, temptations, perils, and possibilities. "Well, what would you do for them?" Why, I would put into their hands the best written, freshest, and most inspiring and cheapest pamphlets, of from one to fifty pages, the genius, talent, learning and piety the church could produce. At a revival meeting, at a Sam Jones' universal convocation, I would have them scattered among the people. They should be fitted to every form and shape of moral and spiritual inquiry; to the refutation of every allegation of the haters of God against his law and gospel. They should cover all the ground possible that the exigencies of the time and place might demand; and they should be used in all the church in all places the year round.

There are tracts that are tracts, indeed. Even now there be thousands of good ones. But there is no system of issuing, nor any of distributing them. Perhaps, better call them by some other name—"Splinters of the Cross," "Reading for the Hour," "Leaves of Life," "Thoughts for Inquirers"—anything; only call them into life and give them a field to live in.

Let every church have a church guild for the spread of Christian literature, and make a monthly payment of a nickel or more the condition of membership. Let the funds be sent to the Publishing House monthly; get the best and best of the family of new and useful, or old and tried publications, and scatter them freely over your village, or in the wards of your city; and, with funds in hand, Dr. Barbee would be able to run two great presses, day and night, pouring out the "Rays of Light," "Golden Fleece," "Life Studies," or something, by some name, to strike the ear and eye. How I would like to see an able, brief, clear-cut 40-page pamphlet on "Why I am a Methodist," for outsiders, for bigots, for our young converts, for the millions; and one on—but it is needless to say it! Just think of it! Glance at the field and see its wants.

Yes; but I may be told, "Our Advocates and books meet the case." Do they? When? Where? Who says so? No sensible observer of what I am writing about. Here is a wide field calling for cultivation.

Dear brethren, I beg you to consider this matter. But, perhaps, I am all wrong. If so, will not some wise, gentle, and loving brother tell me so, and show a better way? I understand the objections that may be made; but we long for cheap reading that people will buy, can buy, and will read. Books sell at $1, $1 50, and $2. I know millions can not buy them; but a five-cent or a ten-cent little book, in pamphlet form, elegantly done up in the binder's happiest style, will be useful to the poor. What a field! What a call! What a necessity!

O, for a voice loud as the wave
That lashes Lapland's sounding shore!

A Cry from Japan.

Mrs. Bishop Wilson sends to the Nashville Advocate another call from Japan, which we copy.

To the Methodist Episcopal Church, South—

Brethren and Sisters: In the hour of great need we come to you with a subject which lies nearest our hearts, and which also claims your most serious attention. We are placed in special departments of work, which have grown, which have extended, until we realize that there is a pressing necessity for more teachers in Christian schools, for Bible teachers among women, for leaders and organizers of many kinds of work among Japanese women who wish to learn, if they could be taught.

We can only do a part of the necessary work, while many known to us are suffering for want of proper training. Many have asked for teachers from the foreign land. We hoped that some would have come.

The need is great, very great. Few, very few, know what it is to love and cherish that purity and grace of heart which will make them owned and honored of God. How can they learn without an example, and how can we reach further than we have already done? The question now comes from other points, When will the teachers come? Will not schools be opened for us? Will not Christian women come and tell us how to live, how to work, and how to lead others? So we come to plead with you, and to ask that you choose and send out speedily four teachers and six Bible workers to Japan.

Do not say your treasury is not full enough, but call upon the Lord and ask him, and he will give you more than enough for all your need. You have passed the day of small things; you have been blessed in the Master's work during the past, and shall you refuse, can you refuse, to help Japan? God forbid that one Christian heart should refuse to share its joy, its blessing, with these women who have so little, but who will love Jesus if shown the way.

We can not be quiet, for the souls of thousands of heathen women will condemn us in judgment if we deny them the light and life of gospel truth. Hence we, the women of the Japan Mission, affix our names to this appeal, and beg you to consider the necessities of God's work. Many opportunities are passing beyond our reach, and God may hold you and us responsible for them.

Very sincerely and longingly yours,

D. L. LAMBUTH, L. E. NEWTON, M. F. WAINRIGHT, N. B. GAINES, M. B. DUKES, M. J. LAMBUTH.

KOBE, JAPAN, Sept. 7, 1889.

A Critic's View.

Maurice Thompson, in the Independent, of November 7, pays his compliments to Tolstoi and his class in plain speech:

For my part I do not fancy such reformers. We have too many "reformed drunkards," whose faces are still purple with bloat, rushing over the land would-be leaders of temperance work, too many retired gamblers preaching the Word with a "poker" accent, too many "scientific" ministers who lean more heavily upon Darwin than upon God, too many Christian critics who measure all life, in theory, by the yard-stick of this or that so-called philosophy, and last, but far from least, we have too many men and women who write obscene, nasty, putrid books—novels of foul passions and base consummations—and call them "novels with a great moral purpose." The persons and the novels are all of the same piece. Tolstoi confesses that he is an old, satiated, sick-eyed roue who desires to cobble shoes and wear homespun the rest of his life, while he shows the world how to abandon progress, eschew civilization, forsake trade, let crime go unpunished, evil move on unresisted—but meantime he holds very fast to his estates and sells his filthy books at the same old price! So long as Christian people call this Christ-like, so long will Christianity stagger under the weight of its friends.

THE GLORIOUS THREE.

(1. Cor. xiii. 13.)

BY REV. J. S. STONE.

Faith, who sees beyond the portal
Of far heaven with eagle eyes.
Hope forestasting life immortal;
Charity in meekest guise—
Now abide the glorious three.
But the first is Charity.

Faith abideth, there are mountains
She must day by day remove;
By the fair refreshing fountains
Hope abideth; and sweet Love
Standeth, crowned, the twain between,
Very lowly, yet the queen.

So, in view of things eternal,
Rocks of time are overhauled;
So, behold, a beauty vernal
Holies the winter of the world.
But where charity hath trod
Is the path of very God.

Those shall vanish; she remaineth
When our work and life are o'er.
As below, above, she reigneth,
So she shall reign evermore.
Heaven and earth shall pass away—
Love goes ruling on for aye.

Faith and preaching find an ending.
Hope and prayer together cease,
Love and praise together blending.
Know no changing save increase;
When that cry is past—"How long?"
Love takes up an endless song.

Report on Temperance, North Mississippi Conference.

(Ordered published by vote of Conference.)

Your Committee on Temperance beg leave to submit the following report:

We feel that no subject is more vital to the success of the gospel ministry in propagating the blessed truths of Christ and in firmly establishing believers, than that of temperance. We are taught in God's Word to be "temperate in all things." And when we write or speak of temperance in regard to the use or abuse of alcoholic stimulants, we wonder how anyone, who claims to be a follower of the Savior of the world, can for one moment maintain a doubtful attitude in regard to a matter that is agitating the public mind from Maine to California and from the Lakes to the Gulf of Mexico. We believe that no instrumentality in the hands of the arch-fiend of night is more potent for evil than the manufacture, sale and use of intoxicating liquors. It robs men not only of their hard earnings, but of self-respect, and culminates in driving them, like Gadarine swine, to swift and sure destruction. No statistics can convey to us the heart-anguish of the drunkard's wife and the misery of her worse than fatherless offspring. Statistics may approximate the number of those who sell themselves to the demon of intemperance, who have robbed themselves of all life's comforts, dishonored the God who gave them existence, and who, in the end, friendless and penniless, year by year, yield their bloated and dishonored bodies (once the temple of the Holy Ghost) to fill the drunkard's grave. But what statistician will tell us of the number of imbeciles, the number of lunatics, the number of partial paralytics, the number of monstrosities, and the number who come not under any of these heads, but who have entailed on them, if possible, a worse evil than any of these—the desire for strong drink—and who ever feel that when they would arise and assert their manhood, "a galling chain" that drags them from their most ardent aspirations and causes them often to break their best and most solemn vows of reformation. And all because "the sin of the father is visited on the son to the third and fourth generation." We believe that all laudable effort to suppress the manufacture, sale and use of intoxicants, when not coupled with other issues, should receive our most hearty co-operation as a church. We thank God for the Methodist Episcopal Church, South. We return to him devout thanks for calling us from darkness to light, and for giving us a place in this church—a church that has sent forth no uncertain sound, from its organization to the present time, in regard to this great evil. So far as the law of our church is concerned, in regard to the manufacture, sale and use of alcoholic stimulants, we have a clean record before God and man. Your committee do not think it necessary that our General Conference should alter one jot or tittle of our law as it now stands in regard to intoxicating drinks. We believe a proper construction and enforcement of our law would afford us all the relief we need along these lines. We believe that when a member of our church places his name on the petition of a man asking the civil authorities to grant permission for the sale of alcoholic stimulants, that that member of the church becomes particeps criminis to all the misery, drunkenness and death caused by that whisky dealer, and should be so considered. We believe further that in the execution of our law that he should be proceeded against just as we would against a member of the church who is actually engaged in the sale of intoxicants. While we may and do pity the poor man who has a thirst for alcoholic stimulants, whether that taste be acquired or inherent; while we bear with him, plead with and pray for him, there can be no shadow of excuse for the professed follower of Christ, who, of his own volition, places his name side by side with non-professors of Christianity, and with men of every shade and color, on a petition praying the civil authorities to grant the privilege to anyone to murder men and boys, to break the hearts of women, and to beggar and disgrace innocent children. But we thank God a silver lining is beginning to skirt the dark cloud that threatens us, and that is still so dark at many points. Thank God for the unmistakable signs of a "better day to come;" that the day is even dawning! Let us be united in our prayers that the Sun of Righteousness, in all his full-orbed splendor, may dispel every cloud and shadow. But while we pray, let us recognize that we are co-workers together with Christ, and that our Master calls to us from the skies, "Go forward," and that every soldier of the cross is expected to do his part in this great battle of right against wrong. The agitation of this question has resulted in great good. Let us continue to bring it before the people more and more. Let us educate the boys and girls along these lines. Let us teach in public and in private that the sale or use of intoxicants is anti-Christian, debasing and destructive of our best interests. Let us adhere to our church laws, and, in the fear of God, execute them; and the time is not far distant, when the white-winged angel of temperance and peace will claim our land as a permanent abiding-place.

B. F. PHILLIPS, Chairman.

Report of New Orleans Christian Advocate, North Mississippi Conference.

Your Committee on Books and Periodicals, to whom was referred the annual report of the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE, respectfully reports as follows:

They have had said annual report under consideration. They find that the total of subscriptions to that paper in this Conference is 1,236. Of that circulation the number of 180 are renewals, and 556 are new subscriptions, showing the gratifying increase over the circulation of the last year of 736 copies.

Your committee can not emphasize too strongly the policy of pressing the dissemination throughout our membership of this, our special Conference organ. If properly handled, it may easily be one of the most potent factors, not only for the awakening and increasing of the religious sentiment in the hearts of individuals, and in the home circle, but also for the binding of our people together into a phalanx of militant Christians, animated by a singleness of purpose and a consciousness of power, which shall indefinitely augment their capacity for effectual and fruitful work.

We, therefore, recommend that all brethren be yet more zealous for the expansion of this interest, by obtaining new subscribers and renewals of old subscriptions.

We recommend also that the present publishing committee be continued.

Respectfully submitted,

EDWARD MAYES,
Chairman.

The General Rules.

It is conceded that when Mr. Wesley formulated this synopsis of Christian life he embraced nothing therein that is objectionable to the wholesome development of personal piety and to the rapid progress of the gospel. No one has ever objected to the rules on this ground. The only objections that have been raised are (1) that they are too exclusive, not giving sufficient latitude to such as chafe under restraints from worldliness, and (2) that they are not explicit enough. Persons who love pleasure more than they love Christ can not see the righteousness of such restraints, while those who have the law of Christ written in their hearts find these restraints the natural law of their spiritual life.

There is one phase of the General Rules which works a great inconvenience in the execution of law. While the rules are exceedingly specific on some things, they are remarkably obscure in other things, and the very things that are working very serious detriment to our church.

There are some things in our unwritten law that are universally and unconditionally insisted on. The subject of amusements has always been a burden, and is fast becoming a serious burden in our Zion. They are certain things which our church certainly condemns; and yet the very indefiniteness of the law is producing irremediable confusion among us. Our General Conference has been several times memorialized on the subject, and nonconcurrence has been the answer. The dance, the card-table, theatre, circus, and race-course are forbidden by our discipline of unwritten law.

These come under the head of using such diversions as can not be taken in the name of the Lord Jesus. All responsible parties know that those practices are condemned by the church and are considered actionable. Yet there is no written law. When a person is arraigned, they demand the law. There is none. We appeal to the pastoral address of the Bishops. That is only advisory. These things are, or they are not, against our church law. The Discipline ought to give a direct course of proceedings in these things. It can not be pleaded that they are minor considerations. This is false. If there is any one problem that confronts the church, it is how to control the young. And if there is any one thing that is eating out the spiritual vitality of the church more than another, it is worldliness. The way the matter stands now, discord and confusion reigns. Hundreds of our preachers pay no attention to this matter. It is a thing of indifference, and people do as they please and unite with the church with the mental reservation, if not open understanding, of liberty in the matter of worldliness. How can other preachers who want to carry out the law proceed consistent with the opposite usage. There is no uniformity on this vital question. Our law is one, for every class of society, rich or poor, urban or rural, learned or ignorant. Let us have such an adjustment of the law that the course be specific, and let every presiding elder see that every pastor regulate his charge accordingly, and let persons know just what they commit themselves to when they unite with the church. If human nature is so changed that the old regime will not suffice, let us discard the old bags and get new bags for the new wine. If we can inaugurate a new system of discipline which will be more fruitful of personal piety and Christian progress than the one under which Methodism has made her wonderful achievments, by all means let us have it. But for the sake of Christ and the church let us not be hypocritical enough to pretend to endorse our present doctrinal status on the above-named vices, and practice the opposite. We are being swayed and conformed to the Roman and Episcopal Churches too much in this thing. I am not one croaking voice raising a pessimistic wail. The authorities of the church see the trouble, and our Bishops speak out in tones of warning in their last pastoral address in 1886. None but pastors in the close places know how vital this question is becoming. The Discipline has been buried so long that in many places a repulsive stench is produced in raising its bones from the dust. The cancer has been preying so long that in places the body is well-nigh destroyed in healing or killing the disease.

Let the next General Conference be memorialized to formulate a law making the third offense, under the usual precautions, expulsive. Or else obliterate the obligations on preachers to execute any penalty. Then there can be uniformity. Otherwise there can not and will not be uniformity and preachers will not be held responsible.

C. H. OWEN.

New Orleans District.

Seeing in a late number of the Nashville Advocate an editorial on the growth of Methodism in the Nashville district, I am prompted to give a brief synopsis of the last year's work on this district. There have been licensed to preach this year nine preachers; four of whom have been sent to Centenary College to prepare for the itinerancy. Two more have been recommended, and will be licensed and sent to Centenary immediately after the Annual Conference. Besides these, two more are going to Tulane University, in this city, and three apply for admission into Conference, just at hand.

There has been a gross increase of membership of 18⅓ per cent. and a net increase of 12½ per cent. on last year's roll of 2,608 members. All the assessments have been met and some of the collections are overflowing. The preachers' salaries, so far as I am informed, are paid in full, and the presiding elder's claim fully met. One church has been built, one moved, one repaired, and one church enterprise so far advanced that next year the brick walls will be completed, roofed and openings put in. All the churches are out of debt, with one exception.

It may be that other city districts in the connection will do better; but, circumstances considered, no one will doubt that we have done reasonably well.

CHAS. F. EVANS.

Mansfield Female College.

By invitation of the corresponding secretary, the writer attended the meeting of the Young Woman's Christian Association of the college, and "made a talk." Occurring, as it did, at four o'clock P. M., Sunday, December 1, it was pleasant to comply with the request, and allign myself with the movement.

With the watchful and beloved president, and his excellent co-workers, Mrs. Harding and the Misses Padelford, Fulton and Doyle, and the kind matron, Mrs. Magee, and many of the bright and well-mannered girls, I don't know when it has been our fortune to spend a more pleasant hour.

The officers presided with ease and grace. The Scripture verses were well said, the readings and recitations were admirable, and all interminglied with songs from our Standard Hymn Book, constituted a series of exercises truly instructive and edifying. As an adjunct to our college, this association is timely.

Christian womanhood has come to the front. "Our daughters as corner-stones, polished after the similitude of a palace," constitute a leading factor in the civilization and great reformatory movements of this advanced century. The New Testament furnishes this basis of womanhood. Good government, social reform and refinement; indeed, the whole of Christianity finds its fullest expression in her.

Let us educate our own daughters at our own schools, and under the best and most winning religious influences.

From the Work.

COVINGTON CIRCUIT, MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.

MR. EDITOR: As I close my first year in the itinerancy next Sunday, on the Covington circuit, Seashore district, a short resume of my work may prove of interest to some of your readers. This circuit embraces ten appointments, covering an area fifty-six miles long by ten wide. I have traveled 2,256 miles, visited 262 different families; preached 193 times, organized two Sunday-schools, and received fifty-two members into the church. By the grace of God, I have missed but one appointment during the year. I regret to have to report a great deficit in collections ordered by Conference. Though I have prayed and preached, talked and exhorted, I have not been able to raise over twenty per cent. of assessment. While all doors are opened to us, a warm welcome and kind attention accorded by all, regardless of creed; good congregations and behavior during services, for which I thank God and the good people on my work, and pray he may abundantly bless them; yet there is a coldness, indifference and want of zeal as regards true religion, that is simply appalling. I pray God may inflame them with fire of divine love! The Homeward Bound Temperance Club, composed of children, gave an entertainment last night, consisting of tableaux and recitations, for the benefit of the church, which was quite successful. Pray for us.

NEW HOPE CIRCUIT, MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.

MR. EDITOR: I am closing up my second year on New Hope circuit—a kind of shoe-string circuit; at first frazzled at one end, a knot tied in the other. I am able to report it in good working order. Organized two churches; built a six-hundred-dollar church-house at Mount Pisgah. Every family composing this church take the NEW ORLEANS ADVOCATE. Who can beat that? By adding one church on the upper part of New Hope circuit, it can be divided and make two good circuits. All the claims, Conference and pastor in charge, have been paid so far; have two other appointments before Conference; have assurance that these two churches will come up in full, as the other has. All my people are pleased with the NEW ORLEANS ADVOCATE. Twenty-eight new subscribers this year.

The Census.

Editor CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE, New Orleans, Louisiana—

DEAR SIR: This office desires to secure the best results possible regarding the schools of the country with a few salient inquiries.

James H. Blodgett, A.M., of Rockford, Illinois, a gentleman of long experience in educational work and in public affairs, has been appointed special agent for the collection of statistics of education for the United States.

Public schools are so related to systems of public record that their statistics are obtainable through established methods.

Incorporated private schools have a place in public records.

Parochial schools generally render stated reports to some controlling body.

Unincorporated private schools form a considerable element of usefulness hitherto unmeasured. It is desirable to gather reports of the number of teachers and pupils in such schools, without troubling them for the financial statements that schools supported by public funds owe to the tax-payers.

The enumerators of population will report each person who has attended school within the year, and whether at a public or at a private school; and for all persons ten years of age and over, those who can read and write. This will be more than has been done heretofore. Other educational statistics must be reached by different methods. In which everyone interested may render some aid.

Any list of private schools, no matter how brief, or names of single schools, no matter how humble, open in any part of the present school year, with the address of the principal teacher of each, will be of assistance to this office.

Very respectfully,

ROBERT P. PORTER,
Superintendent of Census.

BOOKS.

TRUTH APPLIED; OR, BIBLE READINGS. By Rev. R. G. Pearson, Cumberland Presbyterian Publishing House, Nashville, Tenn. Price, $1 25.

This book is made up of a dozen sermons on practical subjects—all treated in a very practical manner. The preacher seems to try to reach the conscience by preaching the simple truth, and illustrating and clinching it by forcible illustrations. There are no "flowers of rhetoric" nor "high-sounding phrases." The style is pure and plain, and the thought is not hidden away where you have to search for it, but it appears right on the surface.

SEED THOUGHTS FOR WORKERS. "IN HIS NAME." By Annie Darling. A. D. F. Randolph & Co., New York. Price, 35 cents.

This is a beautiful little book, and very valuable to those who are enrolled among the "King's Sons and the King's Daughters." The publishers will send it, postpaid, on receipt of price.

THE THUMB BIBLE. By J. Taylor. A. D. F. Randolph & Co., New York. Price, 50 cents.

This is the cutest little book we have seen lately. It is an epitome of every book in the Bible in rhyme. It was first published in October, 1693, and dedicated to "His Illustrious Highness, William Duke of Gloucester, Knight of the Most Noble Order of the Garter." The book is about two inches square and three-quarters of an inch thick. The publishers will send it, postpaid, on receipt of price.

PERIODICALS.

LESSON XIII.—December 29.

TEMPERANCE LESSON.

Prov. xxiii, 29-35.

TIME.—This book was written about 1000 B. C., three hundred years before the seven wise men of Greece, and six hundred years before the great moralists, Socrates, Plato, and Aristotle.—Pulpit Commentary.

ACTION.—Solomon.

29. Who hath woe ... sorrow ... contentions, etc.—I believe Solomon here refers to the natural effects of drunkenness, and perhaps the oi, which we translate woe, and the aboi, which we translate sorrow, are the mere natural sounds or vociferations that take place among drunken men. The sharp touch of the satirist reproduces the actual inarticulate utterances of drunkenness. The wounds which men receive in defense of their country and its just rights are their honor; but wounds without cause, received in service of their lusts, are marks of their infamy. The statistics of some of our prisons show that seven-eighths of their inmates reached their wretched condition through drunkenness. Redness of eyes—A paralysis of the vasor-motor nerves, induced by alcohol, results in a dilation of the minute blood vessels in the conjunctiva which covers the balls and lids of the eyes.

30. They that tarry long at the wine—This is exactly what the orientals do in their potations. They have no notion of enjoyment in drink separately from the intoxication it produces, and hence when they get drink they usually indulge in it to the last degree of excess.... Vernier relates that the king of Persia sent for him early one morning (see Isa. v, 11) to the palace, where, with other persons, he was obliged to sit all the day and till late at night, drinking wine with the shah; but at last "the king, growing sleepy, gave us leave to depart, which we did very willingly, having had hard labor for seventeen hours." The goodness of the wine of Candia renders the Candiots great drinkers, and it often happens that two or three such will sit down together at the foot of a cask from whence they will not depart till they have emptied it. Mixed wine—The Hebrew word means wine mixed with the lees, which was of a highly intoxicating quality. Mixed wine undoubtedly here means spiced, drugged, medicated wine, the intoxicating power of which is increased by the infusion of drugs and spices. It was a common practice of habitual drunkards to use wine of this description, but not of the people generally.

31. Look not thou upon the wine—The evil consequences of drunkenness are now registered. That one may not fall under this common sin, the poet warns against the attraction which the wine presents to the sight and to the sense of taste; one must not permit himself to be caught as a prisoner by this enticement; but must maintain his freedom against it. And what is the cause of moderate drinking? Is it the force of natural appetite? Rarely. Nine-tenths, if not ninety-nine hundredths of those who use alcoholic stimulants, do it in the first instance, and often for a long time, not from appetite, but from deference to custom or fashion. They look on the wine. When it is red—Red wine is more esteemed in the East than white, and we are told in the travels of Olearius that it is customary with the Armenian Christians in Persia to put Brazil wood or saffron into their wine to give it a higher color when the wine is not so red as they like, as they set little value on white wine. His color—Literally, "its eye," the clear brightness, or the headed bubbles on which the wine-drinker looks with complacency. Moveth itself aright—The English suggests the thought of a sparkling wine, but the Hebrew word, here and in Song of Solomon vii, 9, where it is rendered "goeth down sweetly," describes rather the pellucid stream flowing pleasantly from the wine-skin or jug into the goblet, or the throat. A pet theory of those who are unwilling to accept total abstinence as the truest temperance, in the line of liquor drinking, is that pure wines and ciders are comparatively harmless in contrast with adulterated liquors. Yet there is no form of drunkenness which has more of brutality in it than that which is a result of cider drinking; and from the days of Noah to the present day a man who has been made drunken by home-made wine is likely to be as disgracefully drunken as if it were strychnine whisky which had brought him down.

32. At the last—Gentle is the declivity, smooth and noiseless the descent, which conducts them, step by step, along the treacherous way, till suddenly their feet slide, and they find themselves plunging over the awful precipice. If there were no temperate drinking, there would be none that is intemperate. Men do not begin by what is usually called immoderate indulgence, but by that which they regard as moderate. Gradually and insensibly their draughts are increased until the functions of life are permanently disturbed, the system becomes inflamed, and there is that morbid appetite which will hardly brook restraint, and indulgence of which is selfish intemperance. Let it be remembered, then, that what is usually styled temperate drinking stands as the condition precedent to that which is intemperate. Biteth ... stingeth—The second word, "adder," is the more specific, and is said to be the Cerastes or horned snake, the first more generic. The Cerastes is exceedingly venomous. It lurks in the sand, coiled up, perhaps; in a camel's footprint, ready to dart at any passing animal. Did it bite at the first, who would tamper with it? Did the sting come at the beginning of the indulgence, who would be led astray? But the pleasure comes at the first, and the sting at the last, and herein lies the danger of looking on the wine.

PRACTICAL THOUGHTS.

Before an array of facts horrible, tragical, indecent, scandalous, yet not incredible, such as may be gleaned from life, no argument, or prejudice, or selfish interest can stand. Therefore, whoever is able to present and press upon the unwilling attention such an array of facts is master of the situation. The picture need not be exaggerated, and need not be veiled. A play, a caricature, a work of fiction, or even an argument, will be as nothing in comparison with the real, horrible facts of every-day life within easy reach. The ordinary press presentations of matter illustrating the evil of drinking habits are useless as reform measures; to a large extent, because the misfortunes of drunkenness are treated as among the humors of the day. There is little need in temperance work for such artificial matter as "Ten Nights in a Bar-room." The facts are more horrible than the fiction, the reality than the play.

All efforts to make liquor-dealing respectable are ill-advised and full of mischief. If one of two saloons is to be shut up, close the quiet, genteel, well-appointed saloon, rather than the noisy, filthy, foul place. Too much can not be done to increase the public detestation of the saloon and its horrible work.

The lesson to-day touches all:

The Churches. Chicago has eleven saloons to one Protestant Church; New York has twenty, and San Francisco has sixty-five.

The families. San Francisco has one saloon for every fifteen families.

The missionary and other benevolent societies of the church. During the five years ending with 1887, Boston alone sent to Africa 3,500,000 gallons of intoxicating liquors.

Missionary.

The Gospel Covering the World by 1900.

BY REV. HENRY M. WOODS.

While the Church of Christ is engaged in the glorious privilege of "preaching the gospel to every creature," we ought to have our eyes fixed on two facts, that God has surely promised success in this work, and that the church has now the ability to do it.

We were recently reading a sermon by Mr. Talmage on this subject, in which he showed beyond all doubt, that the church, if she will put forth the ability which God has given her, can spread the gospel over the whole world by the year 1900. He shows that the church has men and woman enough—nay, more than enough; it has the money, it has the machinery, and it has the opportunity—above all we have a God who is rejoiced to give success to this work by his Almighty arm. What a grand thought! Do we realize its meaning? That if we do our duty in the next ten years "the knowledge of God shall cover the earth as the waters cover the sea?" We do not say that the world will be converted at that time. "It is not for us to know the times and the seasons which the Father hath put in his own power." But we do know that it is our privilege to spread the gospel everywhere by that time, and to hasten the coming of that great and glorious day of the Lord. We know this, that when the church rises in her God-given might, and obeys her Master, he will not be slow to grant his blessing and bring about the universal, everlasting reign of the Prince of Peace.

Shall the church lose this opportunity and refuse to put forth the strength the Lord has given her? Shall we be the slothful servant who wrapped his talent in the napkin?

Shall we not, constrained by the love of Christ, consecrate ourselves fully to this work, consecrate our sons and daughters to it, consecrate our millions and our mites, consecrate our printing presses, our railways, and all our other vast machinery to the spread of the gospel over the earth in the next ten years?

Let the church resolve. God helping, that the knowledge of salvation shall be thoroughly spread over this earth by 1900, and it shall be done. Let us fix the date before us, and work with this definite object in view—the gospel spread everywhere within the next ten years.

This is not presumption. God has given us the ability—let us put it forth, praying earnestly for his blessing, trusting only the power of his Holy Spirit, and he will take care of results. He will make the conversion of the world follow in his own good time, we may hope speedily. "Surely, I come quickly." Amen. "Even so, come, Lord Jesus!"

Oh, what a glad thanksgiving that will be: "Amen. Hallelujah!" "For the Lord God omnipotent reigneth!" "The kingdoms of this world are become the kingdoms of our Lord and of his Christ, and he shall reign forever and ever!" Work, brethren; pray, brethren, as never before.

The Missionary Spirit.

There is a vast amount of money in the Church of Christ that ought to be turned in the direction of Christian missions. If some plan could be adopted to secure a contribution for this purpose from every member of the church it would be a great gain. To have the energy as well as the money of every church member consecrated to Christian activity would speedily fill the world with inspired speakers and rejoicing hearers.

Rev. L. T. Chamberlain, D. D., of Brooklyn, in a meeting held in New York last May in the interest of foreign missions in connection with the sessions of the General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church, said:

"The churches of Christ in this one land have money enough and members enough for the securing of the preaching of the gospel to every creature within two generations. I can point you to the instance of a congregation made up entirely of comparatively poor people—farmers, peasants, wage-earners—into which just forty years ago there entered the true missionary spirit. Along with their earnest support of missions they organized among themselves a society for sending the gospel to foreign lands. A widow brought a dollar and a half, a laborer ten cents, a child three cents. Presently a farmer gave his farm, the little farm-house being used for a missionary training-school. At the end of four years, Africa having been chosen as their field, they sent forth a ship which they had built, with eight missionaries from their own number. Each time the ship renewed the voyage, additional recruits were ready. In a single year more than one hundred enlisted. At one date nearly fifty set sail. So that in the year 1883 they had in Africa more than thirty mission stations, forty ordained missionaries, more than a hundred lay missionaries, thirty-two ordained natives, one hundred and eighty-five helpers—a total force of full three hundred and fifty-seven. They had gathered from abysmal heathenism nearly four thousand communicants, with scarcely less than ten thousand adherents of the Christian faith. In that one year of 1883, besides all their bountiful home gifts, they raised for their foreign work $70,500. If such a healthful devotion should prevail throughout our American Churches the command of our Lord would not be long delayed in its fulfillment."—Gospel in all Lands.

Did you ever feel the joy of winning a soul for Christ? If so, you will need no better argument for attempting to spread the knowledge of his name to every creature. I tell you there is no joy out of heaven which excels it—the grasp of the hand of one who says: "By your means I was turned from darkness to light."—Rev. C. H. Spurgeon.

"All Wool and a Yard Wide."

When a great business house of world-wide reputation for honesty, fair dealing and financial responsibility, feels warranted in attaching its certificate of guarantee to its goods, such action furnishes the best possible evidence that the products are believed to be just what they are represented to be. Such confidence on the part of manufacturers and vendors naturally begets confidence in purchasers, and hence it is that there has grown to be all over this great country, such an unprecedented demand for and such implicit confidence in that most popular liver, blood and lung remedy known as Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery, as no other medicine has ever before met with. It is sold by druggists, under a positive guarantee from the manufacturers, that it will either benefit or cure in every case of disease for which it is recommended, or the money paid for it will be promptly refunded. It is manufactured by the World's Dispensary Medical Association, of Buffalo, N. Y., a well-known and financially solid business corporation. No other responsible manufacturers of medicines have put their remedies to such severe tests as to warrant them to give satisfaction, or refund the money paid for them. "Golden Medical Discovery" cures "liver complaint," or biliousness, indigestion and dyspepsia, all humors or blood taints, skin diseases, scrofulous sores and tumors and pulmonary consumption (which is only scrofula of the lungs) if taken in time and given a fair trial. Chronic catarrh in the head, bronchitis and throat diseases, are also cured by this most wonderful blood-purifier and invigorating tonic.

The emptiness of all things, from politics to pastimes, is never so striking to us as when we fall in them.—George Eliot.

Peculiar

To Itself in many important particulars, Hood's Sarsaparilla is different from and superior to any other medicine.

Peculiar in combination, proportion and preparation of ingredients, Hood's Sarsaparilla possesses the full curative value of the best known remedies of the vegetable kingdom.

Peculiar in its medicinal merit, Hood's Sarsaparilla accomplishes cures hitherto unknown.

Peculiar in strength and economy—Hood's Sarsaparilla is the only medicine of which can truly be said, "100 doses one dollar." Medicines in larger and smaller bottles require larger doses, and do not produce as good results as Hood's Sarsaparilla.

Peculiar in its "good name at home"—there is more of Hood's Sarsaparilla sold in Lowell, where it is made, than of all other blood purifiers.

Peculiar in its phenomenal record of sales abroad, no other preparation has ever attained such popularity in so short a time. Do not be induced to take any other preparation. Be sure to get

The Mississippi Conference.

"Mercy unto you, and peace, and love, be multiplied." The ADVOCATE brings to the brethren of the Mississippi Conference congratulations upon the progress made during another year's work in the Master's vineyard. Your obstacles have been many, your trials hard, your work difficult; but your success has proved that the Lord's presence gave you the victory. And now you have come together to "recount your battles o'er," and, in the spiritual and mental refreshment so abundantly supplied by the annual convocation and fellowship, to prepare for the future service of the King. The ADVOCATE rejoices with you in the triumphs you have achieved, sympathizes with you in all the sorrows that have left their shadows along your paths, and plants itself with you upon that grand Scripture, "All things work together for good to them that love the Lord." May peace prevail in your councils! May wisdom from above guide you in your deliberations! May the Divine Spirit make each heart his permanent dwelling-place!

Louisiana Conference.

After benediction, Conference adjourned to meet at 9:30, December 13.

The report of the Committee on Bible Cause was read by the chairman, Rev. T. B. White, after which Rev. J. W. McLauren, superintendent of the American Bible Society, made a talk in regard to the great work being done by that noble organization. Though the work done has been so great, it is yet in its infancy, and is constantly expanding and stretching, like a Briareus, its hundred hands over all parts of the world, scattering the Word of Life in every land beneath the sun.

Mrs. Bishop Wightman, representative of the Woman's Board of Missions, was introduced to the Conference and gave an interesting account of its work; also an account of their proposed and projected college for training missionaries for home and abroad. She said there had been many offers of suitable locations for it and money for its erection; the most favorable of which was from Dr. Scarritt, in Kansas City, Mo., giving all the land necessary and $25,000, if the Board would raise a like sum. Louisiana Conference Notes.

One brother reported that he has this year built his seventy-ninth church, and he is not an aged brother either. He evidently believes in camp meetings! Can anybody in our territory beat such a record as that?

One brother, who is a station preacher, reported one hundred and sixty-two members received during the past year. Such work in a station speaks volumes for the working capacity of the pastor and his co-workers. If every pastor and church would do as well, how long would it be before the world would be brought to Christ?

The reproductive power of a church is seen in its ability to produce preachers. The little Louisiana Methodist stands in the front rank on this line and New Orleans Methodism stands at the head of that line. Seven young ministers admitted on trial, and all of them classed as "good ones." Is not this a mean indication of the fiber of the church in Louisiana.

The reports of the preachers show some advance on the various lines of church work. Only a few circuits have fallen behind last year, while the large majority have gone ahead. The preachers have held their work well in hand and toiled and sacrificed much, and the reward has come in large ingatherings of souls saved to the Master and in increase of money given to support the Lord's cause. The outlook for the coming year is brighter and more hopeful than ever, and the brethren go out to their work with refreshed energies.

The brother was taken aback when Bishop Duncan asked: "How often have you read the Discipline through this year?" "Nothing is more important," said the Bishop, "than an intimate acquaintance with our law." While on this point the Bishop called attention to the fact that every preacher had vowed to preach on the subject of Christian education, and the church and the Lord expected it to be done. If every preacher in the connection would do this, there would be a great educational revival. So thinks this writer.

One district raised $461 for foreign missions, and of this sum one circuit raised $115. The same district raised $140 for domestic missions, and the same circuit raised $40 of that. That is, that circuit raised one-fourth of the foreign mission collection and nearly one-third of the domestic missionary collection of the district. That speaks well for that circuit and its preacher. If all would do as well, who can estimate the amount that would be raised? In this connection we ask this question: Why is it that some preachers always raise every dollar assessed to their charges? Will somebody answer?

Dr. Hunnicutt, president of Centenary College, gave the brethren an interesting account of the growth of the college during the past two years. It has been gradually enlarging in its sphere of influence, and the number of students has gone up from fifty, two years ago, to 120 to-day. The president spoke forcibly and earnestly on the subject of endowment for the college. The needs of the present are so great that no college can meet the demands made upon it without a liberal endowment. The president's address was listened to with great attention, and his account of the religious work in the college was of great comfort to all who believe in Christian education. Such a school, where young men learn by precept and example the great principles of the Christian religion, is of incalculable benefit to the church, and should be supported by all.

Bishop Duncan's address to the candidates for admission into full connection was forcible. Three things are necessary to a preacher. He must be pious. Nothing can take the place of personal piety. The preacher must have knowledge. He must read and study good books, but, above all, the Book of books. He must be careful in the selection of his books and very careful in his study of them. He should study thus in order to produce fresh, new sermons. A preacher should select plenty of text, so as to have room to enlarge as the Spirit gives him utterance. The preacher must be mentally and physically industrious. He must put in all his time and put it in energetically and continuously. The preacher can't afford to be physically lazy, nor mentally indolent. The large class was well instructed by the address, and these young preachers will go out to their work with renewed energy and a firm purpose to do all the work of a Methodist preacher!

The missionary anniversary was a most interesting meeting. The secretary, Bro. Carradine, read a very fine report, showing the imperative duty of the church and her failure to perform it fully. The treasurer, Bro. Frank Parker, gave the report for the monies collected during the year, and it showed an increase in collections for foreign missions and a large increase for domestic missions—that increase being about $500 over the past year. The address was made by the editor, and the people gave earnest heed to the things spoken. Bro. Sawyer, in a few stirring sentences, began the collection and carried it forward until it reached the sum of $520. Altogether it was an occasion of great benefit and of generous giving. The missionary conscience of Louisiana Methodists is evidently asserting its claims more strongly than ever.

The anniversary of the Church Extension Society was held, Thursday evening. The secretary, Rev. J. W. Medlock, reported that the society had donated the past year the sum of $550 to churches in the bounds of the Conference. Applications for aid to the amount of $350 for the coming year were received and granted. Dr. Morton, the secretary of the General Board, addressed the meeting, dwelling at length upon the political and social prosperity growing out of the successful operation of the church extension movement. He said the Board, during its existence, had aided 1,482 churches and parsonages, and of these 382 have been assisted during the past year. The loan fund of the society has reached the handsome sum of $85,000. Bishop Duncan also spoke. He said church extension meant enlargement; enlargement meant love, and love meant giving. The collection was then taken and resulted in about $400. The audience was large enough to fill up the church.

Sunday was the day of great things. The Conference love-feast, conducted by Bro. L. A Reed, was an occasion of manifest power. The prayers and songs and experiences of the brethren were refreshing and edifying and eminently fitted to prepare the large audience for a precious enjoyment of the other exercises of the day. At eleven o'clock there was assembled a house crowded in every part to hear Bishop Duncan. He gave a sermon on missions, and for more than an hour held the attention of the people to the great theme. The solemn utterances of the grand truths of the gospel found lodgement in many hearts, and, we doubt not, there will be greater activity in mission work in Louisiana during the coming year than ever before. After the sermon the Bishop ordained eight deacons. At 3 P. M. Dr. J. B. Walker preached a most edifying discourse on "Ambassadors for God," after which the Bishop ordained eight elders. At 7 P. M. the memorial service was held. One of our superannuates, G. M. Liverman, had passed over into the land of rest. The memoir was read by Bro. Harp, and tributes of tender affection were spoken by several brethren. At the close of the service, the report of the secretary of Woman's Missionary Society of Louisiana was read by Mrs. J. A. Parker, and the address of the president was presented by Mrs. B. F. Alexander. Then Mrs. Bishop Wightman followed with an address of rare beauty and power in behalf of the woman's work. It is not often that we hear an address clothed in such choice, pure English as Mrs. Wightman uses, and seldom that we have the privilege of listening to one that moved the audience as hers did. In evidence of its moving power, we state the fact that Bishop Duncan in a few minutes raised $1,236 for the Kansas City Training-school.

Personal and Otherwise.

The population of Europe has doubled in ninety years.

Charles Wesley wrote six thousand five hundred hymns; but in our new hymn book there are only two hundred and ninety-four of them.

It will do to follow John Wesley only so far as he followed Jesus Christ.

We understand that Bishop Granbery will soon transfer his residence to Ashland, Virginia.

If you want Christmas and New Year cards, get them from Raphael Tuck & Sons, 298 Broadway, New York. They are as artistic and beautiful as any can be made. We acknowledge the receipt of a sample box, and "our folks" are perfectly delighted with them.

Prohibition.

ITS COMMENCEMENT IN MISSISSIPPI AND LOUISIANA.

Intemperance suggested temperance societies, and these preceded the present organized prohibition movement. Preceding half a century ago the habitual use of intoxicating liquors was so obviously hurtful that good men and women, doubtless, began to inquire what could be done to arrest the great evil. Any movement to this direction would be unpopular, as it was charged to be a denial of personal liberty and social enjoyment. In place of retailing in saloons, or otherwise, at that date in every house were decanters or bottles, with glasses on side-boards or shelves, and a drink was the first act expressive of friendship when neighbors met.

The credit of organizing temperance societies south of Tennessee is due to the Methodist Church indirectly, and directly to three preachers of that church, who will, no doubt, meet at the annual session of the Conference of that church in Crystal Springs, on the 18th of December, 1889. These men (young then) must be advanced in life now, though such men, in one sense, never grow old. I name them in the order of their commencing their work: Richard Abbey, in Natchez; John W. Harmon, in New Orleans; Charles K. Marshall, in Vicksburg. I knew them long ago, and read reports of their work often not the most favorable. I write from a retentive memory, and apologize in advance for the liberty I take with their names.

First, Richard Abbey, a young merchant in Natchez; a Methodist, but not a preacher. His success has been written and published; but much of the true man required in such an attempt can not be expressed in language and will not be known until the great day. Suffice it to say, he walked from place to place, saw man after man, urged their co-operation, appointed meetings, selected speakers and gave notice of meetings—in short, was the man of all work until temperance societies were established.

Second, Dr. John W. Harmon, in New Orleans. His boldness to attack intemperance by speech, sermon and in a newspaper which he published, and the bitter opposition in every way, was on the extreme, such as resulted in the killing of a Methodist preacher in the Northwest a few years ago. Whatever may have been his success, or the contrary, it is certain that he made a bold and daring start in that city, still opposed to such measures of reform as Dr. Harmon introduced.

Third, Dr. C. K. Marshall, in Vicksburg. The Methodists in that town, with a few other citizens, secured the services of this popular preacher to make a temperance address on the fourth of July, giving notice that the address, in addition to sentiments of patriotism appropriate to the day, would suggest another declaration of independence which would be inaugurated after the address—a temperance society. The day was so inclement that no congregation was present. The friends of temperance prevailed on the speaker to deliver the address a few days after, of which proper notice was given. A great crowd collected more to hear the speaker than for any interest in temperance. The speaker commenced by stating that his hearers must all for the time of his address consider this day as the fourth of July. There will be such frequent allusions to that day, and associated with its recollection, that the address will be almost unmeaning without such going back on the almanac. At the conclusion a temperance society was formed, of which this writer was the secretary.

From my information by seeing, talking and reading in that far-back date I venture this summary:

Dr. Harmon had the most formidable opposition. New Orleans is bad enough now, but then the exposure of New Orleans life and his attempt to correct their morals, as they called it, provoked to such an extent that Dr. Harmon may thank Providence that he lives now with a sound body. Dr. Abbey had no opposition, but reluctant approval and little co-operation for years. He did the work. Dr. Marshall was not opposed, but help was feeble. His eloquence infused life in the right direction and was often repeated.

A most powerful auxiliary in opposition to drunkenness was another Methodist of that time—the Rev. Thomas Griffin. The bottle became a hobby in his preaching; but there was so much truth and humor that he was a popular preacher, died in Madison county, and has descendants in Vicksburg.

Soon after these Methodists came an advocate for temperance of the Catholic Church—Father Matthew. His church required such an influence, and he was greatly successful.

The General Conference.

In view of the fact that the General Conference of the M. E. Church, South, meets in St. Louis in May next, where representatives will be present from all sections of the country; when the entire laws of the Church and church government will be under consideration, and probably many changes made which will be of interest to all members of the Church, we propose making it, for that period, the leading feature of our paper. The columns of the ST. LOUIS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE will contain the proceedings of the Conference, concisely written up, together with many addresses, speeches and other matter, which will not likely be obtainable through any other source. Not only at that time, but from now on, the columns of the paper will be open to a discussion of questions relating to the business to be brought before that body.

PROPOSITION.—Each and every preacher and church member is not only authorized, but requested to secure all names, whether members of the Church or not, WHO ARE NOT NOW TAKING THE ADVOCATE, and collect from them, and send with each new name the sum of 50 CENTS. In consideration of which we will send the ST. LOUIS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE from the time of receiving the new names up to the 1st day of JULY, 1890.

Everything will be done that can be done to make the ADVOCATE worthy of a universal circulation as a reporter of the proceedings of the General Conference, and as one of the best of church papers in our connection. We hope all friends of the ADVOCATE will at once go to work on this proposition, and not stop until the opportunity has been given to everyone within reach to become a subscriber on this FIFTY-CENTS proposition.

THE SUN, FOR 1890.

Some people agree with THE SUN'S opinions about men and things, and some people don't; but everybody likes to get hold of the newspaper which is never dull and never afraid to speak its mind.

Democrats know that for twenty years THE SUN has fought in the front line for Democratic principles, never wavering or weakening in its loyalty to the true interests of the party it serves with fearless intelligence and disinterested vigor. At times opinions have differed as to the best means of accomplishing the common purpose; it is not THE SUN'S fault if it has seen further into the millstone.

Eighteen hundred and ninety is the year that will probably determine the result of the Presidential election of 1892, and perhaps the fortunes of the Democracy for the rest of the century. Victory in 1892 is a duty, and the beginning of 1890 is the best time to start out in company with THE SUN.

WHY COUGH,

WHEN a few doses of Ayer's Cherry Pectoral will relieve you? Try it. Keep it in the house. You are liable to have a cough at any time, and no other remedy is so effective as this world-renowned preparation. No household, with young children, should be without it. Scores of lives are saved every year by its timely use.

Amanda B. Jenner, Northampton, Mass., writes: "Common gratitude impels me to acknowledge the great benefits I have derived for my children from the use of Ayer's most excellent Cherry Pectoral. I had lost two dear children from croup and consumption, and had the greatest fear of losing my only remaining daughter and son, as they were delicate. Happily, I find that by giving them Ayer's Cherry Pectoral, on the first symptoms of throat or lung trouble, they are relieved from danger, and are becoming robust, healthy children."

"In the winter of 1885 I took a bad cold which, in spite of every known remedy, grew worse, so that the family physician considered me incurable, supposing me to be in consumption. As a last resort I tried Ayer's Cherry Pectoral, and, in a short time, the cure was complete. Since then I have never been without this medicine. I am fifty years of age, weigh over 180 pounds, and attribute my good health to the use of Ayer's Cherry Pectoral."—G. W. Youker, Salem, N. J.

"Last winter I contracted a severe cold, which by repeated exposure, became quite obstinate. I was much troubled with hoarseness and bronchial irritation. After trying various medicines, without relief, I at last purchased a bottle of Ayer's Cherry Pectoral. On taking this medicine, my cough ceased almost immediately, and I have been well ever since."—Rev. Thos. B. Russell, Secretary Holston Conference and P. E. of the Greenville District, M. E. C., Jonesboro, Tenn.

JACK AND GILL.

BY MRS. J. T. GREENLEAF.

Jack and Gill went up the hill—
So runs the olden story—
He climbed it up his pail to fill,
Without one thought of glory.
Yet all the world knows of his fate.
Of how he fell and cracked his pate.
And with him Gill, his dearest mate.

The cause of all these sad mishaps
We know not, nor the reason;
He was to smoothly shod, perhaps,
Or climbed up out of season.
Yet this we know, that down he fell,
And falling, broke his crown as well,
And with him Gill, his demoiselle.

There's many a modern Jack and Gill,
Who sigh for lofty station,
Who look upon some towering hill
With ardent admiration;
But climbing at too rapid pace,
Are fitted not to fill the place,
But tumble backward in disgrace.

Each manly lad, in hall and school,
In lyceum and college,
Works with a zest, obeys each rule
To climb the hill of knowledge.
But will each stand at last the test
Of regent's questions, closely pressed,
And on the mountain top, then rest?

Each thoughtful girl will surely seek
Her womanhood to honor,
And do, with loving spirit meek,
The duties put upon her,
But will her virtues shine so bright,
That those in darkness, as of night,
Will guided be to love and light?

There's many an office bought with gold,
By vain, ambitious seeker,
Who finds when on the mountain hold,
That he is faint, and weaker
Than even Jack, or little Gill,
Who tumbled headlong down the hill
With empty pail they'd thought to fill.

'Tis not enough to climb the steep,
Or scale the mountain merely;
We foothold on the height must keep,
This lesson teaches clearly.
One must to right and truth fast hold,
As misers do to hoarded gold,
Or down he'll go, like Jack of old.

Calling Up a Boy.

Calling a boy up in the morning can hardly be classed under the head of "pastimes," especially if the boy is fond of exercise the day before. And it is a little singular that the next hardest thing to getting a boy out of bed is getting him into it. There is rarely a mother who is a success at rousing a boy. All mothers know this; and so do their boys; and yet the mother seems to go at it in the right way. She opens the stair door and insinuatingly observes, "Johnny!" No response. "Johnny!" Still no response. Then there is a short, sharp "John" followed, a moment later, by a prolonged and emphatic "John Henry!" A grunt from the upper regions signifies that an impression has been made, and the mother becomes encouraged to add: "You had better be getting down here to your breakfast, young man, before I come up there an' give you something you'll feel."

This so startles the young man that he immediately goes to sleep again. And the operation has to be repeated several times. A father knows nothing about this trouble. He merely opens his mouth as a soda bottle ejects its cork, and the "John Henry" which cleaves the air of that stairway, goes into that boy like electricity, and pierces the deepest recesses of his nature. Then he pops out of the bed and into his clothes, and down the stairs, with a promptness that is commendable. It is rarely a boy allows himself to disregard the paternal summons. About once a year is believed to be as often as is consistent with the rules of health. He saves his father a great many steps by his thoughtfulness.

Deceiving the Enemy.

In the spring of 1888 a pair of red foxes took up their home on a Dakota farm. They dug several holes on a knoll in a wheat field, and soon after four "kits" or young foxes arrived. Every day, while harrowing and sowing wheat in the field, says the farmer, I saw the two old foxes lying on the little mound in front of their home. The kits rolled about in the sun, playing with the bushy tails of their parents and enjoyed themselves apparently as much as a group of kittens.

One morning a neighbor came to work in a field adjoining, bringing with him a dog, and the dog, with all the curiosity of his kind, soon began the investigation of both farms.

He was still a long distance from the fox-den when I heard a sharp, warning bark and saw the kits disappear. As I looked the mother-fox lay on the mound, her ears erect, her nose on the ground, all attention. The father of the family, with his tail swinging in the wind, trotted toward the dog.

Can he intend to attack him, I wondered. I had never heard of such a thing, and the dog, though not a large one, was still larger than the fox. But reynard knew his business better than I. He approached the intruder until the dog saw him, when both stopped for an instant, and then the dog gave chase. The fox, with a bark of defiance, turned and ran in a direction away from his home.

At first the dog seemed to gain rapidly upon the fox, but I watched them for nearly a mile before they disappeared in the long prairie-grass and concluded that the fox was able to keep out of the other's way.

In about an hour the dog returned from a fruitless chase, and for a time he contentedly followed his master. Then he began prowling around again.

All this time the mother-fox had remained on the mound, a picture of quiet vigilance; but now, as the dog again ventured near, she rose and trotted toward him, and the dog was soon chasing her over the prairie. Hardly had they disappeared when the mate trotted back from some hiding-place and took the position vacated by his mate. The dog returned after a time unsuccessful as before.

During the day he was again and again tempted to a chase, first by the male and then by the female, and while the one kept him busy, the other watched over the young, who did not show themselves after the first sight of the dog.

It is hard to say which we admire most: the bravery of the pair in challenging the dog to a race that would have proved fatal had he caught them, their ingenuity in taking turns so that each might be fresh when chased, their skill in leading him away from their young, or their cleverness in throwing him off their track when far enough away.—Exchange.

Household.

Sunday Afternoons.

Mrs. Sanborn had been often perplexed to find suitable and ageeable occupation for her children on Sunday afternoons. They attended Sunday-school and church in the morning, and in the afternoon they were tired of confinement and longed to play. A hint she found in some English journal was of great service in helping her out of her diffculty.

Her children had been in the habit, especially on rainy days, of cutting pictures from the illustrated papers, from advertising mediums, and from all material available. So they had saved up a great many pictures, each child keeping his or her collection apart from the others. These pictures Mrs. Sanborn looked over and selected such as admitted of illustration by Bible texts. The rest were put away in their proper places. When Sunday afternoon came the children were given each a blank-book into which the Sunday pictures were to be pasted, and under each one an appropriate text of Scripture was to be written. One of the girls had a picture of hares, and under it she wrote: "The conies are a feeble folk, yet they make their houses in the rocks" (Prov. xxx, 26,). Under a picture of spiders was written: "The spider taketh hold with her hands, and is in kings' palaces" (Prov. xxx, 28); "Whose hope shall be cut off, and whose trust shall be a spider's web" (Job viii, 14). Under a picture of lilies was written: "Consider the lillies of the field how they grow; they toil not, neither do they spin; and yet I say unto you, That even Solomon in all his glory was not arrayed like one of these" (Matt. vi. 28, 29).

The children used their concordances to find texts, and their concordances stimulated them to find pictures to illustrate words and topics that were suggested as their eyes glanced over the pages. When they read their Bibles they had a new interest in every word that could be made pictorial.

The children who were too young to paste and write were assisted by those older. Mrs. Sauborn was very careful to have the book, chapter, and verse of each Scripture quotation written down. As time went on, the scrap-books became increasingly interesting. The prophecies relating to Tyre, to Babylon and Nineveh, were written out, and illustrated by appropriate pictures, and thus a taste for historical reading and research was stimulated. The occupation was so interesting that the children would gladly have engaged in it on week-days, but it was reserved exclusively for the Sabbath.

Better far were these illustrated books of home manufacture than even Dore's costly Bible, and thrice happy were the hours spent in occupation so suitable to the Sabbath day.—New York Christian Advocate.

FAITH IN THE FAMILY.—One of the most intelligent women, the mother of a large family of children, was eminently a woman of faith. She never heard the tramping of her boys' feet in the house, or listened to their noisy shouting in their play, or watched their unconscious slumbers, without an inward, earnest prayer to God for wisdom to train them. She mingled prayer with counsel and restraint; and the counsel was the wiser and the restraint was the stronger for this alliance of the human and divine elements in her instruction and discipline. And at length, when her children had become men and women, accustomed to the hard strife of the world, her name was the dearest one they could speak; and she who had "fed their bodies from her own spirit's life," who had taught their feet to walk, their tongues to speak and pray, and illuminated their consciences with the great light of righteousness and duty, held their reverence and love, increased a thousand-fold by the remembrance of an early education that had its inspiration in faith in God, and its fruit in the noble lives of upright men and women.—Ex.

Counting by Electricity.

We have on more than one occasion published a note on the complicated electrical appliances which have been manufactured to be used in taking the forthcoming census. We now give a brief description of the process:

The census collector will call with his printed blank, and answers to questions will be written in the usual way. These sheets will then be placed before a person who operates a machine which may be likened to a typewriter, except that, instead of the usual ink marks on paper, small round holes are punched in a card. The cards, one for each person, are about 6½ inches in length by 3 inches in width, and the particular position of hole in a card indicates an answer to some of the questions in the printed blank. As many as 250 items of information can be punched out upon a card, although no one card would ever have more than one-tenth part of the whole number. For example, no one person can be classed as both white and black, American and foreign born, and if foreign born he can only come from one country. These cards, when punched, are placed one at a time in a sort of press, and a lever operated by one hand is brought down, when a series of pins are brought against the card. Whenever a hole has been punched in a card the corresponding pin passes through into a mercury cup beneath, completing an electric circuit. These circuits, one for every hole, pass out to a large number of counters which operate electrically, and which add upon their dials all items of the same kind upon the same dials. For instance, all white men are counted upon a dial marked "white males;" all business or professional people, upon dials which indicate their particular business or profession. The cards, as they leave the press, are all sorted by means of an ecectrical sorting device, whereby they may be separated into groups or States.—Modern Light and Heat.

An Electric Plant.

There has been discovered in the forests of India, according to La Nature a strange plant which possesses to a very high degree astonishing magnetic power. The hand which breaks a leaf from it receives immediately a shock equal to that which is produced by the conductor of an induction coil. At a distance of six metres a magnetic needle is affected by it, and it will be quite deranged if brought near. The energy of this singular influence varies with the hour of the day. All-powerful about two o'clock in the afternoon, it is absolutely annulled during the night. At the times of storm its intensity augments to striking proportions. During rain the plant seems to succumb and bends its head during a thunder shower; it remains there without force or virtue even if one should shelter it with an umbrella. No shock is felt at that time in breaking the leaves and the needle is unaffected beside it. One never by chance sees a bird or an insect alight on the electric plant; an instinct seems to warn them that they would find there sudden death. It is also important to remark that where it grows none of the magnetic metals are found; neither iron, nor cobalt, nor nickel, an undeniable proof that the electric force belongs exclusively to the plant. Light and heat, phosphorescence, magnetism, electricity, how many mysteries and botanical problems does this wondrous Indian plant conceal within its leaf and flower?

HUMAN HEIGHT.—From archeological evidence, an English writer contends that the human race is growing taller, the increase in average stature appearing to be about an inch and a quarter in each 1,000 years. Measurements of old armor show a decided increase in the height of the English aristocracy within 500 years. Ancient coffins found in Great Britain indicate that the Romans could not have greatly exceeded five feet, five inches, in average stature. Twenty-five Egyptian mummies gave an average of 61 inches for males and 55 inches for females. The mummy of Cleopatra measures about 54 inches, and the most ancient known mummy of an Egyptian king is only 52 inches long.—Ex.

WADDELL—WILLIAM H. WADDELL was born June 29, 1838, at Brunswick, N. C.; moved to Covington county, Miss., in 1850; was married to Miss Hartzog in 1866, by whom he had three children, all girls. He was married the second time to Mrs. Eliza Walford, September 1, 1875, and moved to Rankin county, Miss., in 1877, and died October 18, 1889. A good man has fallen in Israel. He was zealous and true to his church. As a steward he was faithful and a true counselor. Bro. Waddell loved his church and labored to support her institutions. He was a kind father and affectionate husband. His house was the preacher's resting-place, and when weary and worn from his arduous labors, he entered this godly home, he received a cordial greeting and hospitable entertainment. He said to his pastor in the last conversation had with him, "I am not afraid to die; I shall die as I have lived." And so he did; though not what is called demonstrative, his was a beautiful Christian life. There was evidently an abiding faith in God, with a manifest and continuous flow of good feeling for everybody. He was very modest and gentle in his manners. Oh! how mysterious, that he should be taken away just at this time, when he was so much needed. Had he lived, it was his purpose to have completed the church-house to which he belonged. Galilee will miss him, and so will all the community, but, most of all, his aged mother, wife, two daughters and a little motherless boy, who was entirely dependent on him. May God bless and care for the fatherless and widow.

His pastor, J. F. ROBINSON.

GRAY—Mrs. M. M. GRAY (nee Moore) was born in Georgia, in the fall of 1819, and died November 20, 1889, in Lauderdale county, Miss. She was married at eighteen to Robert Gray, who left her a widow twenty-nine years ago. In her fifteenth year she joined the Presbyterian Church, and lived in its communion till about twenty years ago, when she united with the Methodist Episcopal Church, South.

She professed a saving faith in Christ, and her life was consistent. For some years before her death she was in feeble health, and for the last four months of her life she was confined to her bed, and suffered greatly. "The Lord gave, the Lord hath taken away; blessed be the name of the Lord!"

B. M. DRAKE.

BALDRIDGE—GEORGE WASHINGTON, infant son of J. S. and Emma Baldridge, was born September 6, 1888, and died July 13, 1889. God takes our treasures and lays them up in heaven. The dear baby is safe there, waiting to welcome father and mother, sister and brother, to the land where partings are no more. We sympathize deeply with our bereaved friends, yet rejoice that their sorrow is not without hope.

T. E. D. BALDRIDGE.

SETTOON—Died, near Le Vaughn Church, at the residence of Mr. E. G. Allen, Chicot county, Arkansas, October 23, 1889, little ERNEST SETTOON, aged five years and eight months; and at the same place, November 3, his little sister, LOUI K., aged seven years and seven months—both of swamp fever; being the last of ten children of Bert and Ellen Settoon. They were born in West Carroll, La., where their father and the other children died and are buried. These dear little ones were buried at Mt. Carmel Cemetery, with the burial service of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, officiated by the writer. Our blessed Lord said, "Suffer little children to come unto me, for of such is the kingdom of Heaven." With these cheering words, we consign them to his care. And with true Christian fortitude and faith, the bereaved mother kissed their cold cheeks, saying: "Farewell, my dear babes; God has taken you to his home in heaven before me; but by the grace of God I will meet you there, my darlings, to rejoice in his salvation and to part no more."

Sister Ellen, now Sister Sharp, has two little ones by her second marriage, to engage her loving care. May God spare her and them to be useful in this life, and at last to meet her loved "angel band" "safe in the arms of Jesus!" "Blessed are the dead who die in the Lord from henceforth, that they may rest from their labors, and their works do follow them." (Rev. xiv. 13). Amen!

FELIX G. DAVIS.

DAVIS—NATHAN A. DAVIS was born February 26, 1813; was married April 5, 1837; joined the Methodist Episcopal Church in 1839, and died August 22, 1889.

"Uncle Nathan," as he was familiarly called, lived out nearly his fourscore years; but surely, in his case, it was true, "yet is there strength, labor and sorrow." For many years he had been a great sufferer, and those sufferings had so prepared him for the end that he was anxious to depart and be with the Lord. His greatest anxiety was for his grandchildren. Day after day the burden of his prayer was that they might be saved. He loved the songs of Zion. The old camp-meeting music and the new music of the modern evangelists was, alike, good music to him. He enjoyed talking about God, and the nearness of his soul to him. God was with him. His constant testimony was, "For me to live is Christ, and to die is gain." The church and community miss the influence of "Uncle Nathan's" presence, but we rejoice in that our loss has been his gain. May God give to him to join hands with wife and children and grandchildren and great-grandchildren around the throne of God! May the comforting influences of the Holy Spirit make this affliction a blessing to those of us who remain!

HIS PASTOR.

BEEVER—S. C. BEEVER, Sr., died November 18, 1889. He was in his seventy-first year. He had been in bad health for some time, but was confined to his bed only one week; but that was a week of great suffering, and at the end of that week God released him; and, though our hearts are almost broken, and we will miss our loved one so much, we know that God doeth all things well. Our father was a member of the Methodist Church, and had been for many years, and though he strayed off sometimes, he was a consistent member for several years before his death, and died a hopeful member of that church.

He was a kind father and a sympathetic friend. He leaves ten children and many friends to mourn his loss; but we know we ought not to mourn, for our loss is his eternal gain, and we know we will not be parted long if we only prove faithful to the end. May God comfort the bereaved ones and help them to so live in this life that they will meet their father in that bright world above.

A DAUGHTER.

FELDER—EULA FELDER, youngest child of George and Iowa Felder, died at Port Vincent, La., September 6, 1889, aged one year, one month and six days. This lovely child had engrafted herself into the hearts of all who knew her. She was like a bud just beginning to open and unfold its beauty, clipped by a ruthless hand, or a chord too soon broken. She was sick but a few hours when God claimed her as his own. Mourn not, fond parents, for Eula is not dead, but gone before. Beyond the beautiful river, she is now in company with the angels, singing praises around the great white throne. From the shores of the other world her little pleading voice is calling, "Papa, mamma, come this way." Bless the home with one link missing!

A gracious person once hearing how far an hypocrite might go, said, "Let hypocrites proceed as far as they can in that which is laudable; and when they can advance no further, I will go beyond them." A true Christian not only does more than others will do, but he also does more than others can do. Whatsoever is not above the top of nature, is below the bottom of grace. There are some who pretend to believe, but work not; there are others who work, but believe not; but a saint does both; he so obeys the law, as if there were no gospel to be believed; and so believes the gospel, as though there were no law to be obeyed. Religion consists not singly in believing, or doing, but in both.—The Nonsuch Professor.

The Pride of His Class.

He was a bright, handsome boy of sixteen, sunny-tempered, brilliant and engaging, the delight of his parents, the joy of his home, and the pride of his class. But a shadow fell across his bright prospects. It began with a trifling cough: soon came premonitions of consumption, his strength failed, his cheeks grew hollow, and he seemed doomed to an early grave. Then a friend advised Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery. He tried it and was saved. Health and strength returned, his cheerful voice rang out again across the school playgrounds, his cheeks again grew rosy, his eyes bright. He is still "the pride of his class" and he graduates this year with highest honors.

1. A. C. Haffelinger, do say consumption can be cured by Dr. Davis' Compound Syrup of Wild Cherry and Tar. My mother, years ago, contracting a terrible cough soon became unable to attend to her household duties. Prominent physicians pronounced it incurable consumption. We know of Dr. Davis' Wild Cherry and Tar, and commenced giving it to her. Before two bottles had been taken an improvement was noticed, and by the time one dozen bottles had been consumed she was well, and has never been troubled since. We have recommended it to many and always have it in the house. For coughs, colds, croup, whooping-cough, asthma, bronchitis, it is without a rival. One dollar bottles hold two and a half times as much as 50c. bottles.

Conservatism vs. the Rage for Novelties.

The seed Annual for 1890, issued by D. M. Ferry & Co., of Detroit, Michigan, has reached our table. Its cover this year is especially artistic and attractive, and its contents, as usual, interesting and instructive. Ferry's seeds are thoroughly reliable, and always come true. The directions given in the Annual for the cultivation of both flowers and vegetables are so full and explicit that no one can fail of success who uses their seeds and follows the instructions.

D. M. Ferry & Co. are very conservative, both in offering new sorts and in their claims for them when offered; but they take pains to inform themselves as to the true character of all new varieties, so if some much lauded novelties are not found in the Annual, the probability is they have tested them and found them of no value.

A request sent to the firm at Detroit, Michigan, will bring you a copy of the Seed Annual for 1890 by return mail.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

DOMESTIC.

The amount of attention which the subject of negro emigration is exciting is indicated by the fact that three or four measures, bearing on this question, have been introduced since the meeting of Congress.

A meeting of Southern journalists was held, in this city, on December 12, to discuss plans of operation in order to erect a monument of suitable dimensions to the memory of the late Jefferson Davis. The Southern Press Davis Monument Association is the outcome of the meeting. The organization will work in unison with the United Veterans' Association, of Atlanta, of which Gov. J. B. Gordon is chairman. The raising of funds is to begin at once.

Bills have been introduced in Congress to secure a proper observance of Sunday and give the District of Columbia representation in Congress.

A large number of the cattle breeders of Texas met at San Angelo on December 14, and, after discussing the condition of the cattle business, determined to call a convention to be composed of delegates from all the Western and Southwestern States, to be held at Fort Worth, Tex., next March.

Prof. McLean, chairman of the faculty at Grant University, Athens, Tenn., rebuked the theological class composed of seventeen. Sixteen of them first appealed to the Board of Trustees refusing to return to the school. Chancellor Spencer was sent from Cincinnati to adjust matters, and did so by removing Prof. McLean as chairman of the faculty, but retaining him as professor of technology. The students then returned and the college strike is considered over.

In the parish election, on December 14, Tangipahoa gave a majority of thirty-six against liquor. Nearly all polling places have been heard from, and it is estimated that the Prohibitionists have gained the day by a probable majority of 500 in the parish.

Advertisements for bids for the construction of the new 5,300 ton and 7,500-ton cruisers are now being prepared at the Navy Department and will be issued in a few days. The appropriation for the 5,300-ton ship is $1,800,000 and for the 7,500 ton cruiser $3,500,000.

The work of cutting down electric light wires in New York City, which was begun by the commissioner of public works last week, continues. Five gangs of men, accompanied by inspectors of the Board of Electrical Control, are at work in different parts of the city removing all wires pronounced dangerous.

A resolution was offered in the U. S. Senate by Mr. Ingalls, on December 16, for a holiday recess from December 19 to January 6. It was agreed to.

FOREIGN.

M. De Freycinet, Minister of War, in a note to the French press, appeals to the editors and writers to abstain from any descriptive or other articles which may reveal the progress of works in preparation for a national defense.

Stanley proposes to remain at Zanzibar several weeks. He will go from there to Cairo and thence to London in the spring.

Robert Browning, the poet, died on December 12.

The influenza is spreading throughout Germany. It is proposed to close all the schools, especially at Dantzic, where at least half the children are affected.

Dom Pedro is preparing a manifesto to the Brazilians, defending the acts of his ministers and explaining the overthrow of the empire. He says he will await tranquilly the expression of the will of the people, hopeful that in the coming elections the people will pronounce freely in favor of his government. In all allusions to Dom Pedro the semi-official press in Lisbon continues to treat his return to Brazil as improbable and undesirable.

Mr. Parnell, who has been very ill, is now convalescent, and the probability that he will speak at Nottingham soon is a source of gratification to his friends and allies.

Since the visit of the Montreal aldermen to the South, Minneapolis and St. Paul, most of them have become red-hot annexationists and freely express themselves as such.

The Portuguese government has applied to the Frankfort and Berlin banks to negotiate a loan of $5,000,000 milreis, ostensibly for use in adjustment of the floating debt and for the execution of various public works. At the very moment when the contract was about to become completed the banks withdrew and refused to sign. They were alarmed by advices from Lisbon touching the negotiations there that have for their objective point the declaration of a Portuguese republic.

The Westphalian strike is extending. In the Saar mines 30,000 men are employed, and 7,000 of these are now out, while a strike of the whole number is threatened and is daily looked for. In lower Silesia it is decided there shall be a general turnout upon January 1 unless there is an advance of 10 per cent. in wages and the concession that eight hours is a day's work. Employers declare that it is impossible to meet these demands.

The Clergy of America take kindly to Life Insurance, and have been its firmest champions. They fight for it and thoroughly believe in it. There are many splendid financiers in the Church; that they are intelligent and thoughtful for their future goes without saying. All denominations seek the protection of Life Insurance, and are careful to select the company offering the greatest security and the most advantageous terms to policy-holders.

The Episcopal Diocese, of New York, has an Insurance Fund for all of its members, and the Mutual Life, which is the largest and strongest company in the world, with over $122,000,000 assets, has been officially selected by that body to issue all the insurance to these worthy people.

A Southern Department of this Company has been opened in New Orleans under the management of Mr. T. H. Bowles, with offices in Louisiana National Bank Building.

WHEN JESUS CAME.

BY LOU T. WILLSON.

When Jesus came, I let him in:
He cleansed my weary heart of sin,
And all seemed changed without, within,
When Jesus came.

The sky became a deeper blue,
Each flower put on a fairer hue,
And all the world seemed sweet and new,
When Jesus came.

The sunbeams ne'er were half so bright,
The fleecy clouds ne'er half so white,
For, O, my heart with joy was light,
When Jesus came!

The very birds more sweetly sang,
And e'en the bells with gladness rang,
Tuned by my heart, in which joy sprang,
When Jesus came.

Each face familiar to my sight
Seemed to have grown more dear, more bright,
Our love filled all my heart with light,
When Jesus came.

Sing, sing thy joy, O heart of mine!
Sing of thy Savior's love divine,
Sing of the ransom that was thine,
When Jesus came.

Christmas Sermon.

BY J. B. WALKER, D. D.

"And suddenly there was with the angel a multitude of the heavenly host praising God, and saying, Glory to God in the highest, and on earth peace, good-will toward men."—Luke ii, 13, 14.

The creation of the world, the birth of Christ, and the day of judgment shall, doubtless, in eternal ages to come, be ever regarded as the greatest events on the rolls of time. They are such events as our minds can never seriously consider without feeling, in some measure, their grand and vast significance.

It is eminently proper that our minds should be called to a grateful remembrance of this day which commemorates the advent of the Son of God. It is the jubilee of the world's salvation. All the conquests of Alexander, the victories of Cæsar, and the daring and successful enterprise of Columbus, pale into insignificance before its superior brightness.

It is proper we should mark and celebrate this day with expressions of thankful joy. Gratitude is the spontaneous outgrowth of generous hearts. In all time, and among all peoples, great events commemorative of the glory and happiness of nations, as great victories, the natal days of great benefactors, have been remembered and celebrated with public rejoicings; but the custom claims the highest of all authority. The eventful night in which Israel was delivered from Egyptian bondage, and led forward by the uplifted hand, the outstretched arm, and pillar of fire, by divine command was celebrated by all their families and generations. So this hallowed day should be holy time, forever glad and green in our memories. The angels' whose peerless song has poured its glad melodies down the ages to our time, sung such a song as we would expect angels to sing. From God all blessings flow, to him all praise belongs. When earth's corner-stone was laid with joy, and prepared to be the home of innocence and love, the angels shouted for joy. When the long-promised Redeemer was born, angels, in harmony with God and sympathy with man, were present to sing the Savior's natal day.

We mark the first note in their song was, "Glory to God!" The "glory of God" was their first thought, is the first thought of all holy natures. They know that from God all good and perfect gifts descend; that his glory is the highest well-being of all his creatures This angelic recognition of God, in ascribing to him the first and highest praise, is in entire consonance with the experience of regenerated men. How spontaneously have they, when they have experienced the joy of pardoned sin, exclaimed, "Glory to God in the highest!" All gracious sonls and gracious helps are forgotten, and God is their sun and song. We repeat, this is such a song as we should expect angels to sing. All the poets who have sung in lofty song from Homer to our times have celebrated earth's martial heroes, who have led men to mortal strife and dyed the earth with blood. Angels do not rejoice over these scenes of carnage and woe; but they rejoice over man's redemption, over the offer of peace to rebellious sinners, over the end of the long war of man against God, and "over one sinner that repenteth."

This song of the angels is so beautiful in itself that it looks like an attempt to brighten the sun, paint the rose, to add to the odor of the violet, to add a word of comment; but, as faith comes by hearing, and hearing by the multitude of preachers, we will pause in meditation for a little season over this angelic song.

The angels saw in the birth of Christ that the Lord had been faithful; that he had kept his covenant through thousands of years. They saw in this great event the near fruition of all the visions of the prophets. God's promises are not to angels as to doubting men—beautiful possibilities only, but glorious realities, that only demand a little time to evolve, a short space in the countless centuries of an angel's endless life. Their eyes beheld in the birth of Christ the end of war, the overthrow of error, the defeat of sin, and the universal triumph of holiness and truth. The great redemptive scheme developed new attributes in God which angels had never seen in all the power, the wisdom, the immutability of God in the material universe. Never until now had they seen compassionating love; never before had they seen justice and mercy join to save the guilty; never until now had they known how God could be just and pardon rebels against his holy law. Here was another sun risen upon their former noon, a day of double light. They saw God as never seen before, and the glorious vision kindled the ardor of their holy natures into a shout. They burst forth in song, "Glory to God in the highest!" They see in this grand event a tribute of glory to God deeper than a thousand seas, and brighter than a thousand suns—for "now is made known to principalities and powers in heavenly places by the church the manifold wisdom of God."

But the angels sing, "On earth peace." Long had rebellious man insanely warred with God; but now God was reconciling the world unto himself by Jesus Christ, slaying the enmity by the blood of the cross. Angels wave the flag of truce; let there now be an armistice; nay, more—let there now be offered a universal amnesty: Whosoever will, let him now come to God and live through his abounding grace. Let man have peace with God; let all his heart, all his being beat in unison with God, until all within him shall say, "Thy will be done." Let man have peace with himself; no longer let conscience, reason and passion war. No longer let his heart be divided between earth and God; no longer fight his God-created nature; no longer let him war against his own peace and blessedness. Let there be harmony in his soul, and all his being flow like an unruffled stream toward God.

Let there be peace among men. Let them learn the cruel art of war no more, but "beat their swords into plowshares, and their spears into pruning-hooks." Let all the armies be disbanded; let all the sturdy men of war take hold of the hammer, the plow and the sickle, and give their strength to the useful industries of life. Let all men be brethren, and good-will, with a girdle of love, bind in one the family of man.

What is so desirable on this strife-cursed earth as peace, heaven-born peace? To realize its blessedness, look on an unhappy land wasted and blasted with war. See all the evil passions of our nature roused into destructive activity. The men armed with the dreadful and deadly enginery of war. Murder is legalized; to plunder is to ravage the foe, and enrich the spoilers with the honorable trophies of war. The work of war is to waste harvest, vineyards and orchards, to burn cities, to destroy manufactures and commerce, and impoverish helpless millions. To slay tens of thousands of the young and brave, the hope of parental hearts; to make widows and orphans, to desolate homes, to debase and demoralize the people, and increase manifold the sum of crime, and woe, is the work of war. In short, it is nothing less than hell vomiting its horrors and woes on unhappy men.

How blessed is peace with all its countless benedictions! It hushes the roar and arrests the ruin of the storm; it builds up the wastes; it heals the wounds and dries the mourner's tears. Peace plows the fields and fills the barns with plenty. The nights are calm; men sleep in peace and dread no sudden surprise and clash of arms. The holy Sabbath is remembered, and the temples of prayer are filled with devout and thankful worshipers, and the children have their schools and peaceful joys. Such are some of the blessings of peace. How pleasant is the sky, after it has been black and rent with storms, to behold the calm blue heaven, the shining sun, and listen to the song of birds; but, oh! far better is peace, after the soul has been rent with rage and hate, to feel the holy calm of peace, the sweetness and tenderness of love—when the soul, sadly conscious of its enmity to God, and divinely taught that God is angry with the wicked every day, is graciously enabled to say, "O Lord, I will praise thee, for though thou wast angry with me, thine anger is turned away, and now thou comfortest me!" Such is the peace the angels came to sing, and which this holy Christmas-time commemorates.

How many and how tender are the domestic and social memories of Christmas time! The pleasant anticipations of childhood—the gifts! the festivities! How joyous and free from carking cares those pleasant times! How delightful the gatherings of family circles around the same loved fireside! The memory of the great, the blessed, and world-redeeming Gift has, in all ages of the church, inspired the spirit of hospitality and charity. The blessed fact that Jesus became poor that we through his poverty might be made rich, should soften and warm our hearts toward the suffering poor. The poor we have with us always, and we may do them good whenever we will This season of hallowed memories ought to move us to do somewhat to cheer those in need of cheer, and make their humble homes bright with some gleams of joy.

But so long as we tabernacle here, clouds must mingle with our sunshine. When Christmas time returns memory will be busy with the past, and the heart will inquire, Where are the friends and loved ones of long ago, whose cheerful voices and pleasant faces were the gladness and sunshine of the hallowed time? Alas! they no longer form a portion of the society of earth; they have passed away forever from earthly habitations. We look around, but we see them, hear them and embrace them no more. How unspeakably sad if we should see them no more, if the separation should be everlasting; but, God be praised! he that came at the Christmas-time, and whose coming makes it forever glorious, has gone to prepare a place for us, and will come again and receive us to himself, that where he is we shall be also! Our parents and early friends, who were the friends of Jesus, who are not with us now, are "with the Lord;" they are happy now, and soon we their happiness shall see. There the glorious company of the good shall know no sorrow, no separation, but shall be bound together in the everlasting bonds of love. There our bright and endless years shall bring no change, but unceasing increase of knowledge, holiness, praise and love.

This song of the angels shall soon be translated into all the various speech of men. On all earth's thousand shores the song of the angels shall be sung, and less and less shall men sing the desolating triumphs of war and the praises of blood-stained heroes. Temples of peace shall rise in every land, and shore shall echo back to shore the ever-swelling song the angels sung when the Prince of Peace was born—"Glory to God in the highest, and on earth peace and good-will toward men." It shall fill all the sky; from heaven the song shall roll until, like commingling oceans of melody, the universe shall resound with praise—"Glory to God in the highest!"

The Day of Days—Christmas.

BY J. B. A. AHRENS, D. D.

Of the many scenes of childhood which fond recollection presents to view, none are more enchanting than those connected with Christmas. Intervening years disappear; we deem ourselves a child once more. It is Christmas Eve. Brothers and sisters with us are noisily impatient with joyous expectancy. Parents and servants are engaged in the parlor arranging for the annual Christmas festival. At last father appears. We are formed in line, two and two, the youngest in front. All join in a familiar Christmas carol:

"To us this day a Child is given,
To crown us with the joy of heaven;
Good news from heav'n the angels bring,
Glad tidings to the earth they sing".....

The hymn concluded, the large doors are opened. What beauty! what glorious spectacle! A Christmas tree, reaching almost to the ceiling, illuminated with hundreds of wax tapers, decorated with choicest cakes and candies. Suspended from the boughs in large variety of toys. Separate little tables contained numerous presents for each child. Garments, books, dolls, whips, etc. Radiant faces, merry chatter, with iterated "Thank you, mamma; papa, thank you!" Subsequently, a bounteous supper having been served, father read from the old family Bible the narrative of Christ's nativity, of the angels, the shepherds, the Babe, and the manger. Ere we retired to rest, a programme was devised for the following day; various poor and sick families were to be visited, and valuable gifts distributed. Our home was a miniature heaven.

The Wesleyans of England celebrate Christ's natal day with public worship. The Methodists of our country recognize the propriety of doing so; not a few of them following the example of their British brethren.

We know not the date of our Savior's birth. In the early centuries of the Christian era Christmas was celebrated at different periods of the year. Different sections claiming different months, the strange fact appears that all the twelve months of the calendar year have been honored with Christmas. It was not until in the sixth century that the twenty-fifth of December was finally adopted as the day for the celebration of Christ's nativity. It was accomplished by papal decree. That Christ was born at night being known, religious services were being held in church and home on the evening preceding said date. Hence the importance attached to Christmas Eve.

That Christ was not born in December is now generally conceded. That month constituted part of the wintry, rainy season in Palestine—a time when shepherds and herds were not encamping on the plains.

The various church feasts are largely of heathen origin. Easter was the name of the goddess of spring, etc. Fixing Christmas on December the twenty-fifth was not an arbitrary measure. For many centuries that day had witnessed the Saturnalia of the Roman people. Even in the subjugated provinces the Saturnalia were introdneed. In the meantime many heathen embraced Christianity. Entire villages and towns were Christianized. But heathen customs continued to adhere to them. The leaders of Zion utilized and hallowed them. Obnoxions features were eliminated; Christian sentiment substituted. The Christmas tree, amaranthine decoration of temple and home, the bestowal of gifts to the children and to the poor, constituted part of the heathen feast. Being retained, the symbolism changed. During the Roman Saturnalia the slaves were free, their masters having to wait on them. Lo! the Lord of heaven condescends to take upon himself the form of a servant—serves and saves; elevates menials to the throne. The Christmas tree, an evergreen. In the midnight of winter, green. Hope has been planted where despair held full sway. Burning tapers, illumination—Christ has brought life and immortality to light. The children's songs and the expressions of gratitude of the poor are the echo of the angelic song at Bethlehem. The numerous presents tell of God's great gift to men.

"Glory to God in the highest; on earth peace; good-will to men!"

In Northern Europe Christmas was gladly received—the date fixed deemed apropos. The Druidical religion of the Saxons and Scandinavians regarded the winter solstice, December the twenty-fifth, as a holy time. It was one of their principal feasts. Long after our forefathers had embraced the Christian religion was the Yule log burning on the hearth. It now symbolized not only the lapse, but also the fullness of time, in which God sent his Son. To this day the mistletoe, to Druids sacred, is being employed in decorating church and home for Christmas. The mistletoe is a parasite evergreen, subsisting upon the bark of the trees to which it clings. Expressive symbol of the Christian! He lives, yet not he, but Christ liveth in him. Brings nothing in his hands; clings simply to the cross. He says: For me to live is Christ. Without Christ, lost and undone; with him, an evergreen, full of hope and cheer.

The Christmas tree, illuminated with many wax tapers, symbolizes the starry heaven from whence the angels descended, exultingly bringing glad tidings to men. The taper on the tree's crown represents the star of Bethlehem leading the wise men of the East to the manger.

"When marshalled on the nightly plain,
The glitt'ring host bestud the sky,
One star alone of all the train
Can fix the sinner's wand'ring eye.
Hark! hark! to God the chorus breaks,
From ev'ry host, from ev'ry gem;
But one alone the Savior speaks,
It is the star of Bethlehem."

Scattering Missionary Information.

The Wesleyan supplies us with a good article on this subject. Our readers call to mind that this has been a sort of hobby with us. The missionary spirit is the fountain whence all religious progress proceeds, and that spirit is only quickened into life and earnest activity by missionary information. We firmly believe that money spent in scattering such information is the best investment for the present needs and for future success. Here is the article from the Wesleyan:

World Wide Missions—the new missionary monthly—now requires an issue of 80,000 copies to supply the demand for it. The Rock River Conference gave subscriptions for 7,250 copies in a few minutes.—Zion's Herald.

The above periodical has been started by the secretaries of the Board of Missions of the Northern Methodist Church. It is sold to clubs of ten or more at ten cents per copy.

Those secretaries understand the times and the needs of the church. They have touched prominent pieces and prominent people, and run their annual collections to about $1,200,000. But the increase in their collections for the last two years has not been so great as it was during the first years of Chaplain McCabe's thrilling appeals. What they now need is to reach the masses of the membership with information.

This, to day, is the need of the Southern Methodist Church. Multitudes of members know very little of what is going on in the Christian world. They do not read church papers or books. They do not attend Conferences; they hear none of the great missionary addresses. What little they know of missions is through the channel of the annual collection of the "assessments." They can never be reached by the great preachers or speakers.

We need and must keep at missionary headquarters men of great minds well equipped, who can grasp the modern missionary movement and deliver themselves upon the church and the world with Pauline power and faith. We need, and we have, great books bristling with facts and thrilling with incidents of Christian triumphs; printed sketches, too, we have, clear, logical, scriptural, and these need to be, and will probably be, multiplied indefinitely. But all this thunder and lightning and down-pour is on the mountain top, so to speak; the great rich valleys below are unwatered and barren.

What above everything else in this line we now need, is abundance of attractive, truthful, comprehensive missionary literature, so cheap that a pastor or earnest layman will not mind the trifling cost of scattering it broadcast over a community and repeating the process every month. We need a lavish waste of such literature. To enrich and fructify a few acres of grain, God pours his rain upon miles of barren rock or desert sands. Probably half the leaves on the trees of the forest would serve every practical purpose for which leaves are made, but the good Lord creates them in wasteful profusion.

We know it is the style in some quarters to sneer at missionary leaflets and count appropriations for missionary tracts and papers as if bent on printing no line and issuing no printed page without a good prospect of a direct and visible return. The church will never be stirred in the great masses of its membership by any two-penny policy of that sort. The preacher who is not willing to waste scores of sermons on incorrigible sinners in order to reach one, will never turn the world upside down.

If we were not so stupid, we might learn something from even the traveling showmen. They put their elaborate and costly advertisements in the big daily paper; but they do not rely on that. They print hundreds and thousands of handbills, and apparently waste them in the streets and alleys of the city. The handbills are trampled under foot, torn up, and, in an hundred ways destroyed without being read; but the house is filled as soon as the doors are opened.

Louisiana State Lottery.

The following resolutions were read and adopted by the Louisiana Annual Conference:

Whereas, The Louisiana State Lottery is a recognized and permitted evil, a reproach to our honor as a State, and ruining, directly and indirectly, multiplied thousands of our people throughout the Union; And, whereas, it was conceived in sin and brought forth in iniquity, and has thus far prolonged its life and course of evil by shameful and almost open bribery; And, whereas, It is now seeking a new lease of life by and through the same means—a ministry of corruption offering to buy its power to perpetuate its course of evil—seeking a higher plane of evil; And, whereas, it is the opinion of members of the present Legislature, and hundreds of good men throughout the State, that the only possible way to prevent re-chartering and perpetuating this course of corruption and ruin to State and people is an organized and determined moral and religious sentiment of the church of God throughout the State; therefore, be it

Resolved, That we, as a Conference, for ourselves, in our personal religious life, and for the thousands of the purest and best men and women of our State, whom we represent, enter our solemn protest against this monster evil—an evil so great that it can not be measured; so awful that it can not be named.

Resolved, That we most earnestly urge our State representatives—members of the Senate and House of Representatives—to do all in their power to crush out this shame and reproach to our State.

Resolved, That, as members of this Conference, we will never knowingly cast a vote for the election of any man to any State office, or to membership in the Legislature, who is in any-wise in sympathy or under the influence of the Louisiana State Lottery.

JOEL T. DAVES, Chairman.

Resolved, That the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE be requested to publish the resolutions relative to the Louisiana State Lottery, and also the resolution requesting that all the secular and religious papers of the State publish the same; also that the ADVOCATE publish the names of such papers as publish said resolution.

His Last Resting-Place.

BISHOP GALLOWAY THINKS MR. DAVIS SHOULD BE BURIED AT JACKSON.

It is eminently fitting that the remains of the most distinguished Mississippian should sleep in the generous bosom of our State. Mississippi gave him honor and he in return contributed the brightest chapter to her heroic history.

In early years he became the pride of her chivalry; at a later period her greatest statesman and parliamentary leader, and in old age, her patriotic benediction. His splendid genius was Mississippi's rarest jewel; his teachings were her doctrines; his victories her triumphs; his oblation of himself her sacrifice; his sufferings her bitterest pain; his death her sorest bereavement, and now his honored remains should be her most sacred treasure.

He led no army save at Mississippi's command, and championed no principle or policy without her direction or cordial support. Every consideration, therefore, of personal, patriotic and historic propriety pleads for him to rest at the capital of Mississippi.

And I favor a generous appropriation by the next Legislature for a suitable—a magnificent—monument to his memory. The entire citizenship of the State should contribute to a mausoleum worthy of the grandest figure in our history.

This will indicate no lack of national loyalty or any desire to perpetuate sectional estrangement, but will be a memorial to one who represented his people with a personal purity and patriotic purpose scarcely without peer or parallel, and in the hour of misfortune became their willing, uncomplaining, vicarious sufferer. We will build a monument to virtues and not to issues; to heroism and not to sectionalism.

Though opposed generally to legislative appropriations for objects other than the economical administration of our public affairs, I favor an exception in this case. It will be no precedent, for the like opportunity will never occur in our State history.

THREE CHRISTMAS CHIMES.

BY CONSTANTINA E BROOKS.

I.

Hearken! how the Christmas chime
Sings on earth its song sublime!
"See those twain with weary feet
Wander through the village street—
Doors are closed again the stranger.
See the Child, the meek and lowly,
Christ, the mighty, the all-holy,
Sleeping cradled in a manger."

Sing your joy, O Christmas chime!
Let us keep the Christmas-time.
Be the loaf of plenty doled,
Be the poor man's heart consoled.
Thus we keep the Christmas-time.

II.

Hearken! still the Christmas chime
Sings on earth its song sublime!
"Wondering shepherds see the night
Flooded with celestial light—
Wondering hear the angel message;
Come, and let us kneel before him,
Let us find him and adore him,
Peace on earth this Child doth presage."

Sing your joy, O Christmas chime!
Let us keep the Christmas time.
Let all strife and hatred cease,
Kindness live, good-will and peace.
Thus we keep the Christmas-time.

III.

Hearken! still the Christmas chime
Sings on earth its song sublime!
"Eagerly the Magi sped
By the wondrous star-beam led,
Gold and myrrh and incense offer.
He brings most, yes, he the highest Draweth unto God the Highest.
Who a heart of love doth proffer."

Sing your joy, O Christmas chime!
Let us keep the Christmas-time;
Love shall be the law to bind
In one band all humankind
Thus we keep the Christmas-time.

Texas Notes.

BY REV. B. W. WILLIAMS.

The North Texas Conference was held at Greenville, beginning November 20. This Conference embraces nine districts, and contains a membership of 38,669. A good deal of hard work was done within its bounds the past year, but in many instances under disadvantageous circumstances. In some sections unfruitful seasons, disastrous floods, destructive hail storms, and ruined or shortened crops worked hardships on the preachers and occasioned deficient reports. The net gain in members over last year was found to be only 1,258, and the collections were not "full." A class of seventeen preachers was admitted on trial, and eight were received into full connection. A memorial was adopted asking the General Conference to specify the subjects included in the words, "ordinary branches of an English education," as found in the prescribed course of study; also to publish our Sunday-school literature at cost, so as to compete with the cheap and inferior literature by which it is too often displaced. (Good suggestions!) Bishop Key was called away during the session by a telegram announcing the very serious illness of his wife. Texarkana was chosen, by a unanimous vote, as the place for the next annual meeting.

The German Mission Conference was held by Bishop Galloway at Cuero, Texas, November 13-17. It is comprised in two presiding elder's districts, and shows a list of fifteen or sixteen peachers who received appointments. This small band of brave and earnest workers are doing what they can to supply the German population in Texas with the Word of Life. The religious services during the session were very profitable, and they had penitents at the "mourner's bench." It is also worthy of remark that the contributions of this Conference for missions is more than one dollar per capita, which is far above the average.

The Texas Annual Conference was held at La Grange, beginning December 4. Bishop Granbery was present at the opening, and conducted the religious services, after which Bishop Key proceeded with the business of the Conference. This Conference has six presiding elders' districts and nearly fourteen thousand communicants. This was its fiftieth session. The financial claims of the church were not fully met, as there was a small deficiency in the collections. Several new men were admitted on trial; a number of transfers were received, and about a dozen preachers were transferred to other Conferences.

The death of Jefferson Davis brought sorrow to almost every Southern home. The people of Texas very generally united in doing honor to the dead chieftain. At the hour appointed for his funeral, suitable memorial services were held in many places throughout the State. At Weatherford, where the writer hereof resides, the ceremonies were very imposing and impressive. The people assembled at the courthouse—a large and commodious building, which was crowded to its utmost capacity. The interior of the building was appropriately draped in mourning and decorated with floral tributes of great beauty and excellence. A large number of ex-Confederates, in line, marched in mournful procession to the place of meeting, escorted by the "Frontier Guards," a local military company. The churches, Sunday-schools, colleges and public schools were not wanting in tributes of respect and devotion. Business was suspended, and all classes manifested heartfelt sorrow. The music, prayer, and resolutions and addresses were very touching and appropriate. The South has sustained a severe loss in the death of that distinguished man, whose name will be revered as long as liberty shall have votaries.

WEATHERFORD, Texas.

Local Preachers.

I quote from the ADVOCATE, of December 12: "Bishop Galloway spoke very emphatic to the Conference on the necessity of administering the law of the Discipline to local preachers. The itinerant must assign them work in the bounds of the circuits where their membership is held." There is something becoming wrong between the itinerant and local ministry, evidently from the Bishop's language and other facts in the case. To illustrate, let us give the experience of our local preachers; others have said theirs were little different from it. The itinerant or station preacher reached his appointment the first of the year; his local preacher to hear him, and to hear him regularly, except when filling appointments on outside circuits. The itinerant closes his labors with his appointment. He never asked the local preacher (although the itinerant absented himself on a number of occasions during the year) to preach a single time, never to assist in prayer meetings, and not even to make the closing prayer at any of his appointments, except on one occasion. Other local preachers were treated likewise as to closing services; but if an itinerant should be present, he would ask him to lead in the closing prayer. Yet that itinerant manifested friendship and good feeling toward that local preacher outside of the church. That local preacher is a liberal supporter of that itinerant, as far as his means will allow. His character is good in his church and before the outside world. The case, therefore, seems to be that it is the office, and not the man, that is objectionable to the itinerant. It is evident from the Bishop's language that this is not the only case of itinerants neglecting the local preachers. Is this becoming general? Is it true that itinerants are beginning to regard local preachers as a useless incumbrance on the church? If this be so, then there certainly is work for the General Conference to do. If two elements or offices of so intimate a relation are becoming antagonistic to each other, or even so regarded by the itinerancy, then the sooner the office is abolished, the better for the main body. If the local ministry is of legitimate right in church, then let the itinerancy show those who hold the office that courtesy that is due them. With the law of the church as it stands, the Bishop's position is well taken, and all intelligent, truly pious and law-abiding local ministers are willing to abide the enforcement of the Discipline. With proper management they are a great help to the itinerant ministry. OBSERVER.

Help for Young Preachers.

The North Mississippi Conference for several years has generously aided some of her young men through school. These young men are filling important places and are having marked success. We have the golden opportunity of doing more than we ever have done. First, in regard to the number of young men who conspicuously and deservedly need help; then, in regard to the means; then, a permanent organization by which to direct the means.

Now, you, dear brethren, sisters, friends, who want a better educated ministry—and who does not?—make us an annual donation, or a free-will offering, or a gift, or a bequeathment for this sole purpose. You can direct your money to be given to the worthy, needful young preacher, or us to take his note without interest, payable when he is through school and at regular work, or able. We shall only assist those properly recommended. If any money—of sufficient amount—is not in use, we will lend it out at good interest, and with wise counsel endeavor to make it safe. We are very much in need of money now to keep two or three young preachers at school. We prefer, in the main, to loan the money to them.

Rev. J. C. Low, of Lexington; Rev. T. W. Lewis, of Winona, are the treasurer and secretary of the North Mississippi Conference Ministerial Aid Association to assist young men in securing a better education. Everybody help. Either one of the above-named brethren or myself will gladly give you any information pertaining to the association. Truly yours,

J. M. WYATT, Pres.

WATER VALLEY, Miss.

Information Wanted.

About July 28, Isaac Trotter, an adopted son of Peasant Trotter and his wife, left his home in Sabine parish, La. Age, nineteen years; dark complexion, black eyes and hair, a small scar on his nose, between the eyes; a small scar on the left side of forehead, near the edge of hair; five feet five inches high.

Said Isaac Trotter is, or was, when he left home, a good, quiet, peaceable and industrious young man. We desire to know his whereabouts, as he left, in the hands of his adopted parents, one horse, forty acres of land, seven head of cattle, one hundred dollars in money, which property we desire him to have, and still make our house his home, and find in us, his adopted parents, those that will still care and seek his welfare.

Anyone giving us any information of Isaac (which will be thankfully received) will be rewarded. Address Pleasant Hill, La. P. TROTTER.

The sphere of duty is infinite. It exists in every station of life. We have it not in our choice to be rich or poor, to be happy or unhappy; but it becomes us to do the duty that everywhere surrounds us. Obedience to duty, at all costs and risks, is the very essence of the highest civilized life. Great deeds must be worked for, hoped for, died for, now as in the past.—S. Smiles.

HAIL!

BY C. E. WILTON-STONE.

Child! afar there shines a star
That with Christmas splendor glows,
And the year is coming near,
While the East is like a rose;
And space il sweeps through space
By the sweet unknown beguiled—
Give the new-born year a place!
Hail, oh, Child,
Hail the undoubted!

Sun arise, ride high the skies,
Shine with light divinely clear;
Sailing through the heaven's deep blue,
See, the chariot of the year!
And space il sweeps through space
By the sweet unknown beguiled--
Give the new-born year a place!
Hail, oh, Child,
Hail the undoubted!

Hush! speak low, the angels know!
Hear God's message, "Come up higher!"
Strive and aim all heaven to claim,
Greet the year with pure desire;
For space il sweeps through space
By the sweet unknown beguiled--
Give the new-born year a place!
Hail, oh, Child,
Hail the undoubted!

MR. EDITOR: I have just about closed the work of Paulding circuit for the year 1889. We have had a very successful year. Forty accessions to the church, with good revivals throughout the circuit; many family altars erected to God; some of the strongest men in Jasper county have joined our church this year. We had with us for several weeks Bro. J. T. Nicholson, of Hazlehurst. He came to us on a visit to the home of his childhood. His old friends greeted him and appreciated him as, perhaps, they would not have hardly any other man. We regard Bro. Nicholson as one of our best Conference men, and a rare preacher. We also had with us Bros. J. W. Chambers, J. N. Ware, and D. C. Langford. These brethren did us fine service. Our collections ordered by the Annual Conference, in connection with the pastor's salary, will all be met in full. We have raised for churches and parsonage repairs and all other objects a total sum of $1,500.

Yours truly, R. F. WITT.

Another Victory.

At an election held in the third ward of Red River parish, to take the sense of the qualified electors of said ward, whether license should be granted for the sale of liquor in the ward, the vote stood as follows:

Gus Jones' School-house—for license, 1; against license, 52; Rich's Mill—for license, 31, against license, 22. Majority against license in the ward, 72.

The vote was light on account of rain. The liquor men pooled, at least, eighty-five per cent. of their full strength at the Rich's Mill precinct (one mile from grocery). The negroes voted almost solidly for license; only three (John Colman, Nent Lampkins, August George Lampkins) voting for peace.

Thanks be unto God for the victory.

BOOKS.

THE AUTOBIOGRAPHY OF BENJAMIN FRANKLIN. Edited, with notes, by John Bigelow. G. P. Putnam's Sons, New York; Eyrich, New Orleans. Price, $1.

This volume belongs to the Putnam's Knickerbocker Nuggets, and is a valuable contribution to that series. Mr. Bigelow has added an autobiographical chapter never before printed in English. Everything about this great philosopher is interesting; how much more when a large part of his life is written by his own pen!

HOLIDAYS IN THE COUNTRY. By Irene. Sunday-school Department, Southern Methodist Publishing House, Nashville. Price, board, 25 cents; cloth, 50 cents.

This is an interesting book for the little folks, gotten up in attractive style, and will be a source of pleasure to our young friends.

THE PRESIDING ELDER'S RECORD BOOK. By Rev. J. A. Mumpower, of the Missouri Conference. Advocate Publishing Company, St. Louis.

This seems to be a complete book for gathering statistics; but whether it will suit depends upon who the presiding elder is and what have been his previous methods. We think the spaces for figures are too small.

INTERLINEAR GREEK-ENGLISH GOSPEL OF LUKE: SUNDAY-SCHOOL LESSONS for 1890. Paper, 25 cents; cloth, 50 cents. Albert & Scott, Chicago.

Just the book for every wide-awake Sunday-school worker. Among Sunday-school helps it occupies a place peculiarly its own. It supplies a Greek text, the Greek order of words in English, and an emphatic translation different from any other now published. These things make it valuable to every careful student of the Word, whether he may or may not read Greek. For sale by all booksellers, or mailed on receipt of price by the publishers.

JOE: A BOY IN WAR TIMES. By W. Bigham. Southern Methodist Publishing House—Sunday-school Department. Price, sixty cents.

This is a stirring story for boys. It brings vividly before them the terrible scenes of the late war. The author is a Southerner, but his book evinces nothing of the bitter partisan spirit.

THE FORERUNNER ANNOUNCED

Luke 1, 5-17.

GOLDEN TEXT.—Behold, I will send my messenger, and he shall prepare the way before me.—Mal. iii, 1.

TIME.—B. C. 6.

PLACE.—The temple in Jerusalem.

5. In the days of—Toward the last of Herod's reign. He died in the fourth year before the commencement of our era, shortly before Easter. Accordingly, the birth of Christ must have taken place at least four years earlier than the usual date. Herod—An Idumean usurper imposed on the nation by the Romans. The son of Antipater, a distinguished general, who, by his own bravery and the favor of the Romans, had obtained supreme power over his native Idumea, and great authority in Judea. There are several Herods mentioned in the Bible. This one was father of the Herod (Herod Antipas) before whom Salome danced, who slew John the Baptist, desired to see a miracle worked by Jesus, and whom our Lord described as a fox; of the Herod (Herod Philip I.) whose wicked wife, Herodias, deserted him to become his brother Antipas' queen; and of the Herod (Herod Philip II.) who built Cesarea Philippi, and is mentioned by Luke as Philip the tetrarch. These three were half-brothers. Herod the Great was grandfather of the Herod (Herod Agrippa I.) who put to death James the elder, cast Peter into prison, and, being hailed by his flatterers as a god, was smitten by an angel of the Lord "because he gave not God the glory;" and great-grandfather of that Herod (Herod Agrippa II.) who seduced his sister Berenice, and trembled when Paul preached. King of Judea—The title of king was decreed to Herod by the Roman Senate on the recommendation of Anthony and Octavius. Besides Judea, Samaria, and Galilee, his kingdom included the most important regions of Perea. Zacharias means Jehovah remembers. Names were in those days phrases compounded into words and intended to be characteristic and descriptive (like the famous Praise-God Barebones of Cromwell's time). Where they failed of this they were usually supplemented by an appropriate surname. The course of Abia—Early in Hebrew history Aaron's descendants had so multiplied that only a small minority of them could constantly engage in the ritual service. In King David's day they numbered twenty-four "families." To secure the employment of all David distributed among them by lot the order of their service from week to week each for eight days inclusively, from Sabbath to Sabbath. These "courses" kept their names and order, though not their descent, after the captivity. His wife—Elisabeth means God's oath. She was named after her ancestress the wife of Aaron. John was thus of priestly descent by both parents.

6. Righteous before God—Sincerely scrupulous in conformity to the details of the Mosaic law. Theirs was Pharisaic piety, though in the good, not in the evil, sense of that phrase. Commandments and ordinances would, to a pious Jew of that day, have included all the positive and negative precepts, which later rabbis said were six hundred and thirteen in number, namely: two hundred and forty-eight positive, and three hundred and sixty-five negative. Blameless—Paul uses the same word in respect to himself (Phil. iii, 6) in describing his condition at the time when he was "the chief of sinners."

7. They had no child—This cut off all hope of the birth of the Messiah in that family, and was regarded as often involving a moral reproach, and as being a punishment for sin.

8. And it came to pass, etc.—With more familiar idioms this sentence might be read: "It so happened that while he served as a priest in the temple, during the official term of his family (according to the custom, then in vogue, of having the priestly families serve in successive courses), he was chosen to offer incense in the holy of holies."

9. His lot was—In the service of the sanctuary nothing was left to accident or to human arrangement. The lot determined every detail. To burn incense—Incense was burned twice a day in the temple—in the morning and in the evening. At nine A. M. and three P. M. The censer in which the incense was burned was probably a pan for the carriage of the coals, rather than the vase-like vessel such as is now used in the Roman Catholic Churches.

10. The whole multitude—It is very probable that this was on the Sabbath day. Praying without—In deep silence. At the time of incense—When the priest stood by the incense altar, the prayers offered in the temple courts were repeated all over the land, and in every region, however distant, to which a godly Jew had wandered. In a place so sacred, separated only by a veil from the holy of holies—that awful presence-chamber of the Almighty—at a moment so solemn, when it had fallen to him to enjoy an awful honor which most of his brethren could not expect to obtain, and which could never be repeated, he must have been well-nigh overpowered with emotion.

11. An angel—The first note in that "overture of angels" which introduced Christ to the world. Their voice is heard by Zacharias, by the shepherds, by Mary, and thrice by Joseph. Probably no angel had been seen for four hundred years. As far as we may reason from the analogy of other angelic appearances, his outward form was that of a "young man clothed in white linen," or "in bright apparel," a kind of transfigured Levite. The right side—This would be regarded by a Jew as an omen of good fortune. But which was "the right side?" Bleek and many others understand the right as regarded the officiating priest, who stood with his face to the altar. It would thus be on the north side of the holy place, where the table of showbread stood. Equally careful commentators believe it to have been the south side, between the altar and the candlestick. Zacharias being on the north side, in front of the altar, while offering incense.

12. Fear fell upon him—Such has been the uniform effect of supernatural appearances, even when gracious, to good men. Wonderful is the fear which curdles the blood of even the bravest of mortals at the thought of meeting a messenger from God. Not to be wholly attributed to astonishment, and still less to a conviction of moral impurity, only. It was largely due to the old popular belief that he who had seen God would die; and may have been strengthened by traditional remembrance of the cherubim with the flaming sword at the gate of Eden.

13. Fear not—The first utterance of the dawn of the gospel. St. Luke begins with this angelic encouragement, and ends with the apostles "blessing and praising God." God's response to the fears of man is always, "Fear not." Thy prayer is heard—He had prayed for a son, but, as appears below, long since; for he had now ceased to look for an answer to that prayer. Prayers of faith are filed in heaven, and are not forgotten, though the thing prayed for is not presently given. Prayers made when we were young and coming into the world may be answered when we are old and going out of the world. John—The name is really Jochanan, "God is gracious," equivalent to the German Gotthold. "The God-given," a suitable name for one divinely given in answer to prayer.

14. Many shall rejoice at his birth—He will benefit multitudes. Multitudes to-day rejoice because of the birth of John.

15. Great—A truly great person. "In the sight of the Lord"—Signifies probably the spiritual nature of his office. Nothing is great but what is great before God. "Neither wine nor strong drink"—The wine of Judea was light, often not stronger than American cider. The chemical art of distilling the modern inflaming liquors was unknown to the ancients; but they made intoxicating drinks from the palm tree, from apples, and from the grains. "Strong drink" (sikera) includes all intoxicating liquor not made from grapes. Ministering priests were similarly forbidden to drink strong drink, and the Nazarites even more rigidly. As the leper was the living symbol of sin, so was the Nazarite that of holiness. It was fitting that the utmost severity of legal consecration should be seen in Christ's forerunner. "Shall be filled with the Holy Ghost"—The contrast between the false and hateful excitement of drunkenness and the divine exaltation of spiritual fervor is also found in Eph. v, 18: "Be not drunk with wine, but be filled with the Spirit."

16. Many . . . shall he turn—The work of John was a concentration of the spirit of the law, whose office it was to convince of sin, and thus prepare the way for Christ.

17. The Revised Version of this sentence is much better. "He shall go before him"—Shall herald his approach; shall swing back the door for the entrance of that incomparable Jew whom all the prophets have foretold—whose personality is so matchless that a mere pronoun is enough to identify him. "In the spirit and power of Elias"—From the last words of Malachi (iv, 4-6; iii, 1) the Jews universally believed (as they do to this day) that Elijah would visibly return to earth as a herald of the Messiah. It required the explanation of our Lord to open the eyes of the apostles on this subject. "This is Elias which was for to come." Matt. xi, 14. "Elias truly shall first come and restore all things. . . . Then the disciples understood that he spake unto them of John the Baptist." Matt. xvii, 10-14. The resemblance was partly in external aspect, partly in his mission of stern rebuke and invitation to repentance. "To turn the hearts of the fathers to the children"—As in the original meaning of Malachi, to remedy disunion and restore family life. Others interpret this, restore to the children (the people of that day, John's contemporaries) the devout disposition of their fathers. These are the last words of the Old Testament, there uttered by a prophet, here expounded by an angel; there concluding the law, and here beginning the gospel. (Mal. iv, 5.) "Behold," saith Malachi, "I will send you Elijah the prophet;" and "he," saith the angel, "shall go before him in the spirit and power of Elias." And he "shall turn the hearts of the fathers unto the children," saith the one; and "to turn the hearts of the children to their fathers," saith the other. Thus sweetly and nearly do the two Testaments join together, and thus divinely do they kiss each other; like the two cherubim in the temple oracle, as with their outward wings they touch the two sides of the house, from "In the beginning" to "Come, Lord Jesus," so with their inner they touch each other, the end of the law with the beginning of the gospel. To make ready a people—More clearly, "to make ready for the Lord a prepared people," to have in readiness a people prepared to welcome him. Such preparation requires in every age and every soul an operation corresponding to John the Baptist's ministry.

Boys' School in Piracicaba (Brazil).

MR. EDITOR: Below you will find a translation of a letter written me by two eminent men of the city of Piracicaba, viz: the Drs. Prudente J. Moraes Barros and Manoel de Moraes Barros:

REV. SIR JAMES L. KENNEDY, Sao Paulo:

In answer to your letter of the seventeenth instant, we proceed to give you the information asked, endeavoring to respond satisfactorily to all your questions, though not following the same order.

Great is the necessity for a boys' high school in this city, which is the fourth in the province in point of population. After the capital comes Campinas and Santos, and then Piracicaba, which has within city limits a population of nine thousand souls, more or less. The municipality is extensive, one of the most fertile in the province, already rich in products, and has a great future before it. The greatest proof of the said necessity is the fact of the existence of the College Piracicabana (W. B. M. college.—J. L. K.), which already has had 104 pupils, and at present has eighty-four. Now, if higher education is everywhere considered more necessary for men than women, in a much greater degree exists that difference of necessity in this country, where there are many who judge that women do not need instruction; so much so that a college for boys can confidently count on double the number of pupils now in attendance upon the Piracicaba College. This will be true if, by its good management and usefulness, it acquires the same good reputation which that college has attained.

It is of little importance whether the college be directed under the auspices of the Methodist Church or not—a circumstance which has been, of all, the most prejudicial to the College Piracicabana, and will be less so to the projected ones, because in our country the Catholic religion is judged more necessary for women, and because with the Brazilian people there abounds perfect indifference as to religion.

At present there exists an establishment of higher instruction; but it is in a state of decline, and it seems that it is on the eve of closing, since its two best professors have already left. This took place, not for want of pupils (for in less than one year it matriculated seventy), but for lack of good internal discipline. It is not easy to say how many pupils the college can count on at the beginning; but it seems to us that by the end of the first quarter it ought to have from thirty to fifty pupils—the which depends largely upon the prices established by the institution. The college may receive pupils from the neighboring towns: Santa Barbara, where there is not a small American colony; Sao Pedro, Capivary, Rio Claro, etc., where (exception made of Limeira) there does not exist a single institution of higher education. The College Piracicabana has matriculated not a few pupils from abroad. The college can count on all our good-will, for, since we feel its great necessity, we are disposed to help by all the means within our reach. As to the delay of establishing the said college, the only difficulty that may possibly arise is the founding of some other like institution here, the which, however, is not very probable, if we determine now upon establishing an institution on a satisfactory basis. It will be well for the new college to commence now and remain permanently.

With an expression of good-will toward whatever else may be necessary, we subscribe ourselves,

Your attentive and obliging venerators, (Signed)

PRUDENTE J. MORAES BARROS,
MANOEL DE MORAES BARROS.

PIRACICABA, July 24, 1889.

THIS LETTER SPEAKS FOR ITSELF.

1. It shows the necessity of a good high school in Piracicaba.

2. It shows we have the confidence and good-will of two of the most prominent politicians and citizens in this city, and we enjoy the same on the part of many others.

3. In their opinion, the projected school would surely succeed if it were well managed.

4. It would pay well. The average price would be about $5 per month. Say, we had during the first term thirty boys—we might have fifty. Thirty boys paying $5 gives $150 a month. If the school attained a matriculation of 100 boys, the monthly income would be $500; if 200, the monthly income would reach $1,000. You see the probable future before the school, should it be properly managed.

5. Our church needs the school. It being established here, it and our girls' college could be of mutual help. Some of the teachers could serve both institutions.

6. With a boys' school here, we could gather in pupils for both colleges, the which are beyond our reach at present. More sisters would come from abroad if their brothers could come with them.

7. We have a school already projected at Yuiz de Fora; but that is three days' journey from here by rail. We need that, and can not afford to do without this one, which promises so much.

8. A few days ago a public-school teacher told me the following: "Perhaps twenty per cent. of our people know how to read; half of this twenty per cent. do not understand what it reads, and half of this latter class are perfectly indifferent to what it reads." Before we can well avail ourselves of the strong power of the press, we must educate, at least, in a measure, a reading public. I am satisfied, moreover, that the boys and girls who frequent our schools can not be Roman Catholics. As the letter shows, the intelligent class are already indifferent and very skeptical.

In conclusion, this seems to me to be a great providential opening to our church. To fail to improve it, I believe would be a betrayal of our trust. All we ask for is another such man as Bro. Lander to dedicate himself to the work. We ask for his salary and something to secure house-rent and running expenses for the first year. After the school has proven a success we shall ask for money to buy property and build.

We trust the various church papers will copy our communication in order that our whole church may be apprised of the great opening now before us in Piracicaba and in this province.

Fraternally,

JAMES L. KENNEDY.

ACTION OF OUR RECENT ANNUAL CONFERENCE.

Whereas, We have heard much of the earnest desire upon the part of many in Piracicaba to have a boys' school; therefore, be it

Resolved, That this matter be taken in hand by the presiding elder of Sao Paulo district and the pastor of Piracicaba mission to do the very best they can during this year to seize the opportunity and to look to permanently establishing a boys' school in that city. (Signed)

A great artist once painted a picture of a woman clinging, with both hands, to the cross, amidst foaming billows. But somehow it did not please him, and he painted another. It was the same woman, the same cross, the same raging sea; but this time she held on with one hand and with the other she upheld a sinking, drowning one. This was the true picture of the gospel; and every genuine Christian is clinging not only to the cross himself, but, like the Savior, seeking to save those who are sinking amidst the waves of sin and sorrow.—Ringwood.

Dyspepsia

Makes many lives miserable, and often leads to self destruction. Distress after eating, sick headache, heartburn, sour stomach, mental depression, etc., are caused by this very common and increasing disease. Hood's Sarsaparilla tones the stomach, creates an appetite, promotes healthy digestion, relieves sick headache, clears the mind, and cures the most obstinate cases of dyspepsia. Read the following:

"I have been troubled with dyspepsia. I had but little appetite, and what I did eat distressed me, or did me little good. In an hour after eating I would experience a faintness or tired, all-gone feeling, as though I had not eaten anything. Hood's Sarsaparilla did me an immense amount of good. It gave me an appetite, and my food relished and satisfied the craving I had previously experienced. It relieved me of that faint, tired, all-gone feeling. I have felt so much better since I took Hood's Sarsaparilla, that I am happy to recommend it." G. A. PAGE, Watertown, Mass.

Christmas Greeting.

The Advocate brings greeting to every reader, young and old, upon the return of this holy Christmas-time. The anniversary of the coming of the Lord to our sin-scarred earth—is a day all should celebrate with holy joy. That was really the first bright and hopeful day humanity ever saw since the gates of Paradise were closed. The long reign of sin had well-nigh crushed out all hope of deliverance from its thralldom. But when the Christ came there was a thrill of hope that shot through the heart of humanity and evoked a glad strain of song from heaven itself. That day was the opening dawn of a new reign. It was the blessed harbinger of the kingdom of righteousness. Its morning twilight was made brilliant by the flashings of angels' wings, and its rising sun kissed the soft cheek of the new-born Prince of Peace. The Babe in the manger is an object-lesson to teach us how low God can stoop to save sinners. An apostle states the wonderful fact in these wonderful words: "He humbled himself." The purpose of the incarnation should engage the thought of all during this time. "Jesus Christ came into the world to save sinners." It was a grand purpose, a benevolent purpose, a purpose which could only originate in the divine benevolence, and, in its full and final results, declares, as nothing else can, the divine love for our race. Here, then, is the reason for making this a joyous time. In view of the great purpose of the incarnation let every soul be joyful, but joyful in the Lord. There is no room nor reason for sinful mirth and hilarity. Let this be the "holy week" of the year. Let its joy be a holy joy. Let its charities be such as shall contribute to the honor of Christ. Let its benefactions be bestowed in his name. Let its greetings bring up the beautiful memories of Christ on earth. Let its hours carry upward the evidences of true devotion and unwavering loyalty. Then there shall be a happy, because holy, Christmas to us all.

Mississippi Conference.

FIRST DAY.

Conference met in the Methodist Church in Crystal Springs, December 18, 1889. Bishop C. B. Galloway called the Conference to order at 9 A. M., and conducted the opening services in the use of Matthew x, hymn No. 228 and prayer. After a second hymn (No. 546), Rev. R. S. Woodward led in a most touching prayer.

The call of the roll indicated quite a full attendance.

Dr. C. G. Andrews was elected secretary, with J. A. B. Jones as assistant. T. W. Adams was elected recording, and J. W. Chambers, statistical secretary.

The usual standing committees were appointed, after which communications from the Publishing House, New Orleans Advocate and other sources were read and referred to the various committees.

Drs. Barbee and Morton, both of whom give evidence of having absorbed somewhat of something, were presented to the Conference; also Bros. Mitchel, of the New Orleans Advocate, and Bachman, of the North Mississippi Conference. These brethren are all fully acquainted with the interests which they represent.

The committee appointed to confer with like committee from the North Mississippi Conference as to the advisability of establishing a Methodist College for boys in Mississippi, made report recommending the same, and suggested the appointment of eight trustees from each Conference, with Bishop Galloway, who should proceed at once to the establishing of the institution. The committee report the outlook for the college as very encouraging, and suggest that the school might reasonably be expected to begin operations by October 1, 1890.

Dr. Hunnicutt presented report of the trustees of Centenary College, containing the fact that 120 pupils had been enrolled the present session, of whom sixteen are young preachers and sixteen sons of ministers. The senior class numbers fourteen, the largest for a quarter of a century. He also reported a fine work as being done by the Y. M. C. A. of the college.

Fifteen young men were received on trial, viz: Jerome R. Whittington, M. D.; James G. Leggett, Martin L. White, Charles W. Crisler, James C. Ellis, Robert H. Barr, Matthew J. Miller, Patrick H. Howse, Henry C. Brown, Henry L. Norton, James J. Smylie (son of the lamented J. J. Smylie, of former years), Hervie Mellard, William M. Stephens, William Henry Lewis (son of Rev. W. B. Lewis) and George H. Thompson.

This is an unusually large class, and among its members are some very excellent minds and promising characters. Evidently Methodism in Mississippi is not dead yet.

From the reports given by the presiding elders, the year has been a very successful and harmonious one.

Under Ques. 20 the following were passed: C. McDonald, Dr. T. S. West, R. D. Norsworthy, D. A. Little, P. A. Johnston, W. B. Lewis, J. A. Ellis, E. R. Strickland, D. W. Dillehay, D. Merchant, G. T. Vickers, Levi Pearce, T. Price, J. M. Gann, A. B. Nicholson, J. A. Godfrey, E. A. Flowers, T. Y. Armstrong, R. Abbey, J. A. Vance, J. W. Sandell, J. G. Sibley.

Though past his fourscore years, Dr. Abbey seems ruddy and strong, and takes a lively interest in the work of the Conference. Were it not for his snowy locks, he might readily be classed among the younger generation. How pleasant to see one come to his age with such cheerfulness of spirit!

The absence of such faces as Strickland, Dillehay and Godfrey, all brethren beloved, and tottering under the weight of years, reminds us of the ravages of time, and we are saddened.

Conference adjourned with benediction.

It was difficult to see what connection this had with the business of the Publishing House, but the brethren listened patiently.

After announcements, the Conference adjourned with benediction by Dr. C. G. Andrews.

Her information in regard to the woman's work reveals the fact that a great forward movement has been made, and is now going on with accelerated velocity. The tide is constantly rising and the momentum increasing in power continually. The Conference listened to Mrs. Wightman's pure English with a delighted interest. Dr. Marshall, in a few choice, tender words, thanked Mrs. Wightman in behalf of the Conference.

Bro. Mellen presented a strong resolution against the Louisiana Lottery, which was referred to the Committee on the State of the Church. Dr. Marshall presented several memorials to the General Conference, which were referred to the Committee on Memorials.

The report of the Sunday-school Board was read by J. T. Nicholson. The report shows unmistakable evidence of increase in the Sunday-school work in almost all parts of the Conference. It ought to be impressed indelibly upon all our people that faithful work in this department will yield larger and more satisfactory results than can be attained in any other department of church service. The report was received.

The resolutions suggesting that the preachers preach on the subject of missions and the presiding elders hold missionary meetings throughout their districts were carried.

The report of the Board of Education was read by Dr. G. Andrews. The cause of education is gaining ground in our territory, and what is needed is well-endowed institutions equipped with Methodist teachers. President Hunnicutt addressed the Conference in behalf of Centenary College, showing the good work being done in that institution, and the promising outlook for the future. M. Featherstun spoke a few words of commendation of the work done at Centenary. R. M. Saunders, president of East Mississippi Female College, spoke in reference to the general subject of education and also in regard to the work being done in the institution over which he presides, and the absolute necessity of an enlargement in buildings, appliances, etc. President Fitzhugh represented Whitworth College as enjoying a large measure of deserved success.

On motion of W. B. Lewis, it was resolved that hereafter speeches be limited to five minutes.

Mississippi Conference Notes.

One presiding elder reported that his district had advanced 70 per cent. on foreign missions over last year. That is one straw which shows how the missionary breeze is setting. In many other places there is a quickening of the missionary pulse. Many people are thinking about missions who have not thought on the subject heretofore, and next year we shall see a larger increase in missionary funds than ever before. God is enlarging the hearts of his people, and that enlargement will be manifested in their gifts.

Thursday evening, at three o'clock, the Woman's Department of Church Extension held a meeting. The annual report was read by Mrs. Jones, and showed a gratifying advance in the work during the year. The address was delivered by Bro. Luman Cooper, and was replete with sound thought clothed in beautiful words, and was listened to with fixed attention by the audience. Bro. Cooper's treatment of the subject evinced a familiarity which comes only from painstaking study. Drs. Morton and Barbee both made short, crisp talks, much to the edification and delight of the hearers. The occasion was one of profit and pleasure to all present.

The annual meeting of the Conference Brotherhood was held Friday evening, and the usual business was transacted. It strikes us that this is a useful organization. The object of the Brotherhood is to afford immediate relief to the family upon the death of a preacher who is a member of it. Upon the death of a member, an assessment of $5 is levied upon each surviving member, and this is paid over to the family of the deceased as soon as collected. Thus it affords relief, where there might otherwise be want and suffering. In many cases such relief is, indeed, a godsend and keeps the wolf from the door. We found the same organization in the North Mississippi Conference. The disposition to help the needy is growing, and it is a good sign.

Saturday night found a packed house gathered in a missionary mass meeting. The speakers for the occasion were Dr. Barbee, of Nashville, and President Newell, of Grenada Female Institute. Dr. Barbee spoke for over an hour on the general subject, and President Newell told how and when to take a missionary collection. Both speakers got at the hearts of the hearers and were listened to with profound attention. Such speeches are a great improvement on the former missionary addresses. The mission work in this Conference is enlarging in area and increasing in importance, and the monies raised are growing larger with each succeeding year. All that is necessary to make the church a missionary church, in deed as well as in theory, is the continuous dissemination of missionary information, and this is also being done as never before.

The church extension anniversary was opened by religious services conducted by Bro. Mellen. The treasurer, J. A. Ellis, made his report, showing that during the past year $1,870 were collected from the circuits and stations. Dr. Morton, the general secretary, was introduced, and for an hour entertained and instructed the large audience with an address every way worthy of the cause he represents. The growth of the work has been remarkable, and it is enlarging all the time. Hundreds of churches and parsonages are being assisted by the Board every year. The calls for help are so many that the Board is unable to answer them all. The church needs to give more liberally and largely to meet the growing demand made upon the finances of the society. The collection amounted to five hundred dollars; the whole amount raised during the year being $2,400. This Conference is the first one east of the Mississippi river that has raised its assessment. Good for the Mississippi Conference!

The people of Crystal Springs could not have had better preaching on Sunday if they had had the choice of the whole church for their preachers. Bishop Galloway at the Methodist Church, Dr. Black at the Baptist, and Dr. Marshall at the Presbyterian, constituted a trio of preachers not easily matched anywhere. We heard Dr. Marshall, and a more earnest, unctuous, helpful, uplifting sermon we have not heard in many, many days. The love-feast at the Methodist Church, led by Bro. Norsworthy, was a time of great spiritual power. The Spirit was present in the congregation and in the hearts of the brethren, and it was a precious place of communion. The talks were crisp, and to the point, and there was refreshment to all. We were glad to hear so many young ministers speak, as well as the old soldiers of the cross. The Conference love-feast is the best meeting of an Annual Conference. May it never lose its power!

An educational mass meeting in the interest of the Mississippi Male College was held Friday night. The report of the Joint Committee of the two Conferences was read by Bro. Mellen, showing the progress the committee had made in the work assigned. The report showed that $43,000 had been secured for the endowment of the college, and that lands and thousands of dollars had been promised by various cities and towns, provided it should be located within the limits of those promising. Dr. Barbee was the first speaker, and gave a philosophical argument for Christian education. The Doctor did not speak loud enough at first, and about one-half the large audience lost nearly one-half of his speech. The latter part of it was heard with profound attention. Bishop Galloway followed with an able and eloquent address, showing the superiority of the work done in Christian colleges over that done in secular and State schools, bringing forward many examples to prove the truth of his proposition. Then he showed the necessity of Mississippi Methodism having a college of its own on its own soil to educate its own sons. His speech was a superb exhibition of high oratorical power and magnetic influence over his audience, and demonstrated the fact that Mississippi is still producing orators of the highest grade. The collection for the new college reached the magnificent sum of $2,300.

Ayer's Hair Vigor

IS the "ideal" Hair-dressing. It restores the color to gray hair; promotes a fresh and vigorous growth; prevents the formation of dandruff; makes the hair soft and silken; and imparts a delicate but lasting perfume.

"Several months ago my hair commenced falling out, and in a few weeks my head was almost bald. I tried many remedies, but they did no good. I finally bought a bottle of Ayer's Hair Vigor, and, after using only a part of the contents, my head was covered with a heavy growth of hair. I recommend your preparation as the best in the world."—T. Munday, Sharon Grove, Ky.

"I have used Ayer's Hair Vigor for a number of years, and it has always given me satisfaction. It is an excellent dressing, prevents the hair from turning gray, insures its vigorous growth, and keeps the scalp white and clean."—Mary A. Jackson, Salem, Mass.

"I have used Ayer's Hair Vigor for promoting the growth of the hair, and think it unequaled. For restoring the hair to its original color, and for a dressing, it cannot be surpassed."—Mrs. Geo. La Fever, Eaton Rapids, Mich.

"Ayer's Hair Vigor is a most excellent preparation for the hair. I speak of it from my own experience. Its use promotes the growth of new hair and makes it glossy and soft. The Vigor is also a cure for dandruff."—J. W. Bowen, Editor "Enquirer," McArthur, Ohio.

"I have used Ayer's Hair Vigor for the past two years, and found it all it is represented to be. It restores the natural color to gray hair, causes the hair to grow freely, and keeps it soft and pliant."—Mrs. M. V. Day, Cohoes, N. Y.

"My father, at about the age of fifty, lost all the hair from the top of his head. After one month's trial of Ayer's Hair Vigor the hair began coming, and, in three months, he had a fine growth of hair of the natural color."—P. J. Cullen, Saratoga Springs, N. Y.

MASON & HAMLIN

The Cabinet Organ was introduced in its present form by Mason & Hamlin in 1861. Other makers followed in the manufacture of these instruments, but the Mason & Hamlin Organs have always maintained their supremacy as the best in the world.

Mason & Hamlin offer, as demonstration of the unequalled excellence of their organs, the fact that at all of the great World's Exhibitions, since and including that of Paris, 1867, in competition with best makers, of all countries, they have invariably taken the highest honors. Illustrated $22 to $900 catalogues free.

ORGANS

Mason & Hamlin do not hesitate to make the extraordinary claim for their Pianos, that they are superior to all others. They recognize the high excellence achieved by other leading makers in the art of piano building, but still claim superiority. This they attribute solely to the remarkable improvement introduced by them in the year 1882, and now known as the "Mason & Hamlin Piano Strings," by the use of which is secured the greatest possible purity and refinement of tone, together with greatly increased capacity GRAND & UPRIGHT, for standing in tune and other important advantages.

PIANOS

A circular, containing testimonials from three hundred purchasers, musicians, and tuners, sent, together with descriptive catalogue, to any applicant.

Pianos and Organs sold for cash or easy payments; also rented.

CHRISTMAS BELLS.

O merry bells of Christmas-tide,
Ring your glad tidings far and wide,
Proclaim to all the Savior's birth,
"Good-will to men and peace on earth."

Blest above all that Orient morn
When Christ, the holy babe, was born,
And o'er him knelt the Virgin fair,
While shepherds bowed with rev'rent air.

. . . . . .

Let earth and heaven with praises ring,
Each heart its pure devotion bring,
Yielding allegiance to the King
Of kings; our richest offering.

Ye merry bells, raise joyfully
Peans of love, and harmony,
While Christmas cheer and happiness
To-day each fireside shall bless.

MR. EDITOR: I wrote to your paper some months ago from Opelousas, where we were then living, but never saw it in print, and guess it went to the waste-basket—the little cousin's horror; so I will write again and hope to be more successful. I am a poor scribe, but will try and write this letter plain enough for you to read it. I am not going to school now, but hope to be able to return to Mrs. Hayes', where I have always gone to school. I love her very much, and feel sad when I think of being so far away. I do hope I can go back to Opelousas after Christmas. We have no Methodist church here, so, of course, we do not like living here on that account. Mother has only two children. My brother, who is agent on the T. and P. R. R., at this place, wanted us to come and be with him. That is why we are here, but hope he will soon be sent to a place where we can go to our own church. Mamma says this is a fine field for a missionary. We expect to attend the Conference at Baton Rouge, where we will meet many of our dear friends. I guess my letter is long enough, and I had better close. We love for Thursday to come, for then we get the dear ADVOCATE. Love to all the little cousins. Your little friend,

DUNBAR H. SIMPSON.

BAYOU GOULA, Louisiana.

MR. EDITOR: As I have never seen but a few letters from this place, I thought I would write one. Papa takes your dear ADVOCATE, and I love to read the little letters which you are so kind to print. Papa is our pastor this year and will be next year, too. My uncle, Sam P. Hand, is our superintendent. Mamma teaches my class; my sister is the organist. Papa, mamma, three of my sisters, my little brother and myself took a trip up to see mamma's brother. I had a nice time with my little cousin. For fear of this (my first letter) falling into the waste basket, I will close by answering Ida T. Davis' question. "Razor" is found in Judges xiii, 5. I will ask the little cousins a question: Which is the shortest verse in the Bible? I'll guess that great big little girl's age; she is nine or ten years of age I guess. Your little friend, CARRIE.

P. S.—I won't tell the little cousins my other name. It commences with P.

MR. EDITOR: As I have nothing to do, I will write a little letter to your valuable paper. I am a little girl ten years of age, and go to school to Miss McCalmont. My studies are as follows: fifth reader, third geography, second arithmetic, Patterson's Speller and scholar's companion. I go to Sunday-school every Sunday. My teacher is Mrs. Porter. She is just as good and kind as she can be. Well, I will close by asking a question: Which is the shortest chapter in the Bible? I hope my letter will not reach that dreadful waste-basket. Your true friend, WILLIE SCHWING.

JACKSON, Louisiana.

MR. EDITOR: I am a little boy nine years old. I go to school to Miss Lou O'Rourke. I read in the fourth reader and study spelling, writing, geography and arithmetic. I have four little brothers and one baby sister; her name is Lottie. I go to Sunday-school every Sunday. There are eight scholars. Well, I will close, hoping to see my letter in print. Your new friend,

FREDERICK L. WALTHER.

MR. EDITOR: I am a little girl twelve years old. As I have never written a letter to the ADVOCATE, I thought I would write a few lines. I have no pets; only a sweet little sister, thirteen months old. I will close by asking a question. Where in the Bible is the word "crystal" found. I remain your little friend,

OLIVE CALHOUN.

MT. OLIVE, Mississippi.

MR. EDITOR: Quite a while has passed since I last wrote a letter to the dear old ADVOCATE; but, with your permission, I will write another, hoping it may be published. How very good of you to give us little people a column or two in your paper, and then we so much enjoy writing and reading the letters. The year is fast drawing to a close, and it carries from us our much-loved pastor, Rev. A. T. Galloway. We regret that he has been transferred to the Little Rock Conference; but that people will be blessed with whom he is thrown. None know him but to love him; none name him but to praise. We have learned to love him almost as well as we did dear Bro. Foust. I will ask my little cousins a question: What were the names of Moses' parents. MARY.

MR. EDITOR: As I have never written to your good paper, I wish to do so now. I am thirteen years of age. Bro. H. M. Ellis is our pastor. He has preached his last sermon here for this year. I belong to the Methodist Episcopal Church, and go to Sunday-school every Sunday. Rev. W. T. Woodward, a young preacher from Wesson, is my teacher. I like him very much. I have two brothers and one sister that belong to the Sunday-school, too. I go to school and take music lessons under my aunt, Mrs. E. W. Featherstun. I will close by asking where in the Bible is the word "pulpit" found.

Your little friend,

JOSIE FEATHERSTUN.

HOLMESVILLE, Mississippi.

MR. EDITOR: I am a little girl eight years old, and thought I would write to the ADVOCATE. Mamma takes your paper and I love to read the children's letters. I watch for the mail every week to get the ADVOCATE. I live in the country about three miles from our church. It is too far for me to attend Sunday-school. I have two little brothers, and when they get large enough I hope to go regular to Sunday-school. Our pastor is Bro. Brown; we like him very much. As this is my first letter, I hope you will print it in your paper. I want to surprise papa. For fear of the waste-basket, I will close. Your little friend,

FANNIE R. ROGERS.

EBENEZER, Mississippi.

THE READING OF CHILDREN. Young people ought to be taught to read with emphasis, and to talk with something like freedom and grace. Both these accomplishments are best acquired from parents and older friends—that is, if the said parents are really on true parental terms with their children, which is not always the case. There are parents who neither converse with their children nor allow them to talk in their presence. They leave their children to the school-room teachers, or to teach one another, and so acquire a community of family failings; or they think they have done their best when they set a child down to pore for days together over some foolish tale. Bad tricks of reading and talking are thus early learnt, and scarcely ever got rid of.—Pacific Methodist.

If you have catarrh, you are in danger, as the disease is liable to become chronic and affect your general health, or develop into consumption. Hood's Sarsaparilla cures catarrh by purifying and enriching the blood, and building up the system. Give it a trial.

A whole heaven is contained in a drop of dew; a whole soul within a tear.—Joseph Roux.

Household.

Ingenuity.

The ingenious cook hangs from the band of her apron the holder with which she must needs catch up some article from the stove every other minute, while her sister, making frantic plunges in every direction for something with which to grasp the hot handles, ends by burning her fingers and anathematizing all the pots and pans. The ingenious seamstress sings as she sews, with uninterrupted speed and undisturbed temper. From little pockets in her capacious apron she draws the black or white thread, the silk or the darning cotton, as occasion requires. Scissors, securely attached by short rubber bands, never become entangled, and run no risk of getting out of the way. At a sudden call all the sewing materials are let slip into the large pocket which forms the apron, and the apron itself, if necessary, is unbuttoned and laid aside. In the same room sits her sister, whose spools are continually rolling out of sight under tables and bureaus, whose scissors disappear as if attracted by invisible magnets, and whose thimble can never be discovered anywhere on the surface of the earth if once removed from the finger. They go shopping together, and while one carries her troublesome parasol under her arm to knock off the hats and put out the eyes of the unfortunate behind her, or, laying it down on each counter, loses it in piles of goods, to her own annoyance and the exasperation of the store-keeper, the ingenious sister, fastening around the handle a loop of inch-wide ribbon, slips it over her wrist, and knows no loss or annoyance for herself, and causes no disaster to her fellow-beings. They sketch together on the sea-shore, but while the wind flops and tears the papers of one, the other, laying hers upon a slip of cardboard, slips an elastic band over one end, and works in comfort and security.

The ingenious woman knows how to use a glue-pot, a dye-pot, a paint-brush, a saw, a hammer. Lacking expensive or even sufficient furniture, she supplies her rooms with soap boxes and reconstructed flour barrels, covered with pretty, wholesome cretonne; makes convenient book shelves and corner cupboards of other boards and boxes; picture frames of strips of paste-board covered with plush; wall pockets of canvas, embroidered and ornamented with bows of ribbon; saves broom handles, and sawing off three of them to the required length, fits them into a little square or round top, thereby making a convenient table, to be adorned as fancy dictates; puts the broken lamp into a ginger jar, decorated beyond recognition, and appearing as a handsome ornament as luminary, making a shade for it from an old silk handkerchief and discarded laces; makes knotted fringe for tables or curtains from old shawls and blankets which have outlived their usefulness; and when not able to obtain a new carpet, putties the cracks and stains the unsightly floor, more than half-covering it with mats made from the best pieces of the old carpet and its border.

Ingenuity is the greatest economy of time, money, strength and temper. Blessed be the ingenious people, their heirs and assigns forever, making of any and all material conditions and elements, environments with which they entirely harmonize, who are always, in some measure, independent of the limitations of circumstances, whether of place or pocket. Blessed be ingenuity! —Phrenological Journal.

What you impress upon a child's heart by word or example, good or bad, is like writing on glass with a diamond—it is ineffaceable.

$2,500 Reward for a Lost Cat.

The equivalent in English money of $2,500 was once offered by an old lady in London for the return of a favorite cat which had strayed or been stolen. People called her a "crank," and perhaps she was. It is unfortunate that one of the gentler sex should ever gain this title, yet many do. It is, however, frequently not their fault. Often functional derangements will apparently change a woman's entire nature. Don't blame such sufferers if they are "cranky," but tell them to use Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription, which is an infallible remedy for "female weaknesses." It will soon restore them to their normal condition. It is warranted to give satisfaction in every case, or money paid for it will be returned.

Wolff & Randolph, Phila.—Gentlemen:—I used Acme Blacking about a year ago but became dissatisfied and quit. Two months ago I met a friend whose shoes were strikingly handsome, and asked him "What kind of blacking are you using?" "Wolff's Acme Blacking," he replied. Had you ever any trouble with it on account of its coating on the shoes?' "Not a particle! When I bought the first bottle three years ago I carefully read directions and followed them." Directions? I never thought of that." I bought a bottle right then and there, took the wrapper off the neck of bottle, followed those directions and admit, "What a Fool I was." PORTER—Mrs. CATHERINE J. PORTER, a beloved member of the Methodist Church, died, at her home in Crystal Springs, Miss., October 28, 1889. Her maiden name was Banfield. She was born May 26, 1827, near Porter's Chapel, for many years a Methodist centre in Warren county, Miss. She was married to James P. Porter, July 6, 1847, with whom she lived happily for thirty years, and was the mother of nine children.

She united herself with the Methodist Church in early life, at Porter's Chapel, near her old home, and through all the shifting scenes and vicissitudes of a changing and eventful career she remained steadfast in her faith, and true to her principles and choice of her first love. In earlier life, as she stepped with the merry spring of young maidenhood upon the stage of action, life was spread out before her as a pleasing, fairy landscape, begirt with the bow of hope and bedecked with the flowers of promise. The sun, as only he does in youth-time, crowned every charming prospect with a halo of gladness. Even then she hid her heart with God and gave the homage of her young life to his service. But ere while the picture changed; dark shadows fell upon the beautiful landscape, and adverse winds, bleak and chill, blew upon it, and in her widowhood she felt the chastening rod. Still in the hour of deepest gloom her sublime faith never faltered as she turned with humble trust to him who said, "I will be a lamp to your feet and a light to your path." Mrs. Porter was a good worker for the church she loved so well, and did all she could to promote its usefulness and advance the kingdom. She was a noble Christian woman, a patient, loving wife, a tender, indulgent mother, a charming neighbor, and a faithful friend. What better "footprints on the sands of time" could she have left, which, "a forlorn and weary brother," "seeing, might take hope again." We have tenderly laid your familiar form in the grave to rest; but in our hearts, dear friend, we have embalmed your many virtues forever. PHIL.

HERRIN—WALTER M. HERRIN, son of Lott and Elizabeth Herrin, died November 14, 1889, aged twelve years eight months and seven days. Walter is with us no more; but, with a full consciousness of his condition, he has gone to be with him who said, "Suffer little children to come unto me."

On the evening of the fourteenth, Walter attempted to jump upon the 6:30 freight train while in motion, lost his footing, fell under the car. The wheels, passing over both logs, mangled them so badly that there was no hope of life, with every attention that friends and physicians could give. With very little complaining and perfect presence of mind, he survived until 9:50—about four hours—when God graciously took him. He said to those first about him that while the wheels were passing over him he heard Jesus say, "Come unto me." In answer to his own request, I was soon by his bedside. Never did anyone, old or young, talk with greater confidence and assurance of God and heaven. "Yes," said he, when I spoke to him, "God is with me, and I am not afraid to die." V. V. BOONE.

ALFORD—This sketch chronicles the death of MALCOLM ALFORD, the son of W. J. Alford and Mary E. Alford. This sweet little boy died at his home, near Mount Hermon Church, in Louisiana, October 4, 1889. He was born January 4, 1885.

Malcolm has left his parents that loved him so well here on earth, and has gone to live with his grandparents and with his blessed Savior in heaven. May his father and mother be comforted with this one thought, that their bright, manly boy, though a precious jewel in their sight, is with God and his angels, and they can meet him up there in the home of the blessed. May the God of all blessings comfort the parents of the little boy! is my prayer.

J. H. EVANS, P. C.

WINN—Again we are called upon to record the death of an esteemed friend—Miss MATTIE I. WINN, daughter of Bro. G. T. Winn, of Homer, La., who was born June 23, 1871, and died October 3, 1889. She joined the Methodist Church at eight years of age. "I believe she was a true Christian from that time till her death," writes one who has known her all her life.

Again the shadow of death has fallen upon that Christian household. Thrice in about two years has the dark-winged messenger come and claimed a victim there. Before that family had ceased to mourn the absence of a wife and mother—among whose last words were, "Bro. White, I will be watching for you at the gate"—a second call was made, and a young mother, the eldest daughter, was summoned to yield up her earthly hopes and treasures, and pass into the spirit realm; and now our sweet and lovely friend Mattie has answered the call of death. Gone in the early morn of life ere sorrow came, or time's touch could blight. As we think of her in her beauty of person, in vain we attempt a portrayal of her beautiful character, where all the Christian graces blended, forming a pure and lovely life.

In our human grief we ask why she could not have been left to bless her father and only sister and aged grandmother; left as an example to the church, of which she was a useful member from her childhood; left to the missionary society, of which she was the accomplished secretary; left to the Sunday-school, of which she was a faithful and regular attendant; left to society, where her bright mind and sunny heart made her such an ornament.

O insatiate monster! why select the choicest and most lovely for thy victims? Why these darkened households, these grief-stricken hearts, these sundered ties! Ah! life is a failure, a curse, if there is not a beyond where kindred spirits meet in happy and conscious enjoyment. Life is not worth coming here for, if this little sphere closes it all.

LILLA MAI preceded Mattie just ten days to the spirit world. They were hand in hand in every good work here. "They were lovely and pleasant in their lives, and in death they were not divided."

The bereaved have the unspeakable consolations of the "glorious gospel of blessed God" for their comfort and support. THOMAS B. WHITE.

MARSH—ALMA ORPHA, fifth daughter of Bro. and Sister O. M. Marsh, died at home, in peace and readiness for the Master, on Wednesday, November 13, aged fifteen years.

To those who knew this excellent household, and the subject of this notice, need no more than the above lines to command all Christian sympathy for the one and tenderest thoughts for the other. This is one real case where silence seems the highest tribute—the fittest praise. This young life, so quickly ending, speaks for itself. Words of eulogy are needless. They sound hollow and unmeaning. All that could be said would scarcely reach a statement. With truth it can be said that Alma was bright, beautiful, pure and good. To those who knew her best, she was more than these in an inexpressible way. She held in her the hope and promise of a gracious womanhood. Largely developed physically, she was more in mind and soul. Though so young, in character she was almost a mature woman. Thoughtful and unselfish beyond her years, she was ready to sacrifice and do for others. She was cheerful, songful and happy. Only a little more than one year ago Mollie was called. The shadow—the sad vacancy—was still on the home. It has broadened and deepened. Had we been called on then to say who shall be the first of this large household of bright children to cross the river, Mollie would not have been selected. Among all good she seemed the best—the most needful. In this second selection Alma would not have been named. She was growing into the image and place of Mollie. But our choice and our will is not God's. These pure, sweet sisters are now together in heaven—"taken from the evil to come." Bro. and Sister Marsh were greatly blessed in the short lives of these dear children; so they were greatly blessed in their death. In their tears and unutterable sorrow they have abundant reason for comfort and peace. They lived well; they died well—they sleep in Christ.

FRIEND.

BYRD—JOSEPH W. BYRD was born in Rankin county, Miss., February 4, 1889; was married to Miss Fannie E. Ainesworth, December 23, 1886; died October 30, 1889. He fought the great battle of life in a little over thirty years. The earthly house has been dissolved, and we hope he now has "a house not made with hands, eternal and in the heavens." His suffering was intense, but brief. He leaves a wife and child, three sisters, one brother and an aged father and mother to mourn for him; but, thank God, we mourn as those who have a hope. Brother Byrd was a good, obedient son; a kind brother and affectionate husband. He joined the church at Harrisville, in Simpson county, Miss., in 1886; lived a consistent member of the same, supporting her institutions until he was called to his reward. May the great Head of the church comfort and bless the bereaved ones!

The sweeping tempest and the beating surge teach the mariner to prize the haven where undisturbed repose awaits his arrival. Already four bills have been introduced in the Senate, looking toward improving our navy, which, it is thought, will meet the approval of both parties. These bills provide, 1. For the construction of eight battle ships, besides ten smaller vessels for coast defense and aggressive warfare against invaders. 2. For the gradual increase of the naval force. 3. For a new rating of vessels of war, and 4. For a reserve of auxiliary cruisers from the steam vessels of the merchant marine.

Representative Thompson, of Iowa, introduced, by request, a bill authorizing the payment out of the colonization fund to every adult colored person who may desire to emigrate to Africa $100 for passage and rations for sixty days and one-half of the amount to minors, the payment in all not to exceed $1,000,000 per annum.

Mr. Ibar introduced a bill in the U. S. Senate, on December 21, to establish a uniform system of bankruptcy throughout the United States.

Speaker Reed, on December 21, announced the committees of the House of Representatives. Southern men and matters have been fairly treated in the composition of the committees. The river and harbor committee is declared to be friendly to the Mississippi.

A riot occurred at Pott's Camp, Miss., on December 22, between the whites and blacks of that place, in which participants on both sides were hurt. About twenty-five shots were exchanged. One negro was mortally wounded.

Henry W. Grady, editor of the Atlanta Constitution, died on December 23. "He was the leader of the new South, and died in the great work of impressing its marvelous growth and national aspirations upon the ears of the North."

United States marshals have been called to Oklahoma to quell the rowdyism now prevalent there, and which threatens to develop into a reign of terror. The two political parties wage continual strife, and much trouble is feared at the coming election.

A cave occurred at Lane Mine, Angels' Camp, Cal., on December 22, burying sixteen men. Nearly all the victims had families.

A majority of the coal-miners in the Monongahela Valley have resumed operations at a half a cent per bushel advance in the rate demand by the miners. A few mines are still idle, but will resume operations in 10 days. The resumption will give employment to nearly 5,000 men who have been on a strike for two months.

FOREIGN.

The Italian Chamber of Deputies, by a vote of 196 to 96, passed the bill depriving the clergy of the direction of all charities. The Vatican organs vigorously oppose and condemn this measure.

It is said there are trouhious times ahead for the new Brazilian republic. The downfall of the army and the probable confiscation of church property have caused a virtual combination of European monarchies inimical to the new republic, who may follow up protest by force.

Mr. William O'Brien was released from the Galway jail on December 20, where he has been serving a sentence of two months' imprisonment for holding a nationalist meeting which had been proclaimed. Immediately upon his release he addressed a large meeting of his sympathizers and received an enthusiastic reception.

T. L. MELLEN, P. E.

Man is often deceived in the age of a woman by her gray hair. Ladies, you can appear young and prevent this grayness by using Hall's Hair Renewer.

Temperance Notes.

A working girls' club, which meets every two weeks, is successfully conducted by the W. C. T. U. of Akron, Ohio; also a Noon Rest for girls employed near headquarters. The Noon Rest is supplied with free lunch tables, dishes and chairs and the girls are furnished coffee, tea or lemonade for three cents each.

A pair of "temperance gloves" for children, often described by Miss Anna Gordon to the little folks of the Loyal Legion, has for its ten fingers, beginning with the little finger left hand, "never swear," "never steal," "never cheat," "never lie," "never disobey"; and the right hand, "never chew," "never smoke," "never drink," "love God," "love everybody."

Miss Phinney, of the Rangoon W. C. T. U., has begun the publication, in the Burmese language, of temperance leaflets for the use of native Bands of Hope. The leaflets are issued monthly, each number containing a catechism on the effects of alcohol, tobacco and opium on the human system, and a temperance song translated and set to some familiar tune. About 500 copies are now used each month in sixteen different schools.

The evangelistic course of study in connection with the National W. C. T. U. is already a successful enterprise. The class of '92 now numbers more than sixty, and twenty-five ladies enrolled their names with the class of '93 at the national convention, making a total of forty in this new class. Arrangements have been made for a special W. C. T. U. Bible course for those who can not pursue the full evangelistic course.

Father Nugent, of Liverpool, England, a Catholic advocate of total abstinence, gives a good reason for the faith that is in him. He says: "My work for twenty years has been in the largest prison in England, and of the total number which came under my observation and care during that time—from 230,000 to 250,000 men and women—I here boldly declare that eight, if not nine, out of every ten of them came there to pay the penalty brought on by the vice of intemperance."

Literary Note.

It would be a difficult matter to decide which of Harper's periodicals to take for the coming year, if there were not an admirable and really inexpensive solution of the problem in sending a combined subscription for all four. Each is independent and complete in itself, and, if taken alone, seems to satisfy all one's desires for what a periodical can bring; and yet no one of the four, when they are taken together, seems to be superfluous. HARPER'S MAGAZINE is international in scope, but American in enterprise; HARPER'S WEEKLY has become indispensable as the citizen's illustrated paper; HARPER'S BAZAR remains the leading fashion and home journal; and HARPER'S YOUNG PEOPLE has never been surpassed as an illustrated weekly for boys and girls.

The Clergy of America take kindly to Life Insurance, and have been its firmest champions. They fight for it and thoroughly believe in it. There are many splendid financiers in the Church; that they are intelligent and thoughtful for their future goes without saying. All denominations seek the protection of Life Insurance, and are careful to select the company offering the greatest security and the most advantageous terms to policyholders.

The Episcopal Diocese, of New York, has an Insurance Fund for all of its members, and the Mutual Life, which is the largest and strongest company in the world, with over $122,000,000 assets, has been officially selected by that body to issue all the insurance to these worthy people.

A Southern Department of this Company has been opened in New Orleans under the management of Mr. T. H. Bowles, with offices in Louisiana National Bank Building.
